On the same road, a short distance to the west, the French have excavated one of the most magnificent temples yet discovered. It is about 75 feet long and 36 wide, and consists of a nave, two side aisles, a chancel, and an altar piece. The roof and portions of the walls are gone; of its 14 columns, only the base of 11 of them remain, on which is sculptured the Maltese cross. But its extraordinary beauty consists in its wonderful Mosaic pavement, covering more than two thirds of the entire area. It is formed of small square blocks of white and black marble, arranged in the most curious manner. In the aisles are 30 inch diameter circles, containing figures of sheep, fish. fowls, fruits, tigers, elephants, buffaloes, dogs, horses, rabbits, deer, lions, antelopes and leopards, with ten mythological busts, representing the gods and goddesses of Greece and Rome. Before the altar is a lengthy inscription in Greek characters, but owing to the curious forms and the numerous contractions, it was impossible to decipher it without reference to learned works. From all we could learn from those having the work in charge, it was originally a heathen temple, but converted into a christian church by the Crusaders, and during the mediæval wars, was abandoned, and has since remained buried beneath the accumulated sands and rubbish of centuries.

At 2 P. M. we entered Saida, the modern representative of the "Great Zidon," beautifully located on a little promonitory projecting obliquely into the sea. Her history is the counterpart of that of her "daughter," Tyre, and the present condition of the mother and daughter are impressively similar. Great in commerce, ingenious in manufactures, magnificent in architecture, unbounded in wealth, she divided with Tyre the empire of the seas. But her splendid mole is a heap of ruins washed by the surging waves; her port is without a merchantman, and her artificers content themselves in the fabrications of a few silk textures of an inferior quality. But the little modern town of 5000 inhabitants is thoroughly Oriental in its character and appearance, and the shaded streets and pretty gardens give it an air of repose. Its chief attraction is the beautiful environs adorned with lovely gardens and fruitful orchards, extending eastward to the foot of Lebanon. Here are oranges, lemons, figs, almonds, plums, apricots, peaches, pomegranates, pears and bananas, growing in the greatest luxuriance, and forming a forest of finely tinted foliage. On a commanding hill to the south of the town is the shattered tower of Louis IX.; on a solitary rock in the sea stands a venerable old castle, connected with the main land by a bridge of nine arches, forming a most interesting and picturesque groupe. To the antiquarian, the tombs of the Sidonian kings, on the plain about a mile east of the village, form the chief object of interest Here again the French, those national excavators, have employed their leisure hours in searching the sepulchres of the old Sidonians. Descending to the depth of 15 feet, we entered a noble sepulchral chamber, divided by a long, broad passageway, with another aisle running at right angles with the former. On either side of the main aisle are six niches, containing magnificent marble sarcophagi, on which are sculptured lion's heads, horns of plenty and garlands of flowers. On one which I took to be the sarcaphagus of a queen, is a female bust in relief, surrounded with a wreath of roses. Though nearly obliterated, yet I could trace the elegant floral paintings on the roof and sides of the vault. Passing into another chamber, 20 feet deep, we found three entire sarcophagi, of equal grandeur with the others, and to our surprise the largest of the three is filled with clear water, at the bottom of which we could see human bones, and what seemed to be a firm sediment, perhaps the dust of the departed. Neither symbol nor inscription has yet been discovered revealing the history of the dead, and we were left to the solitary reflection that we had gazed upon the disorganized forms of those who had lived thirty centuries ago.

Recollections of the Late War.

BY A MUSICIAN

"Down the River, ho!"—Introduction to a Soldier's Life—Sleeping under difficulties—A narrow escape—Poor cooking accommodations—"Shove off"—A mutual scare—"Sleeping on our arms"—A man overboard—The only mourner—How we amused ourselves.

It was on the first day of November, 1862, that the regiment of volunteers to which I belonged bid farewell to the lovely State of Iowa, and started down the river to take its stand in Dixie.

There were shedding of tears and hurried good-byes. And there came sad, sad thoughts of the future; for well we knew that many, very many of us would never see home again. There were prayers that ascended on high then from lips that seldom moved in prayer, for who, under such circumstances, could but feel that his life was in the hands of God.

We landed first at a little place called Montrose about midnight, where we remained till morning to have daylight in which to cross the rapids, which were just below. Here, to drown their sorrows, some of the boys got gloriously, or perhaps ingloriously drunk, and kept up such a noise no one could sleep. Finding sleeping to be out of the question, I began to read a newspaper, which had been laid away for such an emergency, intending, if possible, to spend a pleasant night despite the unfavorable circumstances. But scarcely had I commenced when my eyes became very heavy. And this was my first great grief in soldiering. I was too sleepy to read, and the boys were too drunk to be quiet, and for such an emergency there was no remedy.

The next night we fared better as to sleep, but it would have been a ludicrous sight for an unsympathizing observer to have seen us lying round upon the boiler deck, more like swine than respectable human beings. For myself, I was determined to keep warm, if possible, so taking my blanket, I lay down near the engine and pump. But this was not the place my fancy pictured, for awaking in the night, I found my feet were wet, and my blanket ditto.—Of course I had to change base, but how to do so and keep off of peoples' toes, and where to find another vacant place were questions which might have puzzled the profoundest student of analytical geometry or calculus. At length after stumbling over several shins and receiving divers "blessings" for my awkwardness, I found a vacant place where water from the pump would not reach me. Here I lay down again to sleep—"to sleep, perchance to dream"—but not till I had ample time to reflect that I had had an introduction to a soldier's life, and a rather rough one, at that.

The following night, spent at the wharf at St. Louis, was very severe on us, for on the boat there was no fire.—Not a wink did I sleep during the whole tedious night, but contented myself as best I could, in walking the boiler deck by the light of the moon. The atmosphere was very cold during that long, long night, and I could not help contrasing our present accommodations with the comfortable homes we had left, and the contrast did not tend to drive dull care away. Two listless days and another sleepless night, and we were off from the great city bound for Helena, Arkansas. We had proceeded but a short distance when we struck on a sand-bar and—there we were. Darkness was closing around us, and being quite drowsy, I went upon the boiler deck, hoping to find a place to sleep. But some of the boys were tipsy and quite noisy. Thinking I might find a place to warm, I passed them and made my way to the engine. Here I found a good locality as to warmth upon one of the large beams of the engine, and here I seated myself, intending to warm, but nothing more. While sitting there congratulating myself on my good fortune, I fell asleep. On waking I was horrified to see the engine works in motion. A movement of a few inches in one direction would have sent me into eternity. There was no more sleeping for me that night, and yet for the want of it I was miserable. No one without experience can know how terrible it is to be deprived of sleep for days and nights together.

We were now beginning to suffer also for something to eat. We drew our rations of raw meat, etc., but had no way of cooking—not even of making coffee. There was but one stove, and that was almost worse than none among a thousand men.

Some eight miles below New Madrid we came up with another boat load of soldiers who had left St. Louis a day in advance of us. Their boat was on a bar, and as we could not help them, we gave them three cheers and "passed by on the other side." When we had passed them a mile or so, we headed round and came up near the shore. It seemed from the manœuvering that there was a deep but narrow body of water bounded on one side by the shore and on the other by a huge sand-bar running parallel with the shore. Up this chute we went for the avowed purpose of "wooding up," but if the captain had been trying to place his boat and us at the mercy of guerillas he could hardly have chosen a better locality. The boat landed and the hands were taking in wood, when the hurried order "Shove off! they're coming!" seemed to announce approaching danger. Looking up stream we saw in the distance horsemen rapidly approaching. Quickly turning to the captain, we said reproachfully, "How are you going to 'shove off,' with a bar a mile long on one side, and the shore on the other?" For a moment the captain glanced back, and we saw that, secesh as he was, he did not exactly relish the idea of his boat falling into the hands of guerillas.

We had succeeded in "shoving off," however, in one sense, and the men had formed in line-of-battle on the hurricane deck, when the cavalry appeared on the bank opposite us. They were indeed a motley-looking band. Such a mixture of blue and butternut confirmed our opinion of their desperate and dangerous character. Dismounting, they also formed in line of battle. Everything being ready for active work, their commander inquired who we were. On our giving the information, strange to say, they united in three rousing cheers for the Iowa boys. They proved to be a squad of Illinois cavalry, and were frightened in their turn when they found we had been just at the point of firing on them. It appeared on further conversation that though stationed six or seven miles above, they had heard our boys firing their guns and pistols when cleaning them, and supposed we had been attacked by guerillas.

We then turned down the river, but had gone but a few miles when we struck upon another bar and remained all night. In the darkness we were rowed to the shore by squads, marched into a corn field, formed in line of battle and ordered to "sleep on our arms." We then sallied forth after corn-stalks to sleep on, and in a few minutes they were gathered, corn and all. Then came the bustle of making up beds.—For myself, I had gathered a quantity of stalks and was antici ating some fine sleeping if the guerillas did not come. But it was too cold to sleep warm, and knowing how hurtful it is to sleep cold, I had formed a resolution never to do so. But continuing to change my position, I at last got on my hands and knees, doubled myself up, began to get warm, and fell asleep observing the injunction to "sleep on my arms" with a slight variation by sleeping on my knees as well.

After waking, and while warming by a fire, I heard a chicken squall in the direction of a neighboring house. If there is anything that is calculated to start a soldier it is the sound of a chicken in distress. Going in the direction my sympathies led, I stopped as the noise ceased, and stood opposite the boat, gazing vacantly at her. While standing, I saw something fall into the river and heard a splash. Thinking it was a keg or something else, I thought no more about it, and was just turning away when an almost unearthly sound, as of a strangling person attempting to cry for help fell on my ears. The truth flashed upon my mind: a man had fallen overboard, had sunk, then risen, then sunk, perhaps to rise no more. Some said it was only a deck hand; I know not, but the sound rang in my ears for days. He had a sister on board, and her eyes were red with weeping till she got off at Memphis, and I saw her no more. She was the only mourner. For the first time I realized the utter insignificance of one human being among so many; and many times afterwards the reflection that I might die out of "God's country," and never be missed among the thousands around me almost made me sick at heart.

As we thus passed down the Mississippi to our destination we resorted to many expedients to pass away the time. Some of us who disliked to sleep in the dirt and cold reversed the order of things somewhat, and slept during the day in the warm sunshine on the hurricane deck. Sometimes we amused ourselves in "cracking jokes," telling stories, and, to confess the truth, in sometimes complaining of our hard lot. We found many opportunities for merriment and for venting our discontent as well. With all our efforts to pass the time agreeably, it was an uncomfortable trip from St. Louis to Helena, and right glad were we to land at the latter place on the 14th of November—just two weeks from the time of leaving our camp in Iowa.

The next morning one of my old college classmates, belonging to a cavalry regiment stationed at Helena, came on board and insisted on my going "home" with him to dinner. Of course I went, and never shall I forget how good that dinner seemed. Verily, I experienced more pleasure from that one meal than in ninety and nine at home. I returned to my regiment thinking that after all a soldier's life was not so hard, thus affording a walking example that "circumstances alter cases."

Each member of the Boards of Registers, before commencing his duties, will file with the chairman of his board, for transmittal to the Assistant Inspector General at these headquarters, the following oath: "I, A. B. do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I have never voluntarily borne arms against the United States since I have been a citizen thereof; that I have voluntarily given no aid, countenance, counsel or encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility thereto; that I have neither sought nor accepted nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever under any authority or pretended authority in hostility to the United States; that I have not yielded a voluntary support to any pretended government, authority, power or constitution within the United States, hostile or inimical thereto. And I do futher swear (or affirm) that, to the best of my knowledge and ability, I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter, so help me God."

Registers will be governed in the execution of their duties by the provisions of the first section of the "susplementary Act"—faithfully administering the oath therein prescribed to each person registered.

Boards of Registers will first organize and commence their duties at the courthouses of their respective parishes; they will afterwards move to such other points, having reference to convenience and facility of registration, as will ensure the complete registration of their parishes in the shortest practicable time. The necessary expenses incurred for transportation to their respective parishes, and in travelling within them, in accordance with this order, will be paid at these headquarters to each Register on his affidavit approved by the supervising officer of his Board and by the Major General Commanding the Military District. Each Board will be entitled to one clerk. Office hours for registration will be from 8 o'clock till 12 M., and from 4 till 7 P M.

When elections are ordered the Board of Registers for each district will designate the number of polls, and the places where they shall be opened in the election precincts within its district, appoint the commissioners and other officers necessary for properly conducting the elections, and will superintend the same.

They will also receive from the com-

Father Jacobs on the Temporal Power of the Pope.

Two thousand people, at a dollar per capita, assembled last Monday evening in the Hall of St. Alphonsus, to hear Father Jacob's lecture on the Temporal Power of the Pope. The avails of the lecture were for the benefit of the Church of Our Lady of Bon Secours, and were substantial. The lecturer is neither polished nor eloquent, yet a man of learning and a devout Catholic. His subject had the advantage of present interest, but the address was a plea for a a dead lion. Pius IX. is the last of the temporal popes. Himself an amiable man, and in the beginning of his pontificate a sincere reformer, he belongs to that class of princes raised up to illustrate the downfall of power, rather than the perpetuity of their thrones. Never a blessing to the Church but always a curse, the loss of temporal sovereignty is a cause for joy rather than of regret.

The capital defect in the address by Father Jacobs, was his failure to prove the divine origin of the temporal power of the pope; instead of this, he devoted an hour to prove that the Roman Pontiff has for a thousand years been recognized as a political sovereign, and that he has held possession of earthly dominions—neither of which is a disputed point; but what we wanted, yet failed to get, was a clear argument that the pontiff is an earthly prince by Divine appointment.

In reciting the history of the papacy, Mr. Jacobs attempted to trace the same to the days of the Apostles, when the first Christians sold their possessions and appropriated the avails thereof for the benefit of their poorer brethren. The inspired text is: "And sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to ALL MEN AS EVERY MAN had need." The avails were not given to the apostles, but to all men, for immediately thereafter, Peter said to the lame man lying at the Beautiful Gate, "Silver and gold have I none," and yet poor Peter is claimed to have been the first of the popes. This sale of their property was optional with those early Christians, for Peter said to Ananias, "While it remained was it not thine own? and after it was sold, was it not in thine own power?" And the object of the sale was not to found a temporal sovereignty, but rather to meet the immediate wants of those strangers in Jerusalem, who had been detained in the city by their conversion to Christianity, and who, being persecuted for their faith, could not obtain assistance from their Jewish friends. And this interpretation is strengthened by the additional fact, that when there "arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in the DAILY MINISTRATIONS; then the twelve called the multitude of the disciples unto them and said, It is not reason that we should leave the word of God and serve tables." Refusing all share in temporal matters, the apostles suggested that seven laymen should be chosen for this purpose, "but we will give ourselves continually to prayer and to the ministry of the word." This incident in apostolical history is therefore against the temporal power of the popes rather than for it; indeed, there is not a shadow of a warrant in the Holy Scriptures in favor of the pontiffs' earthly sovereignty. Among the reasons which Father Jacobs assigned why the Roman Pontiff should retain his throne, were, that the pope had to support his cardinals, his missionaries and his monastic establishments; but St. Peter refused to leave the ministry of the word to superintend such temporalities; yet, St. Peter, they say, was the "first pope."

What the lecturer said of Childrick and Pepin is only true in part, and in the application of this historic fact, he was no less illogical than ridiculous. He confessed that old Childrick was imbecile, and that Pepin, taking advantage of his royal master's imbecility, usurped his government and having done this, applied to pope Zachary, who sanctioned the usurpation; and in consideration thereof and to secure the pontificial pardon of his sins, Pepin bestowed upon pope Stephen, the successor of Zachary, 22 Italian cities. Thus by Father Jacob's own confession, he makes Pepin a usurper and a robber, and the popes the willing accessories to the startling crimes of usurpation and robbery. This looks bad, indeed, for the Divine origin of the pontiff's temporal power! The Catholic Church needs a clearer headed advocate than Father Jacobs to vindicate a position so difficult to maintain.

Forty-five minutes of the lecture, which in all was one hour and forty minutes in length, were devoted to a eulogy of Pius IX., and to a denunciation of Victor Emanuel and Napoleon III. But the King of Italy and the Emperor of the French will be regarded in the future as greater benefactors to Italy, than all the popes combined. By their exertions, Italy is free, and a new era of truth and glory is open before her; while the Holy Father is a royal beggar, and his cardinals are compelled to a life of activity for an honest living. We felt a blush of shame on our cheek for the Catholic Church, when the lecturer said that he had taken the last $2 from a poor woman in Chicago, whose house was without furniture and whose children were hungry and in rags, for the support of the pope and his magnificent court. It illustrated a blind devotion on the part of the poor woman, and of heartlessness on the part of the priest. And our astonishment was no less great to hear the statement that the "Court of Rome is the only court in Europe which pays its debts." When we were in Rome six years since, the papal government owed 65,000,000 of scudi, with an annual deficit of 10,000,000 of scudi, which debt and deficit has annually increased since, and will never be paid. Such statements may please the ignorant, but in the estimation of the intelligent, they damage the cause they are designed to support.

The Mayor's Reception.

Mayor Heath's first reception at his residence, on Tuesday night last, was a brilliant affair. From eight o'clock until eleven, the large parlors were thronged with happy guests, who were received by his Honor and lady in a most courteous and happy manner, while Col. Fox and lady dispensed the hospitalities of the occasion with a lavishing hand. Among the guests were Major Gen. Sheridan, Brevet Major General Mower, Col. Crosby, Major Forsyth, Captain Armstrong, Dr. White, U. S. A. S., his Honor Judge Howell, Rev. Messrs Brakeman, McDonald, and Dr. Dailey, the venerable Dr. J. White, Generals Bussey and Sypher, and many others who had assembled to greet a loyal Mayor of New Orleans, and congratulate his loyal wife. The occasion was one of unaffected enjoyment in the interchange of thought and feeling. We are happy to learn that his Honor will receive his friends every fortnight, on Tuesday evenings. The influence of such gatherings cannot but be salutary at the present time, and will bring into play those refined social forces which are so powerful in the formation of good public sentiment.

Laying of the Corner-Stone.

The corner-stone of our new Church was laid with appropriate ceremonies, at 5 o'clock, on the afternoon of the 25th inst. The day was beautiful, and a fine congregation had assembled to witness the interesting occasion. At the appointed hour, the Rev. Dr. Newman, the pastor, commenced the religious exercises by reading the impressive ritual as contained in the Book of Discipline. The first hymn was read by Rev. W. M. Henry, and sung by the congregation. The prescribed prayer was offered by the pastor. The Scripture lessons were read by the Rev. A. C. McDonald. Addresses were then delivered by Rev. N. L. Brakeman, the P. E. of the N. O. District, and by the Rev. Dr. Newman, pastor of the Church.

At the conclusion of the addresses, Dr. Newman took his position by the stone and exhibited a square copper box, closely sealed, which contained the following articles: A Bible; Methodist Hymn Book and Book of Discipline; a copy of the Charter of the Society; a paper containing the names of the pastor, trustees, building committee, architect and builder; the following Church papers: N. O. Advocate; N. Y. Advocate; the Methodist; Western, Northwestern, and Central Christian Advocates; President Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation; a copy of the Military Reconstruction Bill; Annual report of the Missionary Society; Minutes of the Mississippi Conference; Photographs of our Bishops and of Rev. Messrs. Newman, Brakeman, Diossy, McDonald and Henry, and some frankincense from Bethlehem, and Olive leaves from the Garden of Gethsemane, brought from the Holy Land by the pastor.

Assisted by the builder, Mr. John Page, Dr. Newman then placed the box in the excavation in the stone, repeating the following words:

"In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, we lay this corner-stone for the foundation of a house to be built and consecrated to the service of Almighty God, according to the order and usages of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Amen!"

Rev. James English, of the Church South, and Rev. Scott Chinn, (Colored,) participated in the concluding exercises of this deeply interesting occasion.

Editorial Items.

Rev. Dr. Newman will preach in the Hall of the House of Representatives, to-morrow, at 11 o'clock.

Rev. W. M. Henry will preach at Eagle Hall, corner of Prytania and Felicity streets, on Sunday evening, the 28th inst., at half-past seven o'clock.

We republish the admirable address by Hon. Thomas J. Durant, that all may again be counselled by that eminent citizen:

Revival.—Rev. Evans Green, pastor of Greatman St. Church, reports a gracious revival in progress in his charge. For the past three weeks he has been holding a protracted meeting, during which time twenty-five persons have been happily converted, nine of whom are young men. He is now struggling to purchase a church from the Presbyterians in that neighborhood. We hope he may succeed, and bespeak in his behalf the aid of all our people.

We are reliably informed that the colored people of Mandeville and vicinity have been intimidated from registering, by the rebel whites telling them that the object of the registration is to make soldiers of the blacks. We hope the Commanding General will take notice of this shameful imposition on the ignorance of our colored citizens.

We are permitted to publish the following from Jonathan Wilson, the superintendent of Freedmen's schools in Columbus, Miss.:

COLUMBUS, Miss., April 16, 1867.

Dear Friend Brakeman—We are going through the heat of political excitement now. The Freedmen adopted a platform last night on the principles of the great Republican party in full, and adopting the name. Two of the lawyers of the city labored in the might of their strength to prevent it; but no, it went through one of the largest audiences of Freedmen that I have seen in Columbus, without a dissenting voice. They expect to have a pretty large accession to their number from the white citizens, shortly. They have acted with admirable wisdom for an inexperienced community. If the proper care is taken to instruct the Freedmen, there will be no difficulty in carrying the day in this part of Mississippi for the Republican party.

Our schools will close on the 19th, and we expect to embark for home on the 23d; the schools have been well sustained. The average has been about three hundred readers; donated two hundred and eighty Bibles. Some of our scholars will go out to teach in the country. Hardy Ryan, in his native simplicity of manner, and outspoken independent course of action in our political meetings, is making his mark. He told them in a public meeting at the Courthouse, after hearing much profession of being your best friends, that if you would give us a part of your land for homes to live on, we would think something of your friendship.

Registers and all officers connected with elections will be held to a rigid accountability and will be subject to trial by Military Commission for fraud, or unlawful or improper conduct in the performance of their duties.

The following named officers are hereby appointed to supervise the Boards of Registers of the parishes following their names, to listen to or adjust or refer to this office all just causes of complaint.

Brevet Major Kinzie Bates, Capt. 1st U. S. Infantry: Rapides, Avoyelles, St. Landry, St. Martin, Lafayette.

First Lieutenant B. F. Humphreys, Brevet Capt. 1st Artillery: Calcasieu, Vermillion, St. Mary's.

Brevet Lieut. Col. Sheldon Sturgeon, Captain 1st U. S. Infantry: Point Coupee, West Baton Rouge, Iberville, Assumption, Terre Bonne, Lafourche.

1st Lieut. Clifford Stickney, 20th U. S. Infantry: West Feliciana, East Feliciana, East Baton Rouge, Ascension, St. James, St. John Baptist.

Brevet Colonel A. D. Nelson, Major 1st U. S. Infantry: St. Charles, Jefferson, Plaquemine, St. Bernard.

2d Lieut. Horace Binney, 20th U. S. Infantry: St. Helena, Livingston, Washington, St. Tammany.

2d Lieut. F. E. Pierce, 1st U. S. Infantry: Caddo, De Soto, Sabine, Nachitoches, Winn.

2d Lieutenant B. Carney, 20th U. S. Infantry: Carroll, Madison, Tensas, Concordia.

Every male citizen of the United States twenty-one years old and upward, of whatever race, color or previous condition, who has been a resident in the State of Louisiana for one year and in his parish for three months previous to the date at which he presents himself for registration, and who has not been disfranchised by act of Congress or for felony at common law, shall, after having taken and subscribed the oath prescribed in the first section of the act herein referred to, be entitled to be, and shall be, registered as a legal voter.

Pending the decision of the Attorney General of the United States on the question as to who are disfranchised by law, registers will give the most rigid interpretation to the law, and exclude from registration every person about whose right to vote there may be a doubt. Any person so excluded who, may, under the decision of the Attorney General, be entitled to vote, shall be permitted to register after that decision is received, due notice of which will be given.

No person engaged on the Boards of Registration will be permitted to be a candidate for office while so serving.

The Registration Swindle.

The disgraceful exhibition of the utter trampling upon all law, right and decency—known as the registration in this city, is still continued. More than a half of the white citizens fully qualified under the law are turned away, whilst every negro who applies is immediately accepted and registered. Naturalized citizens are not only required to produce their papers, but to leave them with the registrars, with a very dim prospect of ever getting them back. Old citizens who have lived here a quarter of a century, and who pay individually more taxes than the whole Radical party in the State pay collectively, are turned away because they have been, at some remote period of their lives, School Directors or Aldermen under the City Government, and are suspected of having sympathized with the rebellion. But few naturalized citizens are registered on any terms except that of adherenee to the Radicals. That virtue will purge all vices. Renegades, who fought in the rebel ranks and deserted when the cause became desperate and joined the Radicals—even some who were punished by Butler and Banks for their rebellious excesses—and who possessed the disqualification of having held Federal or State offices previous to the war, are admitted to the honor (!) of registration without questions.

But why dwell on the enormities of this miserable farce? Are those who have got up this shameless scheme to defraud the people of this city and trample upon the acts of Congress, weak and credulous enough to imagine that they can profit therefrom? They will soon awake to a full comprehension of the infamy, the detestation, the bitter hostility of all the honest and respectable of the community, which alone they will secure by their lawless course. Let them persist therein, and the time is not distant when the word "registrar" will fix upon the luckless incumbent of the office, a stigma which will accompany him to the grave and descend to his posterity.

The above is from the N O. Times of the 21st inst, and we are free to say, that we don't believe a word of it.

Pius IX, the pope, is the two hundred and fifty-seventh pontiff who has sat in the papal chair. He is now in his seventy-sixth year, and has been for twenty-one years the pope.

To Colored Voters.

FOURTH PAPER.

Next after registration comes the still more responsible duty of deciding for whom you shall vote. The privilege of the ballot, like that of bearing arms, is potent for good or ill. Had the colored soldiers, at the crisis in our nation, proved unreliable, or had they mistaken friends for foes, and sent their bullets into the union instead of the rebel ranks, the war might have closed far differently amid an unending night of slavery, rather than amid the blaze of liberty. The ballot is a power stronger even than the bullet and may be fatally misdirected so as to aid your enemies and grievously embarrass your friends. Your vote in this first election has a wider than local significance. Under the peculiar circumstances it is of national importance, and will at once shape the policies of the future. The interests you have at stake are really tremendous, and if you would have them all properly secured, see to it that no man receives your support who does not train under the right banner. The momentous decision is to be made, whether you shall enjoy all the fruits of the victory won on the battle field, or whether your emancipation shall turn to be a sham instead of a solid reality. And as the determination of this great question rests with you, all the vast interests which you have at stake should prompt you to a sagacious course. You will render your decision in the selection you shall make of the men who are to receive your support. For whom then should you vote?

1. Vote only for good men. You are entrusting to the men you shall select interests that have been counted dearer than life. You place under their guardianship your rights and liberties, baptized with precious blood, and obtained through the expenditure of uncounted treasure. No man is fitted for such a trust whose sobriety, intelligence, wisdom, and virtue are not beyond question. Make known in advance your preference for such men. Let politicians understand that a moral standard has been erected, and that you are not to be degraded into bestowing your suffrages upon drinking, gambling, reckless and profane men. Inspiration has declared, "when the righteous are in authority the people rejoice; but when the wicked bear rule, the people mourn." The morality of a people seldom rises much above that of their public men. Can we hope for good government if we elevate bad men to power? Is it not inconsistent to pray that we may have good rulers and then vote for bad men? Away with all hypocricy in this matter; vote just as you pray and pray as you vote. A great political party once emblazoned as their motto "measures not men." But it was soon found that bad men could not be trusted to carry out good principles. Be it yours to fling to the breeze that better motto "measures and men." Be as careful in requiring that you be represented by good men as that they are right in their political views.

2. Support only those men whom you can trust as friends. We advocate no proscription of Southern men as such. The Southern man who shows himself friendly, and who is true to grand ideas and principles is to be welcomed and is entitled just as much to your confidence as a similarly true man from the North, but not a whit more. The exclusive claim for your suffrages preferred by some southern men on the plea that "you are our negroes," is such as you can fully appreciate. You were once their negroes, and were bought and sold like cattle in the stalls, but that was before the great and good Abraham Lincoln, backed by the party of freedom in this nation, put in the immortal bid which lifted all your crushed myriads into the light of freedom. That great party has now broken the last link of oppression, and you are not only free men, but "fellow-citizens" in the national house-hold. Instead of being "our negroes" you are Columbia's freemen. And you are free; free not only from chains and whips, and hounds, and auction blocks and cords, but free from the dominant arrogance which, in its presumptuous folly would forbid you the manliness to acknowledge your indebtedness to the great free people who secured to you this priceless boon, and would assume to control your exercise of the elective franchise generously bestowed upon you by the same noble party. But you are not liable to be mistaken as to who have been your friends. You know full well who took your boy to the auction block, and sold your little girl to strangers, and you know full well who have been restoring your scattered families. You know also, who are now exhausting all their skill to rob you of the ballot, and on whom you must rely to protect you in its exercise. Can there be yet a single colored man in doubt as to who are is his friends? Not one, save those bought with the rebel corruption fund. In the coming election, support none but your friends. And when you have determined who these are, remember you are as free to vote for your friends as the rebel is for his; and remember too, that you have what the rebel has not, the loyal, triumphant millions of this nation at your back.

3. Support no man who will not place himself squarely on the platform of liberty and equal rights. There are men that will speak to you with honied words and studied phrases of endearment; they will love your votes exceedingly, but be not deceived. Professions are cheap, and the candidate much in need of votes will take you by the hand, bow politely to your wife, pat your children, and be all smiles and promises. But care not for these; find out on what platform he stands; make him define his policy; give him pen and paper, and tell him to write down in black and white, whether he will favor giving you equal privileges of education; equal right to hold office; equal chance to enter the learned professions; equal measure of respect, and equal recognition as men with the whites. If he hesitates, turn your back upon him, for though "the words of his mouth be smoother than butter, war is in his heart; they may be softer than oil, yet are they drawn swords?" He is seeking your votes that he may blast your hopes. He asks you to put him in office that he may strip you of the ballot. Trust no man, unless he will place himself fairly upon the broadest platform of equal civil and political rights. Make him stand forth, clear as the sun before the public; and trust to no promise that is not reduced to writing.

4. Be especially definite in ascertaining from every candidate, whether he is a supporter or an opponent of the measures adopted by the Congress of the United States. This is a vital point. Every man of you should know that President Johnson and the entire democratic party have persistently opposed giving you the ballot. Every man should know that if Congress be not supported by the people, that you will lose the elective franchise. Every man should know that if he votes with Johnson and his friends, he is working in the interests of his relentless political foes; that he is employing the power given him by a loyal Congress to stay the march of the Union column. Your enemies boast that you will do this. They once declared you had not sufficient sense to send a bullet, they now assert you cannot direct a ballot. They know you are inclined to loyalty, but with the aid of whisky and their large corruption fund, they expect to overcome all your nobler sentiments. Resent this imputation upon your manhood; spring forward to your true place in the great party of progress; stand up like men; take broad views of this great opportunity; ally yourselves to great principles, and thus you shall rise to the highest nobility of action.

Everyday Religion.

Our word religion comes from the Latin Religo, (ligo to bind, and re, denoting repetiton,) and literally signifies "to bind anew." As originally used, it denoted the binding obligation of an oath, or vow to the gods, which was held very sacred by the Romans. In a comprehensive sense the term includes a belief in the being and perfections of God; in the revelation of His will to man; in man's obligation to obey His commands, in a state of rewards and punishments; and in man's accountableness to God. It also includes, true Godliness, piety of life—the practice of all moral duties. (The practice of moral duties without a belief in a Divine lawgiver, and without reference to His will and commands, is not religion.—See Webster.)

Religion is two-fold in its character, corresponding to "the two tables of the law" and man's double nature. It consists of theology and morals—doctrines and principles—faith and works. It is general and particular, for each, for all. Personally, it applies to man's body and soul; relatively, it defines his relations and duties to God and man; inwardly, it has to do with mind and heart; outwardly, it controls life and conduct, and is man's law in things temporal and spiritual; moulds character and fixes destiny, for time and for eternity. Such, briefly, is religion. It is both a Science and an Art. As a science, it contains truths to be studied, understood and believed. As an art, it prescribes a system of rules to be observed, precepts to be practiced, and duties to be done. Religion is then, both theoretical and practical. The former is not trivial, the latter is supremely important.

Personally, the theory of religion avails nothing without the experience. "For in Christ Jesus, neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature." "Ye must be born again." Practically, religion is something to be done, more than believed. "Faith without works is dead." Devils believe. "Religion pure and undefiled before God, is this: To visit the fatherless and the widow in their afflictions, and to keep ones self unspotted from the world." Christ said: "Not every one who saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter the kingdom of heaven; but he that doth the will of my Father." "Why call me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I command you?" "Obedience is better than sacrifice." "The kingdom of God is not meats and drinks, but righteousness." Religion does not consist in Sabbaths, sanctuaries, sermons, sacraments, psalms, long prayers, and long faces; but in doing right before God and man; and doing it every day in the week. This is what we mean by an "everyday religion." And it is the want of the church and the world to-day.

Religion lays its restraints and obligations upon all agencies, organizations, and institutions; gives law to nations—their armies, navies and commerce. It is the parent of civil government, and enters into all its departments, executive, legislative and judicial; requiring of "kings and all who are in authority"—

"to rule in righteousness, in all godliness and honesty"—to "do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with God."

And here we will digress to say, that while the alliance of Church and State is an open and public exhibition of civil and ecclesiastical incontinence, as criminal as it is shameless; on the other hand, the divorce of politics from religion is a violence to divinely constituted relations, at once revolting to our moral sense, consistent with the wiles of the devil and wicked men, and offensive in the sight of God; provoking most justly His wrath and indignation against those who attempt it.

But religion descends to the humblest individual, and gives law to his three-fold nature, requiring that, whether he toil or rest, eat or drink, wake or sleep, he shall "do all in the name of the Lord Jesus," and prohibits everything, however insignificant in the eyes of men, which cannot consistently be done in that name. It sits in profound judgment upon his secret thoughts and idle words, and weighs in the scales of eternal justice every motive and every action. It finds crime in a thought, lust in a look, murder in an emotion. Its "commandment is exceeding broad;" its inspection is infinitely minute; its requirements are inexorably exact. Its process in judgment is based upon the simple, yet sublime and comprehensive law: "He who is unjust in that which is least, will also be unjust in that which is greatest." It enjoins us to shun even the appearance of evil, and in every case of uncertain morality demands the benefit of our doubt.

Religion is a principle, a spirit, a power. It serves God because it loves Him, not because it fears hell. It does right because it is right, and delights in doing it. It goes, not simply where law drives it, or drags it, but wherever right principles open the inviting way. Religion speaks the truth, keeps its promises, pays its debts, gives good measure, and deals in full weights. It never sands its sugar, waters its syrup, nor adulterates its wine. It never sets fire to insured property, nor shaves its own paper, nor "fails" with flush pockets, nor takes the benefit of the bankrupt law, nor ties up cannon balls in cotton-bales. It never gives nor takes a bribe, never perjures itself for the privilege of voting never evades the laws of internal revenue, nor corrupts the elective franchise. Religion never takes advantage of ignorance, weakness, poverty, nor makes another's necessity its own opportunity. It is kind to the poor, feeds the hungry, clothes the naked, judges the fatherless, pleads for the widow.

Religion is never ashamed of its poor relatives, nor does it roll in splendor while they starve! It never neglects an opportunity of doing good, never finds "something else to do" when it ought to watch with the sick, and never complains of "illness" to get rid of duty. It knows nothing of unholy ambition, envy or jealousy, and is without partiality, without hypocrisy. It never puts profession in the place of practice, never offers prayers when it ought to give a loaf of bread, never says, "Oh! I am so sorry," when it ought to say, "There, take a dollar."

We need not repeat that, religion was not designed simply for some men, but for all men—not for Sabbath day, but for everyday—not for the closet, but for public life; for the thronged mart, the highway, for the exchange; for counting, court, and custom houses; for halls of art, science, literature and legislation.

We want an everyday religion—men who shall not be ashamed of christianity, but with whom it shall be a central idea, an abiding presence, a controlling principle, a divine reality, a living power; men who, in every relation in life shall be bold for the right, true to themselves, to humanity, to God; and who, in all places shall be recognized as those who "have been Jesus and have learned of Him." Without this, we are nothing. We may have a name to live while we are dead; we may have position and influence, while our example shall only lead others astray; we may make great professions of piety, but a slight inconsistency will neutralize it all. "The little foxes spoil the vines." "See that ye walk circumspectly." Be "diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." Make piety practical, by making it a vital part of your everyday life. Apply to it the infalible test of experience. Suffuse daily toil with holy principle; demonstrate to all with whom you have to do that, love to God, faith in Christ, resistance to temptation, superiority to worldly pleasures, holiness, heavenly-mindedness, are realities. Martyrs were called to die for Christ, we are called to live for Him, and it requires an equal grace.

Reader, are you an everyday christian? If not, why? Remember your obligations to God, and His claims upon you, and think of the day of final account; remember, religion leaves you all of this world to enjoy that is worth the having, and gives you heaven besides. Death will soon call for us all; writer, compositor, reader; what then of business, pleasure, wealth, fame? These are not to be despised, but they do not fit us for death and heaven. What are temporal things to spiritual? What is time to eternity? Labor not in vain, nor spend your strength for naught. Set your heart on heaven, lay up your treasures there, where moth and rust do not corrupt, nor thieves break through and steal. B.

The people of Luxemburg presented an address to the King of Holland, asking to be annexed to France.

Mississippi Items.

We have read of the good old days of Methodist chivalry, when a reign of terror was produced among the larger and fatter members of the pantry family whenever the rotund form of a presiding Elder appeared in sight. Alas, the experience of the individual who now occupies that honorable position on this district is of a very different character. Shining, glossy gobblers, gigantic shanghais, even the old fashioned chickens with large tails and small bodies, where are they? Gone with the rosy tinted dreams of our youth. Glad are we now to sit down to honest "corn dodgers" and wholesome bacon—considering ourselves fortunate if we have a dish of sweet cabbage, or even of sour krout. A few days ago we stopped for dinner on the Southern Railroad, between Jackson and Meridian. The usual number of passengers being from six to ten, the preparations were not extensive. It happened that day that a theatrical troupe of about twenty were on the train, and the poor landlord found that he had about three hungry persons for each dinner. We all got something, and all paid one dollar each and made no complaint. We had boasted of our ability to eat anything that people could live on, but the —— House, at Meridian took us down a little on that, and our faith that God does not allow true christians to starve to death was sorely tried by four days at another hotel, since that. To be serious, there is great scarcity of food among many of the people. Perhaps, all who are able and willing to work have enough to keep off actual want; but there are many old and infirm people that are in danger of starving. About Jackson but little of the land will be cultivated this year. There will be a large crop of Brown sedge grass, and but small ones of corn or cotton. In the northeastern part of the State the prospects are much better. The country was not so ravaged by the war. Fences still exist, and there are many new ones; most of the good land has been plowed, and there is some show of energy among the people, both white and black. The country along the Mobile and Ohio railroad shows more signs of life, and has a more cheerful aspect than any other we have seen in the South. The present condition of that road is very creditable to its managers.

On the banks of the Tombigby, a few miles east of this road, is a village called Aberdeen, which reminds us of the story of Rip Van Winkle, except that it has not yet waked up. We could not learn when it went to sleep, but it was evidently some years ago. Its communication with the world is by means of eight miles of the worst road we have traveled over for a long time. How the people get anything to live on, is a mystery, and can only be accounted for by us on the hypothesis that their comatose condition enables them to subsist on much less than would be necessary for a people who were wide awake.

We had quarterly meeting there April 7th. The congregations were large. The P. E. was unwell, and not able to perform his part very satisfactorily to himself; but we had some very pleasant meetings. Our people there are quite numerous, but poor and not very spirited. Perhaps they do as well as we could expect considering their fogy surroundings.

Our people eveywhere, white and black, are thinking too much of religion as something that is going to take them to heaven, and give them some fine things to wear when they get there, and not enough of it as a mission to go out into the world to wake somebody up, and do some good while they live.

The brethren at Marion, and at Macon have bought and paid for lots on which to build churches.

Political matters are very quiet now, the people do not seem much inclined to talk about them. Those who favor accepting the situation and taking such terms as they can get, appear to be in the majority. The right of suffrage in prospect is having its influence in favor of the colored man, and those who have heretofore been his friends. D.

HOWARD, BELL CO., TEXAS, April 2, 1867

Mr. Editor—You may say, for the encouragement of the lovers of rightiousness, that we have recently organized a colored Society of thirty-six members in the town of Belton, on Belton circuit, and to give it permanence, have purchased a house and lot in the town for school and church purposes. I am receiving pressing invitations from many quarters from the colored people to go and preach to them. Notwithstanding the desperate efforts that have been made to keep them from coming under our influence, by lies and slander, some of which, if I was to stop to relate, would both amuse and provoke. They are begining to fail of this object. The passage of the Military Bill by Congress dates a new era in the history of the African-American race, and may be said to have given a finishing stroke to slavery, and emancipated him from the unjust, unequal, and oppressive legislation in the South. It has already lifted a great burden from his heart, and gloom from his mind. In a disfranchisd state his liberty was a humbug. Hitherto he has had but little encouragement to labor, not knowing who he was laboring for, himself or another. He actually in some places did not feel free, to join the church of his choice, for fear they would bring down the ire of their best friends upon them. The Military bill has done this good thing, while Mr. Lincoln's proclamation emancipating their bodies, the military has emancipated both mind and conscience.

I had an appointment to preach to the colored people at the Court House, in a certain town not long since, but when I got there I found the door locked against me, and was informed that I could not get it. I said nothing but quietly retired to some live oaks, and preached to my sable audience under them. The people seeing my firmness and determination to preach, began to reconsider what they had done; some of the more considerate among them began to tell the others that they had laid themselves liable to be reported to Gen. Sheridan's Headquarters, and to be displaced from office. The consequence was, the next day I received through a friend, many apologies, accompanied with the key, and an earnest request to resume my appointment again at the Court House. I received the apologies and promised to hold my peace, with the promise there should be no reoccurrence of it again. "Pray for us that the word of the Lord may now have free course and be glorified. More anon, Loyalty.

NO. I.

At the present time the above much prized political virtue is quite at a premium. In every congregation here we meet men who are ardent in their protestations, and are the loud mouthed advocates of their so-called loyalty. This very eminent virtue does not grow spontaneous here, but is a tender plant, that grows and matures very slowly. It cannot be produced and expanded into full maturity in a day or in a year. It is a virtue that must be taught, practiced and encouraged. It must be nurtured by parental teaching, fostered and cultivated in the minds of the young by a father's watchful hand and a mother's assiduous care, The real, true, the genuine article has no marketable value. It is no commodity to be traded and bartered for, neither is it transferable from one flag to another. It may be comparable to fine gold that has been tried in the crucible. Gold cannot purchase nor silver seduce it. It is a living animating, glorious principle, and when once it is seated in the human heart it is their for life. Would you know what it is like? It is like the Roman Vestals' faith, a thing to cling to through prosperity and through adversity. It is as changeless as time, and deathless as eternity. The sacred altar where it worships is its country's legitimate authority, and the shrine of its idolatry her fair unsullied banner. Brute power never can seduce it. It may be overcome, prostrated and captured, but even in captivity, it turns with tearful eye and throbbing heart towards its sacred fame and sends up from the depths of an anguished heart a fervent prayer for its country's weal.

The truly loyal men may readily exclaim (when asked to change his political allegiance) with O'Connor's child:

"No! let the Eagle change its plume,
The leaf its hue, the flower its bloom,
But ties arond this heart are spun
That could not, would not be undone."

There is another species of loyalty that is indigenous, but is easily known from the genuine. This is a loyalty that delights to walk under the shade of its country's banner, when all is calm and sunshine. It is loud mouthed in its country's praise when she is walking in her silver slippers, when offices are to be bestowed, and when emoluments are to be distributed. This kind of loyalty is always very abundant, can be bought in market, and bought very low indeed. It is far more ardent in protestation than the genuine, and is well calculated to deceive even the very elect. Rumor tells us that a lage importation of this latter article has just reached this goodly city. Let those whose duty it is to examine, be very circumspect, for there is great danger of being imposed upon. There is now, as there always was, a great demand for the genuine thing, but we want that only which can abide the touch of the spear of Ithuriel.

LOYALIST.

Meeting in Washington Parish.

To the Editor of the N. O. Advocate.

MOUNT HERMAN CHURCH,
Washington, Parish La., April 17, 1867.

By request I enclose you an account of a political meeting held at this place to-day, together with the resolutions and address that were adopted.

The meeting was called to order by appointing Dr. J. J. Alford, Chairman, and L. D. Snell, Esq., Secretary.

Committee on Resolutions—Rev. James English, E. Self, Esq., William Fortinberry, Esq., Dr. H. Pierce, Alanson Parks, Esq., and T. E. Tate, Esq.

Committee on Recommendations—L. D. Snell, H. Pierex.

Committee on Address.—Rev. James English, William Fortinberry, and Messrs. Pierex, Parks and Tate.

The following preamble and resolutions were submitted by the committee, and unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, The recent action of Congress requiring the reconstruction and reorganization of the Rebel States, requires the attention and obedience of all good citizens; we, therefore, a portion of the citizens of Washington parish and surrounding vicinity, do resolve:

1. That the attempted withdrawal of Louisiana from the Federal Union, and her failure to make good the same by an appeal to arms, has forfeited some of the rights she enjoyed under the Federal Constitution, and we believe Congress has the right to define the conditions she must fulfil previous to her complete restoration.

2. That we will faithfully receive and readily accept the recent legislation of Congress as a basis of reconstruction for the Southern States, and that we will give the same our hearty consent and cordial approval.

3. That we dissent in the most unequivocal manner, from the policy of reconstruction known as the "Presidential Policy," believing that neither peace nor prosperity would have been attainable under such a course of adjustment.

4. That we believe that in all republics the voice of the people should alone be the sovereign power that governs, and that public liberty is always safer when entrusted to the national representatives than when left to the arbitrary decision of an executive; consequently, we have greater security for its preservation in Congress than in the one-man power of the President.

5. That we believe any attempt now made by the State to set at naught the Congressional requirements by appealing to the National Judiciary, will not only result unfavorably, but will complicate her difficulties and procure for her people a far deeper humiliation; and we are utterly opposed to any appropriation being made for any such purpose.

6. That we believe the terms now offered by Congress to the Rebel States are as full of magnanimity and generosity as any ever before offered to a conquered people, and better than the rebel leaders and rebel press ever expected in the event of subjugation.

7. That we recommend to all true Unionists a strict non-affiliation with pro-rebel politics, not to follow those delusive political lights which have beaconed the State to destruction; to join no party cliques who may desire to wrest the ballot of the freedmen to his own destruction; but to stand the firm friends of that Congress which has raised the feet of the Union out of the slough of despond, and has given her old blood-baptized banner back to the free winds of her six-and-thirty States.

8. That a committee of three be appointed to send to Headquarters the names of suitable Union men to fill the offices of register and commissioners for the parish, and that the Secretary is hereby appointed to forward a copy of these resolutions, together with the "Address to the people," to the N. O. ADVOCATE and the N. O. Republican for publication.

9. That Dr. J. J. Alford is hereby solicited to place his name before the people as a candidate to represent the Senatorial District in the approaching election for State Convention.

10. That this meeting endorses William Fortinberry, Esq., as a candidate to represent the parish in the State Convention in the election ordered by the recent action of Congress.

11. A committee of three was then appointed to bear these resolutions to New Orleans and dispose of them as required by the 8th resolution.

An address to the Union citizens of the parish and surrounding vicinity was then read and adopted, and the meeting adjourned.

L. D. SNELL, Sec.,
J. J. ALFORD, Chairman.

The address will appear in our next issue.—ED.]

To the People of Louisiana.

FELLOW CITIZENS:—Deceived by the chiefs of the secession party, you were led into a long and bloody war against the government of your country.

Deluded by the promises of ambitious men seeking to recover lost political ascendency, you have resisted the power of Congress and refused its offers of reconciliation and forgiveness.

You have sacrificed your children on the battle-field and wasted the treasures of the Commonwealth to sustain the slave-power; and you have been vanquished.

You have heretofore contumaciously resisted all terms; now Congress offers you a plan of restoration to the Union, and should you prevent its execution, it will inevitably be followed by measures you will have no reason to think agreeable.

If the secession leaders are indiscreet enough to urge you to reject this offer, under pretence that even now they will lead you to victory, turn your eyes to the past, and you will perceive that every inducement and promise they have ever held out to you, have been delusive; and so will their present promises be if they tell you that you can do better than accept the terms now offered.

The question of peace or war is in the sole power of Congress. You waged war against them; they have not finished the war yet; but do and will hold you to it, until they are pleased to say there is peace. This is their right; it was your choice; and you cannot escape from it.

The question as to how your State government is to be restored, and how a Republican form shall be guaranteed to you, is one also for the exclusive decision of Congress. No other power in the Government can lawfully interfere. Any unlawful interference will entail the penalties of treason.

The Congressional plan exhibits a rare magnanimity and clemency. No man is punished in his person or property for past offenses. A few of the secession leaders only are excluded from the Federal and State Governments they sought to destroy.

The plan of Congress is founded on the rights of man and the idea of human progress. By admitting the people of African descent to political privileges, the power of the secession aristocracy will be effectually neutralized, and never can again take the lead to ruin you. Come, let us once more rally under the symbols of Justice, Union, and Confidence.

You need repose; the Union will give you peace.

You need a settlement of existing difficulties which will be permanent; Congress places the means of securing it in your own hands.

You long for the opportunity to resume the pursuits of industry; restoration will open to you the abundant sources of capital and credit.

Discard the errors and prejudices of the past. Stand forth as freemen, and advance to perform the work you are called to. Your own prosperity, the welfare of your wives and children, the safety and happiness of Louisiana, are hanging in the scale.

With a single effort you can pass from uncertainty, obstruction, sullenness, anarchy, to regular administration, activity, cheerfulness, and public order; you have only to will it.

The path is a plain one.

Assemble in your various parishes; exclude no man from your meetings whom Congress accepts; choose delegates to a State Convention to meet in New Orleans. Let the Convention call on the Governor to order an election for members of a Convention to form a State Constitution; and should the Governor decline, let your Convention itself order the election, and provide for the meeting of a Constitutional Convention The Constitution formed by such a body, in accordance with the ideas of Congress, will undoubtedly be ratified by that body. Your State and Congressional elections can then be held, and you will thenceforth occupy a place in the free Confederation of American States. T. J. DURANT.

The Methodists of Saratoga, last week, purchased the site of the Columbian Hotel, cleared by the fire in August. The price paid was $26,500. The Methodists have been offered an advance of $2,000 since they purchased.

We publish the following from a private letter to Brother Brakeman, dated Pass Christian, April 10: Brother Avery is the preacher in charge of P. C. circuit:

Dear Elder—Since your departure four persons have been converted, and twelve have joined the church on probation. Pass Christian is awake. The strong hold of Satan has received a mighty blow, and now trembles before the army of the living God A benevolent society has been organized called "The Sons and Daughters of Zion." A Sunday-school has also been organized with four teachers and twenty four pupils. Sabbath, P. M., I preached and the Lord was with us and several came forward for prayers.

Among the penitents I observed some who had grown old in sin and long withstood the gospel call. Eight came forward and gave us their hand and name for the church, and I trust they gave God their hearts. There stood the youth of fifteen and the gray haired sinner of fifty, anxiously inquiring the way to life. Pray for us, that the good work may go on, and this army following in the wake of our great Captain may storm the castle and gain the victory.

MOSES B. AVERY.

Information Wanted.

We hope that pastors among the colored people will read, in their public congregations, the inquiries for relatives and friends which appear each week in the ADVOCATE. By so doing, much information may be elicited which would otherwise not be obtained.

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Information wanted by Mary Rice, of Enterprise, Miss., of her mother and sister, whom she left in Charleston, S. C., seven years ago. Her mother was for a long time engaged at the market.

Sarah Colingham, Florence, Ala., wishes to obtain information of a young girl named Winnie, who was sold south from Louisville, Ky., just previous to the war, by Judge L. T. Thurston.

Information wanted of Charlie Collins, who was sold from Norfolk, Va., in 1849, by Mrs. Legg. Address John Collins, box 334, Norfolk, Va.

Mrs. Cecilia Davis, of Galveston, Texas, wishes to obtain information of her sister, Lucinda Talton, who formerly lived on the plantation of John Talton, on Bayou Boef, La.

Miss Elizabeth Shade desires to obtain information concerning her sister Winnie Cecilia Shade; of her brother Daniel Allick, and of her father, named James and her mother, Winnie. Her father and mother, when last heard from, were in Montgomery, Md. The rest in R—— county, N. C. Daniel and Winnie belonged to the widow Raidwine, and Allick to Solomon Peler. THE MILITARY BILL.

REGISTRATION ORDERED—NAMES OF THE REGISTRARS—REGISTRY TO BE MADE BETWEEN 15TH OF APRIL AND 15TH OF MAY.

The following order from the District Commander, Major Gen. Sheridan, gives the initiation to the reconstruction of our State under the military bill.

We trust that every man who has a vote under the acts of Congress will be registered at once.

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH MILITARY DISTRICT,
New Orleans, La., April 10, 1867.

Special Orders No. 15.
(Extract.)

* * * * *

2. In obedience to the directions contained in the first section of the law of Congress, entitled "An Act supplemental to an Act entitled 'An Act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States,'" the registration of the legal voters, according to that law in the parish of Orleans, will be commenced on the 15th inst., and must be completed by the 15th of May.

The four municipal districts of the City of New Orleans, and the parish of Orleans, right bank, (Algiers,) will each constitute a registration district. Election precincts will remain as at present constituted.

The following appointments of Boards of Registers is hereby made—to continue in office until further orders, viz:

First District—John A. Roberts, William Baker and W. M. Geddes.

Second District—Edward Ames, T. C. Thomas and Michael Vidal.

Third District—Charles F. Berens, John McWhorter and H. Stiles.

Fourth District—John L. Davis, Henry Bensel, Jr. and Edmund Flood.

Orleans Parish, Right Bank—W. H. Seymour, Thomas Kenefec and Georg Herbert.

Each member of the Board of Registers, before commencing his duties, will file in the office of the Assistant Inspector General at these headquarters, the oath required in the sixth section of the act referred to, and be governed in the execution of his duty by the provisions of the first section of that act—faithfully administering the oath therein prescribed to each person registered.

Boards of Registers will immediately select suitable officers, within their respective districts, having reference to convenience and facility of registration, and will enter upon their duties on the day designated. Each Board will be entitled to two clerks. Office hours for registration will be from 8 o'clock till 12 A. M., and from 4 till 7 P. M.

When elections are ordered, the Board of Registers for each district will designate the number of polls, and the places where they shall be opened in the election prscincts within its district—appoint the commissioners and other officers, necessary for properly conducting the elections, and will superintend the same.

They will also receive from the commissioners of elections of the different precincts the result of the vote, consolidate the same, and forward it to the Commanding General.

Registers and all officers connected with elections will be held to a rigid accountability, and will be subject to trial by Military Commission for fraud, or unlawful, or improper conduct in the performance of their duties. Their rate of compensation and manner of payment will be in accordance with the provisions of sections 6 and 7 of the supplemental act.

Brevet Brig. Gen. J. W. Forsyth, Assistant Inspector General of the Fifth Military District, is hereby directed to supervise the Board of Registration for the parish of Orleans, to listen to and adjust, or refer to this office all just causes of complaint. He is authorized to employ such experts as may be necessary to detect fraud in registration or elections.

Every male citizen of the United States twenty-one years old and upward, of whatever race, color or previous condition, who has been a resident in the State of Louisiana for one year and parish of Orleans for three months previous to the date at which he presents himself for registration, and who has not been disfranchised by act of Congress or for felony at common law, shall, after having taken and subscribed the oath prescribed in the first section of the act herein refered to, be entitled to be, and shall be, registered as a legal voter n the parish of Orleans and State of Louisiana.

Pending the decision of the Attorney General of the United States on the question as to who are disfranceised by law, Registers will give the most rigid interpretation to the law, and exclude from registration every person about whose right to vote there may be a doubt. Any person so excluded, who may, under the decision of the Attorney General be entitled to vote, shall be permitted to register after that decison is received—due notice of which will be given.

MEDICAL.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,
127 CARONDELET STREET,
Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic, and Acute

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient, that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years, in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient, if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the Institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet Street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city ☞ Consultation free—stamps not "forgotten." [feb31

MASON & HAMLIN,

MANUFACTURERS OF

CABINET ORGANS,

ALSO

PORTABLE ORGANS,

ADAPTED TO SECULAR AND SACRED MUSIC, FOR DRAWING-ROOMS, CHURCHES, SUNDAY AND DAY SCHOOLS, LODGES, &C., &C.

Uniting to a considerable extent the capacity of the Piano-Forte with that of the Pipe-Organ, and costing much less than either.

They occupy little space; are elegant as furniture; not liable to get out of order, and are securely boxed, so that they can be sent anywhere by ordinary freight routes, all ready for use.

Forty Styles, plain or elegant cases; one to twelve stops; Prices, $75, $90, $110, $125, $130, $1 0, $150, $160, $170, $200, $225, $250, $300, $435, $540, $550, $600, and upwards.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs were introduced four years since, and are a great imprement upon the Melodeon, Harmonium, and other reed organs, greatly excelling them especially in the excellent quality and variety of their tones; in power and quickness of action, and capacity for expression,

THEIR SUCCESS HAS BEEN ENTIRELY BEYOND PRECEDENT,

and proves how greatly such an instrument was needed. Again and again the manufacturers have been compelled to double their manufacturing facilities, until they have been increased six-fold. From the most eminent of the musical profession, the most distinguished pianists, organists, composers, and musical directors, the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs have received an amount and degree of commendation never before bestowed upon any similar musical instrument. More than two hundred and fifty of the most eminent musicians in the country have given written testimonials to the value of the improvements contained in them, and that they excel all other instruments of this class.

FIFTY-TWO GOLD OR SILVER MEDALS, or other highest Premiums have been awarded to Mason & Hamlin for the important improvements effected by them, and for the

SUPERIORITY OF THEIR INSTRUMENTS TO ALL OTHERS.

Constantly exhibiting their instruments in competition with others, they have been awarded the highest premium in every instance, but three or four.

For churches, sunday schools, etc., the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs are the instruments long wanted, of the very best quality, abundant power, not too expensive, nor liable to get out of order.

For private use, in drawing-rooms, &c. they are not less desirable, and are finding a place in the musical families of the principal cities.

They are adapted to a wider range of music than the piano, being fitted for all sacred music and for much secular music, while their quickness of action is such that the most lively, rapid music can be played on them. Then their cost is greatly less, as well as their liability to get out of order.

BRIEF EXTRACTS FROM OPINIONS OF DISTINGUISHED MUSICIANS.

I should think they would become very much sought after as parlor instruments as well as for public performance.—Sigismond Thalberg, the world-renowned Pianist. Sure to find its way into every household of taste and refinement which can possibly afford its moderate expenses. Far superior to everything of its class I have seen.—L. M. Gottschalk, the eminent Pianist. Such pure musical tones, promptness and smoothness of action and fine variety of effect, I have not found in any other instrument of the class.—S. B. Mills, the eminent Pianist. Really so excellent that there can hardly be much difference of opinion respecting them.—William Mason, the eminent Pianist. The best instrument of its class with which I am acquainted, and worthy a place in every drawing room. Harry Sanderson, the eminent Pianist. In every respect far superior to everything I have ever seen of the kind, whether in Europe or America.—Geo. Washbourne Morgan the eminent organist, N. Y. I can only reiterate what so many in the musical profession have said, that for equality, promptness and exquisite tone, they are unequalled.—John H. Wilcox, the eminent Organist, Boston. Surpasses everything in this line I have ever seen, whether French or American.—Jon Zundel, the eminent Organist, N. Y. The best reed instruments in the world are made in the United States, and your Cabinet Organs are greatly superior, and by far the best made here.—Max aretzer, Musical Conductor, N. Y. Far surpasses all other similar instruments, which have come under my observation.—Carl Zerhau, Musical Conductor, Boston. Exceeds in my estimation every other instrument of this general class. Thos. Hastings. I can recommend them with confidence.—Lowell Mason. As soon as the people become acquainted with the superior merits of your instruments, your only trouble will be to supply the demand.—Wm. B. Bradbury. I have never seen anything of the kind which interested me so much.—Geo. F. Root. Exciting much interest in musical circles, and already becoming the fashion. N. Y. Home Journal. The highest accomplishment of industry in this department. This is not only our opinion, but the unanimous verdict of the organists.—Boston Advertiser. A glorious instrument for the temple service, so readily secured as to be available for any congregation, and effective and beautiful as to meet the desires of the most refined and fastidious.—N. Y. Observer.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs must not be confounded with other reed instruments, from which they vary essentially, their superiority veing largely derived from PATENTED IMPROVEMENTS, which cannot be employed by other makers. Among them are,

The AUTOMATIC BELLOWS SWELL, patented, a most important invention, and greatly the best swell ever devised being much more effective and easily used than any other. The variety and beauty of effect of which it is capable, can not be appreciated except from actual use. The many attempts to imitate or find a substitute for this swell, prove its value. None of them, however, approach it in excellence and simplicity.

IMPROVED SELF-ADJUSTING VALVES patented, secure much more perfect action, durability, and freedom from liability to get out of order.

WOOD'S OCTAVE COUPLET patented, in effect nearly doubles the power of the instrument in which it is used.

NOISELESS SAFETY VALVES patented, prevent the hissing sound often heard.

The IMPROVED COMBINATION REGISTER patented, gives of great facility in drawing stops.

Poetry.

From the Watchman and Reflector.

For Thee I Pine.

Savior! I long to love Thee more;
I long to see Thee and adore
With that sweet faith, and pure delight
Not given to the grosser sight.

But now I mourn, and strive to pray
That Thou would rend this veil away.—
The veil of sin and sense that vies
To hide Thee from my eager eyes.

Yet e'en my prayers seem mockery all,
Though low on bended knees I call,
And speak Thy precious name, dear Lord,
With contrite lip and trembling Word.

Alas! I feel, when prayer is o'er,
To cry more earnest than before,
My best yet blemished gift forgive!
Still grant Thy Love and let me live.

I for Thy nearest presence pine,
In spite of sin, O make me Thine;
And as my need be so be my grace,
Until I see Thee face to face.

An Address of Unionists

TO THE

Citizens of Washington Parish, Louisiana.

FELLOW UNION CITIZENS:—We have thought proper to call a public meeting at Mount Hermon Church, and have prepared the following address upon the pervading political topics of the day, and we submit the same to you through the medium of the press, for your consideration.

The present is a great period, and the political womb is now pregnant with the most important events; whether for weal or woe, none at present can determine.

The parties who now address you are no scheming politicians, but are plain, unpretending farmer men, who have either been raised in your midst, or have enjoyed a long residence among you. At the close of the rebellion, our State, like the others, was fully conquered; like them, her surrender was entirely unconditional, and like them, she agreed to abide by whatever terms the United States government might impose. The President and Congress both required conditions, precedent to the restoration of the States, and Congress, being the governing power, has seen proper to be more exacting in its requirements than was the Executive. An appeal was made last fall, from their requirements, to the people of the loyal States, and the last fall elections demonstrated that the people gave a triumphant vindication to the Congressional policy.

Congress, since then, has declared its ultimatum, telling the Southern people what they must do before they can recover those inestimable civil rights—once so happily enjoyed, but lost now by the unholy act of secession. Those conditions are set forth in the late act of Congress, known as the Military Bill, and the act supplemental thereto.

It must be plain to every intelligent observer that Louisiana is now a conquered province. Her leaders, with a blind obstinacy, refused to make any terms while negotiations were possible, but urged on the war while the last dollar and last available man were procurable, and then only threw down their arms to prevent their State being desolated by fire and sword.

Nothing can be more apparent than the necessity which urges her now to accept the terms offered.

The people who demand them will enforce that demand, and we recommend all our friends to obey the law of Congress, in this respect, in letter and in spirit. It should be obeyed in letter, because they cannot do otherwise; and in spirit, because the terms offered are fuller of magnanimity and generosity than any before ever offered to a conquered people.

We will soon be called on to hold an election for delegates to a State Convention, and we find the same old party that for years past has controled the destiny and fortunes of the State, again industriously seeking the advancement of its own ends.

After the destruction of the military power and the entire overthrow of their political schemes, we hoped those ambitious leaders had learned wisdom from the lessons of the past. We fondly hoped that they would, at least, respect the principles that had prevented our joining with them in their insane crusade against liberty; but instead of that we even met with nothing but looks and words of hostility. We were denounced as traitors and cowards because we had refused to affiliate with their party; and even yet, when they have the greatest possible inducements to deport themselves politely towards us, their presses are teeming with the grossest abuses against Southern loyalists. Even now, when a neighboring State has just filed her bill of injunction in the Supreme Court, in which they declare secession was not the willful and legitimate act of the State, but was consumated by a minority of its people, the pro-rebel presses are heaping insults upon the Union men, thus directly contradicting their own statements, and increasing the alarming difficulties of the situation.

Honor and patriotism demands of us a strict non-affiliation with this party. Our interests can never be advanced by submitting quietly to their leadership. They have denounced us as poltroons and cowards because we would not submit to their commands, and accuse us of being traitors to the State for the same reason. We deny having ever been untrue to Louisiana. She was torn from her place in the national confederation by the action of a minority of her people. Men were sent to the Convention of '60 and '61, who proved untrue to the pledges made the people in the canvass, and because we refused to place our allegiance at their disposal, we have been denounced as recusants and renegades; while in reality we were true to the State so long as she was true to her ancient, her honored traditions.

We have apostatised from no faith—we have deserted no principle, and yet we are denounced as traitors, simply because we refued to apostatise from that glorious old faith that has made the names of Jackson, of Webster, and Clay, immortal. Allegiance is a hereditary property It is a sacred, intransferable thing. It may aptly be compared to the priceless jewel of woman's love—

> "Which, when once kindled, cannot die,
> Though time, and treachery, and slight,
> To quench its deathless flame, should try."

We deny the right of any restless minority to transfer our allegiance from the honored stars and stripes to any mushroon flag they may choose to lift on high.

As a party, we are under no obligations to the pro-rebels. When they were in prosperity, we were cast down, humbled, prostrated and dejected; and when their star went down to the shades of eternal night, then the dawning day of our liberties began.

Perfectly antipodal in character, our political faith and theirs act like the opposite ends of the magnet. They are still ceaseless in their denunciations of us Southern loyalists, and use toward us the most vile and insulting language; and that, too, when new parties are forming, and when they need peace and concord in the interior. "If these things be done in the green tree, what may we expect in the dry?"

By them our houses have been plundered, our friends torn from us by their hell hounds of conscription, or made to wander in solitude among our primeval forest, to keep from entering their horrid service and warring against their consciousness of right, while the rich aristocrat was enabled to escape service by the 20 negro exemption, and fatten their bloated carcasses upon the hard earnings of the widow and orphan.

They inaugurated a war for the bondage of the African, and professed a patriotism exceeding that of Regulus himself—and then made a law by which the man who owned most of this property should be excused from the perils of warfare, while the poor son of misfortune was driven from his weeping wife and helpless children to battle for his (the negro holder's) rights; and now, when the whole sad farce is ended, these stay-at-home fanatics are parading the antecedents of their so-called loyalty, and seeking for promotion at the hands of a government they for years strove to ruin.

> "Oh, Shame, where is thy blush!
> Oh, Prejudice where is thy reason!"

Our churches were not safe from the visits of their wandering cavalry. The holy Sabbath was desecrated by armed men, seeking amid the hallowed precincts of the sanctuary of God for victims; and even here, at this consecrated spot, men encamped with negro dogs and blood hounds, to hunt down the sons of Unionists. You have seen and felt these persecutions, and you know these things are so.

But those days are over. We worship once more in peace beneath the shadow of our vine and fig tree We plow. we sow, we reap, and gather as did our fathers, in peace. No armed bands are hovering round, taking the tithes of your corn and meat. And who are responsible for all these returning blessings? Who have banished woe and want, and oppression, from our sunny land? The Rebels, or the Federals? Who has lifted the dark cloud of despotism that rested over us, and has enabled us once more to rejoice in the light of Freedom's day? The soldiers of the Union are those who have raised us from our prostrate condition, and has torn away the gyves of oppression that confederate authority was forging upon your hands, and ours.

There is much said here about oppression, but the truly loyal sees only the blessed light of freedom illumining his pathway, and he reads protection to life, liberty and property on every shining fold of the ancient banner of his fathers. God grant that our former enemy never may be oppressed as he oppressed us. His situation is one of luxurious comfort, compared to what ours was when the flag of rebellion was blazing on high. Our former oppressor cannot, it is true, ride over the country, preying upon our effects; nor can he shoot and drive, and hang and imprison Union men at pleasure. This, to him, he may deem a severe oppression. Its exercise may have been a glorious liberty to him, but like the frogs in the fable, if it was a great pleasure to him, it was truly death to us.

In this parish there is a large loyal element, and the utmost efforts will be made to induce you to support pro-rebel candidates for office. The most extraordinary stories will be told you of the reversal of public opinion in the loyal States, and if you hearken to all this, you lose your identity as loyal men when you fare with them, and in case of a general confiscation you will not have the sympathy of the stronger party Now is the time to establish your loyalty, and to prove by your votes what you so long have professed with your lips If you are loyal and wish fully to identify yourself with that party, you can certainly do so by no easier method than by rallying to the support of the good and true men who are now soliciting your suffrages.

We place before you the names of Dr. J. J. Alford and William Fortinberry, of your Parish, as candidates for office. They are no northern men. They have been reared here among you, are men of spotless integrity and unflinching loyalty, and worthy of the high positions claimed for them by their friends. They are working farmers, first-class citizens and Union men from centre to circumference. They have everything to recommend them except rebel antecedents.

We will of course be denounced by the rebel Press as extremists, as bitter radicals. To this we reply, that if an inherent love of justice and of right—if a love of our whole, great, glorious country—a desire to perpetuate the principles of freedom to all mankind, a non-affiliation with pro-rebel politics, and a deep hatred of oppression and disunion, makes us radicals, then, for our dear old country's sake, welcome be the honored name.

To our colored friends who have so suddenly and unexpectedly been clothed with the privilege of the elective franchise, we would fain address a few remarks. To those of your friends who reside near and among us, no remarks are necessary. We are frank to admit that the prejudices of our birth and education induced us to be opposed (not to your freedom) but to your enfranchisement at the present time; but the thing is accomplished, and you are voters. We do not say we will do everything for you, but we do promise to respect your rights, and will labor for your political and educational promotion. The same power that strove to eternize your bondage, sought also our degradation. We are identified in principle with that great and powerful party that has emancipated you. As we have never fought against the power who strove to keep you slaves, we surely have larger claims upon you than the opposite party. Born upon the same soil, and raised to labor under the same burning sun with yourselves, and having, like you, been relieved by federal success from a position of great peril, we can quite fully appreciate your condition.

We earnestly solicit your support for the good and faithful Union men whose names are now placed before you as candidates for office.

Listen not to the warm professions of those who gave life and property to make good that hold upon your posterity, but stand firmly up for the men and principles that are politically in full sympathy with your own. Now is the turning point in your destiny, the flood tide that will lead to your more enlarged and material prosperity. Act then with those who have shown by their actions that they are your friends, and do not depend simply upon the artful professions that are found in mere empty words. It is now our collective duty to aid in the formation of a new party that will secure you from insult and oppression, and will raise your race up from the degradation that slavery imposed upon it.

God, who has so signally aided our cause, will continue his care toward us, if we are but true to ourselves, and will but do our duty faithfully and well. Into his hands let us commit our sacred trust, with the unshaken belief that he who so signally aided in the formation and preservation of this great nation is watching it alike. May His benignant smile rest upon us and protect and shield us from all ill.

Recollections of the late War.

BY A MUSICIAN.

NO. II.

Helena—Dog tents—A night of rain—We build a house—Three horns of a dilemma—A serious inconvenience—We enlarge our house—Village like appearance of the camp.

Helena is not a very desirable locality for a town, yet it is one of the best along this portion of the river. It is the only place on the Mississippi at which we recollect of seeing highland to the west below the junction of the Ohio One who had always lived at the North would suppose, on landing at Helena in time of low water, that the town was on very high ground, and would innocently wonder why they had a levee there. But if he should happen to arrive during high water, he would be as much surprised that people should think of building a town in such a low, flat mudhole. But though the town is subject to inundations, the hills beyond afford a very safe retreat. Out to, on to, and among these hills we were marched the first day after our arrival. And they were hills no mistake. The country, though level along the river, is quite hilly in places, and Helena is one of those places.

Having reached a place sufficiently level we began preparations for going into camp. As a first preliminary we drew what were appropriately denominated "dog tents." They were a single piece of cloth about five and a half feet square, having buttons and button holes so as to fit several together. The quickest and perhaps the best way to arrange them was to button two of them together, forming a wedge tent, and fitting another on one end. By having the tent about three and a half feet high there was room enough for three persons to sleep side by side.

The first night we slept pretty well, but the next day just before sundown our camping place was changed. The sky was then overspread with clouds and the atmosphere betokened rain, so we went to work with a will and continued till after dark. It was allotted to me to cut poles for our tent while my comrades dug ditches to drain the water off. I succeeded so well with my job that I cut in addition a large hole in one of my boots. The success of my comrades in trenching will presently appear. Awaking in the night we found it was raining gently. The sound of falling drops striking on our tent was rather pleasant than otherwise; for with all their faults our "dog tents" were impervious to rain. Hence, we enjoyed the shower very much. But soon it ceased raining gently and suddenly poured down in earnest, and very soon thereafter the man on the right discovered that the water was running under him and wetting the blankets. Shortly afterwards, I being on the left, found the water coming in on me. The man in the centre, doubtless feeling secure, wanted us to lie still and not make any "fuss." But it rained harder and harder, and we were compelled to get up or do worse.

Our first thought was to enlarge our ditches so that they might carry off the water as fast as it fell; but we soon found that they conveyed the water to our tent, instead of from it. Then we gave up in despair, and piling our blankets in a heap and disposing of ourselves as best we could, waited somewhat impatiently for the day. "I tell you what it is," said Charley the next morning, "we must go to work to-day and build a house; we will be here a month or so, and I for one am not ground hog enough to stay in these "dog tents," and he cast a contemptuous glance at our tent. At this I could hardly repress a laugh. "I am in earnest," said he.

"No doubt of it," replied I, a man who has been in a dog tent during such a rain as we had last night, with several ditches leading the water to it would be apt to be in earnest."

He made no reply, but looked down at my boot and "smiled audibly."

His motion being seconded by some half dozen of the field band, at work we went immediately. When the day closed we had our house some four feet high, and at the end of the second day had succeeded in getting it covered, using our tent cloths for that purpose. Then came the building of the chimney which was formed of clay and sticks to the height of five feet, and then finished off with a barrel that had both heads knocked out. At the end of the third day our house was pretty well finished, and an odd looking one it was. Our door was made by sawing off some of the logs, but when completed it looked more like a window than a door, and not much like either. But it served as a place of ingress and egress, and, as utility was our object, it pleased us very well. However, we were not yet "set up" for house keeping, as we had no bunks and had to sleep on the ground These we could have made if we had only boards to make them out of.

There seemed to be three possible ways by which to obtain boards. We might take them secretly without asking consent of the owner; or, we might find some unclaimed by hunting diligently for them; or, we might manufacture them from the raw material. The first method we did not countenance because there were none to take, and also, if there had been, being inexperienced soldiers we would have been found out; not to speak of any qualms of conscience we might have felt. Attempting the second way suggested we strolled out from camp determined if possible on making some valuable dicovery. Cautiously passing around the premises of a secesh widow, (her husband had died just before (?) the war) we saw what appeared in the distance, very much like clapboards. Drawing nearer for a more minute examination, and finding they were the bona fide article, we administered to them several kicks to test their soundness. At that moment we heard the voice of a soldier addressing us; he said he was guarding the woman's property and we must let it alone. We told him it seemed hard that soldiers should be refused old boards and have to sleep on the ground for the want of them. He admitted the truth of our assertion, saying however, that he was a guard and must obey orders. "But" said he coming so near we could see a sly twinkle in his eye, "come and get them to night and I'll never see you."

We reported our discovery with the intention of returning after night-fall for the boards, but several things prevented. The chain guard around our camp was very heavy that night so that if we got through we could hardly expect to get back with a load of boards. Then the boards might be too rotten to warrant a promiscious grab such as thieves would be likely to make, and from these and other reasons "too numerous to mention," we abandoned the enterprise. Nothing now remained but the laborious and honest method of getting the much coveted article. Accordingly taking a cross-cut saw, and our axes we went boldly into the forest and by night our bunks were made.

We were now as we thought, fairly fixed for housekeeping. But it soon became evident after our bunks were up that we were scarce of room; especially on a rainy day when all were in doors we were so crowded that the cook would become quarrelsome. In point of fact we were decidedly too thick to thrive. At the end of three weeks things had arrived at such a pass that we unanimously voted to enlarge our house. It took but a day or two to finish it the second time, and it was then of very convenient size. We now had, with but one or two exceptions, the "best house in town."

For a week or more we enjoyed the comforts of our enlarged house, notwithstanding the taunts of some each day that we would have to leave it the next We had plenty to eat, the weather was fine, and we all expressed ourselves highly pleased with soldiering. The whole regiment had divided into squads and built houses similar to ours; and our Colonel, who was a great friend to neatness, had our camp ditched and the rubbish removed so that our regimental camp presented something of the appearance of a neat little village.

UNIVERSAL BROTHERHOOD.—The moment a man becomes united to Christ by living, he becomes a brother to every other one who is united to Christ. Whosoever is united to Christ is brother to everybody else that is united to Him, whether in heaven or on earth. Christ is the vine; we are the branches, and all the grapes growing on the same vine are brethren, so are all the souls united to Christ by faith. We are blood-kindred to all that have been blood-sprinkled from the Cross. The children of one father are brethren; we are all the children of one Father who is in heaven.—"Therefore, love as brethren."

Letter from Ex-Mayor Hoyt.

TREMONT HOUSE,
Chicago, April 22, '67.

Dear Doctor Newman—I have your esteemed favor, for which I thank you.

I consider the appointment of Mr. Heath a most excellent one. He was a member of our School Board, and rendered me great assistance in the work of "reconstruction" of the schools.

Gen. Sheridan is a noble man. I was on a commission with him in '61 at St. Louis. I said then that there was no position, civil or military, in the nation which he could not fill with honor to himself and benefit to his country; I have seen no reason to change the opinion I then formed.

Your orphans, the wards of the nation which you and your friends have gathered together will rise up and call you blessed. I rejoice in the success which has crowned your efforts in behalf of these children. You have earned and will receive the highest honors of your church for your fidelity and energy.

I am, my dear sir, with great esteem, your friend and obedient servant,

STEPHEN HOYT.

THE DUTIES OF AN ENGLISH LADY'S MAID.—One of these not-to-be-envied persons, a race that may be classed with that of governesses, has recently made disclosures throwing a peculiar light upon the women of rank in "Old England." "Much is required from us in London," she writes:

"We must, above all, be very punctual, for fashionable ladies change their dresses at least five times a day during the season. We must have polished manners, be no older than 35 years, and always be cheerful and good tempered, although for weeks we are kept without sleep until four o'clock in the morning—a practice which is equally injurious to eyes and lungs. We are expected to cut and fit and use the most improved machine, and to dress hair for the morning, evening, and court costume, as well as for the drive; to iron well; read, write, cypher; to speak French and German, and, if possible, to have traveled. There is still another function of a lady's maid, which is supposed to be of modern introduction, but which is, in fact, merely a revival of an old custom. We must be able to paint in pastel, not indeed after nature, but upon her. To beautify our mistress we must redden the cheeks, put antimony on the eyelids, pastel upon the brows, introduce belladonna into the eyes in order to enlarge the pupils, paint blue veins upon the temples, and use ninon paint and pearl-white upon the rest of the skin. We must change the hair to a reddish-brown by means of a corroding material or of 'palma veechie,' which is now used in preference for that pupose; and we must be possesed of great skill in applying all these ingredients, as their use is universal with the old as well as the young."—Exchange.

A LITTLE GIRL'S TALK WITH GOD.—A little girl of five years was left at home by her mother one evening in the care of a servant. When she returned, being informed that her little daughter had not behaved well during her absence, she took her upon her knee, and after gently reproving her, observed that the child began to talk, in a tone too low, however, to be understood. After a short time she asked the little girl what she was talking about, but she refused at the time tell her.

The next evening, when she was again on her mother's knee, after having said her little prayer, as it was her custom to do every night before going to bed, she looked up into her mother's face and said, "Mamma have I been good to-day?"

"Yes," replied the mother, "I think you have been quite a good child to-day."

Said the little girl: "I had a talk with God last night, and I told him I wanted to be good to-day, and I asked him if he would not help me, and he has helped me all day."—Child's Delight.

AN EMBLEM OF CHARITY.—The Egyptian hieroglyphic of charity is very striking—a naked child, with a heart in his hand, giving honey to a bee without wings.

1. A child, humble and meek. (Matthew xviii. 3.)

2. With a heart in his hand, because the heart and the hand of a charitable man must go together; he must be a cheerful giver.

3. Giving honey to a bee—not a drone.

4. To a bee without wings—help only such as would work, but cannot.

Caste in our Public Schools.

Dr. Goldman of the Common Council is the author of the bill, which provides for the appropriation of $60,000 for the education of the colored children of this city in separate schools. The movement is praise-worthy, as it is both needful and just. There are not less than 22,000 educatable colored children in New Orleans, of which number, but a small per centage attend school; and now that they are free, their ignorance will prove a more fruitful source of vice. Sound statemanship, true philanthropy, Christian obligation, demand the careful education of these children. And this duty is imposed upon us no less by the requirements of justice than by a sense of safety. Our colored population are annually taxed for school purposes, and hitherto, their portion of the tax has been equal to one-fifth of the whole amount collected for our public schools, while their own children have been excluded therefrom. This is taxation without representation, and a more shameful instance of legislative robbery is rarely to be met with in the annals of a nation.

But the material point in Dr. Goldman's bill is, it provides for separate schools for colored children. It is a great step forward to have these black children educated at all, and especially out of the public school-fund; but it would be a longer and a safer stride in the path of progress, to ignore all distinctions of race and color, and open the doors of all our schools to all children without regard to complexion or descent. Such a step would be in keeping with the common brotherhood of man, and the present political rights of the freedmen; it would be the realization of Christianity in its simple beauty and race-wide love; it would strike at the root of an ancient evil, and open an new epoch in our national life.

One principal objection is urged against this plan. It is said that our white citizens would take their children from the schools; that they would not allow their sons and daughters to be educated along side of the freedmen's children. Such a result might follow the adoption of a plan for promiscuous schools, and is one to be justly deprecated. But it is one of those objections which spring from prejudice and momentary excitement. In this country we soon become accustomed to the great changes which justice and righteousness effectuate. Before the negroes were emancipated, slaveholders swore that they would not live in a country where negroes are free; but they have wisely concluded that freedom is not so bad as they anticipated, and so they remain. When negro suffrage was first agitated, these same persons declared before high heaven, that they would never degrade themselves to vote with a "nigger;" but we have the impression that these are the same persons who are now so affectionately inviting the negro to vote with them. So when common schools are an accomplished fact, these blustering persons will quietly endorse a measure so righteous and beneficent. We do not believe their children share with them the objection. Children know no prejudice; it is a folly and a vice of riper years. They are all one in the family; they play together in our streets and parks like children of the same father; and they will go to school together as contentedly, until the old folks at home instill into their minds the virus of prejudice.

In the discussion of this really difficult question, it should not be forgotten that the black man is now a citizen in the fullest and highest sense. He has the right to vote and is eligible to every office within the gift of the people. He will doubtless soon be called upon to sit in the same jury-box with his white fellow-citizen; and the time is rapidly approaching when he will occupy his rightful position in every department of secular life. As in the past, so in the future he is to be a part of the population of the South, and it were therefore wise that a continuous but bootless "war of races" be timely averted by the adoption of those measures which will secure to all, their rights, and which will tend to good neighborhood and friendship. In view of these facts, it is the dictate of wisdom to train up the children of the two races so as to avoid causeless antagonisms in the future; and it will be a crown of glory to the South, if the rising generation of whatever color, shall grow up in the full recognition of the common brotherhood of man. There is nothing in this suggestion which even winks at social equality. This is a matter of taste and choice. The law of social affinities flows not out of business and school associations; it is independent of these; it operates where these do not exist.

Considered on the grounds of economy, the city cannot well afford to provide for the separate education of its colored children. It would involve the expense of erecting new schoolhouses and the employment of an unnecessary number of teachers. In many school districts it would be necessary to have two schoolhouses, where one would accommodate all the children, and in some sections of the city, where the colored population is sparse, there would be but a few colored pupils to attend. If Dr. Goldman's plan is adopted, our school tax will be more than doubled. The portion collected from our colored people will not meet the demand. Are the citizens of New Orleans prepared to pay so extravagantly for the gratification of their prejudice? Why build two schoolhouses in the same district, when one will meet the demand? Why employ six teachers, when three will answer? It will also prove a costly precedent. Establish separate schools for the blacks, and you encourage the Catholics, the Jews, and other religious bodies to urge their old claim for a division of the school fund. Their claim being based on a sacred religious faith, will be much stronger in reason than prejudice arising from color. We therefore judge it just, beneficial, and economical to open our public schools to all; but if our honorable Common Council have not advanced far enough in Christian civilization for this, then let them do the next best thing. It were better to have separate schools for the colored children of New Orleans than to have them grow up without the means of education.

Union Teachers.

There are in this city not less than one hundred loyal men and women who for many years earned an honest livelihood by teaching our public schools.—most of them are either Southern-born or, having resided here so long, are entitled to the designation of "old citizens." Lovers of the Union prior to the war, they maintained their political integrity during the fiery ordeal of secession. A nobler band of patriots cannot be found in any other State of the nation. Standing by the flag when others deserted it, and refusing even the semblance of concession to rebellion, they have suffered more for their political sentiments than any other class in our community. Because of their well known loyalty, they were intentionally and wickedly turned out of their positions as teachers, and to-day most of them are destitute and suffering. Where they could, some of them accepted situations as teachers in our colored schools, but for this additional offense to their loyalty they have been refused even a place to board in the Christian city of New Orleans—because they are "teachers in nigger schools." We have heard of one lady who walked three days, through storm and wind, to obtain a boarding place, and was denied admittance everywhere she went. At each place she was asked her avocation, or some one present knew that she taught a freedmen's school for a living.

Language fails us to express our pity for these persecuted, suffering loyalists; and we can find no words to express our sense of contempt for those of our Board of Education who were foremost in expelling these Union teachers from our public schools. History does not give us an example of such political meanness. It is a littleness which belongs exclusively to the years of Grace '66 and '67. It is the "last ditch" of littleness of these little men; and the only "last ditch" they have been able to find. Had these teachers been dismissed for incompetency or inefficiency, or any other reasonable cause, we could not object; but as a rule, they are persons eminently qualified for their work, and not a few of them are the most successful and popular teachers in New Orleans. Consistently loyal themselves, they taught their pupils to sing National songs, respect the "old flag," and love the government of our fathers.—This was their only offense, and for which they are suffering as only rebels ought to suffer.

We call upon the Board of Education to reinstate these teachers. They are bound to do it by every consideration of honor and justice. They dismissed them without cause. As teachers they are in every way competent to fill their positions; their re-instatement is demanded by the spirit of the age, by the Military Bill and by the sentiment of the whole country. We call upon these gentlemen to attend to this matter at once, for we assure them if they do not, a higher power than they will interpose. All that we ask is justice to these loyal and competent teachers, and with this we shall be content.

To Colored Voters.

FIFTH PAPER.

In order to carry out successfully any class of principles there must be unity of effort among supporters of the proposed measures. In Union there is strength; in division weakness and failure. The enormous strength of the late slave power was the unswerving unity existing among the planters. Differ they might in other things, but in steadfast devotion to the institution of human bondage, they were as one. It was their unity in rebellion which made it formidable. It was their skill in centralizing their own forces in the great decisive battles of the war, and throwing their united strength on the weakened columns of the divided union army that gave them so many successes on the battle-field, and so fearfully jeopardized at times the national cause. Not till the armies of the Republic had been equally concentrated, and their vast combined power made to press upon the great rebellion, was it finally borne down before the union arms. So in the conflict of the ballot, the only road to success is union. The road to defeat is to remain divided and aloof.

The object toward which your opponents are now working with untiring energy is to divide your votes. They do not expect, nor do they care to secure the full colored vote. That would bring them under some obligation to you; it would bind them in all fairness to yield to you your rights. This they neither wish nor propose to do. They have no intention of removing any of your disabilities, granting to you any new privileges, or giving you anything like a fair chance in the race of life. They want just enough of your votes to enable them to hold all the offices, share in all the profits, and gather all the spoils, while you, debarred from all noble aspiration, may stand without and satisfy yourselves with the scanty crumbs they may send from their rich tables. They say to you with an affected cordiality that would be amusing were it not for the lurid back ground of tragedy before which the scene is enacted, that "we have always lived together under endeared relations; our interests are the same; we understand you better than any one else, and you can trust us."

It is very true that you have long lived together. Ever since the bloody slaver brought you over the seas, torn from the homes of your fathers, you have been with them, and they have had ceaseless opportunities to do you good. But what have they ever done? When slaves, did they propose to set you free? When growing up in ignorance, did they establish schools for your instruction, or ever allow you the privilege of a book? when impoverished, did they ever propose to sell or lease, or rent to you any portion of their rich estates? when groping in the dark ways of sin, did they ever give you a Bible or build you a church, or allow you ministers of your own people? did they ever, during your long residence with them, attempt your elevation as a people? If not, the less they say about your long residence among them, the better. The same is also true of "the endeared relations." That many of you are nearly "related" to them cannot be denied. You have cousins, and uncles, and aunts, and not a few of you have "fathers according to the flesh" among them. But this, instead of being a plea in their favor, is the sharpest sting planted by slavery in your quivering heart. You can forget the cruel task, the bloody whip, the savage bound, but never can you forget the terrible brutality that by force took your wives for concubines and wrung virtue from your daughters.

And yet these men, unrepentant and unchanged, appeal to past memories and claim with you a special community of interests. O, shame, where is thy blush! Those who had settled it as a maxim that you had no interests "which a white man was bound to respect," are suddenly your special custodians, with interests interlocked with yours. Believe it not.

You live in the South, it is true, but one that is destined to be brighter, purer, and more beautiful than slavery or slave drivers ever knew. It is the South as rapidly passing into the hands of active, loyal, enterprising men. Aye, the men through whom you have become free, the men who have pushed forward the North, threaded it with its net-work of railroads, and who to-day own four-fifths of the wealth of this nation, are rapidly acquiring control of capital, trade, lands, labor, business, position and public sentiment in the South. They will build it up as no planter or factor could do. They will start the country on a track of progress it never ran before. Your interests are with the men on whom the future depends, not with the decaying fossils of the past. And yet rebels under whose hand the prosperity of the country has shrivelled and whose past lives have been a constant robbery of your race, will denounce most fiercely these true friends of the South and of you, as "strangers and adventurers," whom you do not know, and should not trust. But why can you not trust them? Their coming has been to you as if an angel had struck off your chains and bade a new sun arise upon your race. Nor are they strangers.—Your noble dead and theirs sleep together on many ensanguined field. Side by side they stood amid the fierce encounter, and turning back the rebel hordes, reared for you the monument of universal freedom. These "strangers" have proved to be friends indeed. When first you formed their acquaintance a load as heavy as a millstone was upon your heart. Six years have passed, and lo! the shadows have lifted; the day has dawned; the millions of your race lift up their heads amid the light of freedom; broken families come together; your children attend the school; hope springs anew in your heart, and what your brightest fancy never pictured, has come to pass. You now step to the ballot box the peer of the proudest planter in the land; and free as he to vote for the men of your choice.

But forgetful of their lost power, and your own sovereign right, there are still some who would deter you by threats from voting as your judgment and conscience dictate. As gleams the fire from the smitten steel so springs this muttered threat from rebel rage. With many a profession of kindly feeling so long as hope of controlling your vote remains, the glare of the demon reveals their true spirit when they find you true to loyalty and your country.—Such men are not your friends. But you need not fear them. The rebel was not consulted when the ballot was placed in your hands. He need not be consulted as to how you will use it. A mighty nation is at your back, and will protect you. Congress has vested you with the right of suffrage that you might rescue this land at once to liberty. It depends upon colored voters to turn the scale in the coming election between loyalty and rebellion. If untrue to your race, to duty, to loyalty and liberty, the fearful consequences will fall most heavily upon you.

In the field training for the coming struggle are two great political organizations; the one old, traitorous, well-organized and unscrupulous; the other young, fresh, progressive and backed by the patriotic masses. Study well these parties, for with one or the other you must act if you would not throw away your votes. Their platforms, principles and candidates will soon be before you. Find out which is the party of liberty and which the party of oppression; find out which labored to make you free and which fought to keep you slaves; find out which clothed your sons in the uniform of blue, and which murdered them without quarter; above all, find out which placed in your hands the ballot, and intends to keep it there, and which is now trying to take it from you, and when you have found your true friends, rally your whole people to their support. Suffer no divided counsels, act together as one man, allow no man to desert his post, and all will be well.

Editorial Items.

Rev. Dr. Newman will preach in the Hall of the House of Representatives, to-morrow, at 11 o'clock.

Religious services will be held as usual, at Eagle Hall, corner of Prytania and Felicity Sts., tomorrow Evening, at half past seven o'clock.

The Quarterly Conference of the La Harp St. M. E. Church, will be held at said Church on Tuesday evening, May 7th, at seven o'clock.

Eugene Royal, Pastor.

Messrs. Wilson, Kelly, Nye and Pomeroy are coming South to teach the people sound political doctrines. Let us give them a hearty welcome in New Orleans.

Rev. Eugene Royal, pastor of the La Harpe street M. E. Church, reports the conversion of eight persons recently in his charge. He has also a large day school, of which Miss Sarah North is teacher, and a good Sunday school.

A letter of the 22d ult., informs us that a large and interesting union meeting, composed principally of colored people, was held in Houma, on the 20th. About 1500 persons were present. Speeches were made by the colored ministers, Revs. Wm. Merrill and Joseph Nelson. Also by Mr. O'Hare and Mr. Brooks. The purpose of the meeting was to post the colored people on registration, and as to the manner in which they should vote.

The letter further says, "A gentleman of this parish, an ex-rebel officer, tried to take the stand, but did not get it. He said that he was asked by some colored people to speak, but when put before the people to vote on it he did not get but one assenting voice."

We have received a letter from Donaldsonville containing an account of the proceedings of the "Equal Rights Club." At a meeting held on the 20th ult. We have only room for the following resolutions which were passed: First, That we the members of this Club shall cast no vote for any man who is not a member of this Club. Second, That no colored man shall cast a vote for any rebel or rebel sympathizer. That every colored man who may vote, shall secure his ticket from the Equal Rights Club, or some member of the same. Third, That we shall elect to office as many of our own race and our Republican friends as possible. Fourth, That no colored man of this parish shall support as a candidate for office, any man who has been an enemy to our party.

Rev. S. M. Small, writing from Alexandria, informs us that his church is now completed, and that on Easter Sabbath they occupied it for sevices, and had a great day. A sort of a Sabbath school jubilee was held in the morning, and in the afternoon the house was again crowded at the preaching services. The pastor preaching from Neb. 4:6. "For the people had a mind to work." Seven adults and two children were baptized, and fourteen persons taken into the church.

The church will be dedicated as soon as the presiding Elder can visit Alexandria.

Registration.

Up to April 30,10,699 persons had registered themselves in New Orleans, of whom 2,612 are white, and 8,687 are colored.

Some strange things occur daily in the office of registration. The other day an old slaveholder desired to register. The registrars were in doubt whether he could qualify, and hesitated. The usual questions were put, but still there was a doubt. Directly behind him was a negro, whom he at once recognized as his former slave. "Here," said he, "is a man who knows me;" and on the testimony of the former slave the old master was allowed to register. It was a scene.

An elderly man of a Celtic cast of countenance, and bearing what Rory O'More would call "a responsible bit of a stick," presented himself before the registrars. After the usual questions which are asked all white applicants, and which were answered more or less satisfactorily, he was asked if he had not supported the rebellion. "What's that?" said he, with a twinkle of the eye, "support the rebellion? Shure all the neighbors knows, when ould Butler cum to the city, I had to go to Algiers and borrow a wee sack of yellow meal to support me family, and how the divil could I be after supporting the rebellion—and such a big one, too—shure you know better!" Mr. Leahy got his certificate and went on his way rejoicing.

Picnic of the Wesley Chapel Day-School.—The large school which is under the patronage of Wesley Chapel, held a picnic on the first of May, under the direction of Robert W. Bowie, the enterprising secretary of the church. It was held on their vacant lot between Poydras and Perdido Sts. A large platform had been laid and ample canvass awnings erected to shelter all from the sun. The exercises consisted of singing, speeches, declamations, dialogues, &c., and were truly interesting. These were followed by a sumptuous repast of cakes, fruits, ice cream, &c.

A good congregation was present to see and hear. Among them were numbers of whites. Mr. Mount, President of the board of school director, and some of his coadjutors were in attendance.

Mr. Mount informed them that they would soon have public schools to attend.

We are glad to see so much enterprise manifested among the colored people on the subject of education. And we hope they will ever remember the adage "knowledge is power."

Young Men.

At no period in life is wholesome advice so greatly needed, or so likely to be neglected or despised, as in youth. Like the bullock unaccustomed to the yoke, the young are impatient of restraint. Too often wise in its own conceit, youth cares not for the counsels of age, and, conscious of generous purposes, it cannot brook reproof. Without an experience in the past, regardless of the future, it is all engrossed in the present. Allured by pleasure, inspired by hope, impelled by desire, with an undisciplined ardor, and at an immoderate rate it dashes away in the race of life. Prompt to chose, it makes decisions in a moment which are to effect a life-time, an eternity, without considering whether it be for weal or woe. Impatient of delay, it cannot stop to think; untaught by experience, it is confiding, even to a fault; unacquainted with danger, it is rash in its adventures; unrestrained by disappointment, it is headstrong in its career.

But while we have no particular purpose to pen prolonged platitudes for the perusal of the peculiar class of persons mentioned, we would, if possible, impress upon their minds some very plain and practical truths, which cannot be too frequently repeated, until they become more thoroughly understood and appreciated. It is, however, due many of this class to whom we write to say, they form exceptions to the general rule: Not waiting for their own sad history to teach them philosophy, they have learned its lessons in the example of others, in whom they have traced the crimes of ripe years to the follies of youth, and the misfortunes and miseries of age, to the inexperience and presumption of earlier years. And warned by the way ward lives of others, they have early been made wise in reference to their own, and are practicing these principles of wisdom and sound morality enjoined alike by common sense and interest, by reason and revelation. Already have they recognized the Divine Hand in the affairs of men and nations, in their prosperity and adversity, and seriously pondered the inexorable law ruling alike the physical and moral worlds: "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." They see in their own lives youth, manhood, and age bearing to each other the same relations as do Spring, Summer and Autumn in nature, and remember that if the Spring put forth no blossoms, there will be no beauty in summer, and no fruit in autumn.

They have traced the invariable connection between vice and misery, virtue and happiness, self-improvement and future usefulness, industry and prosperity, honesty and honor, character and destiny, and have resolved to sow good seed unsparingly, to cultivate it diligently, and await the harvest patiently. And they shall have their reward. Already they have gathered the "first fruits" of the coming abundance. Their present is auspicious, their future will be glorious. May they steadily pursue their well begun way!

But there are others for whom we write.—Young men whose characters are not formed, whose life decisions are not made, and who are yet indifferent to duty and destiny. How can they remain listless when they remember that upon the young men of to-day depend the success or failure of all the great social, civil, moral and material interests of the future? This vast responsibility is theirs by a solemn destiny as inevitable as fate. They cannot escape it. How will they meet it? Heirs-apparent, they succeed to the thrones and estates of the future. Governed and learning now, they must teach and govern the race then. The press, the bar, the pulpit; society, science, commerce; art, literature, and religion, will all be in their possession. They are to wield the mighty power, fill the high places of honor and trust, control the destiny and meet all the exigencies of the coming age. And history will record how they do it.

And among the young men of to-day, (alas! that we must say it), are to be found the predestined successors of all who now wield an immoral influence and fill positions of dishonor, shame and infamy. Who are they? Shall the reader be one? Heaven save you from such a history! But remember, if the perjured villains; the nameless assassins, and murderers; the hateful, heartless traitors; the base and brutal leaders of their kind; and all the guilty horde of loathsome, terrible, demented, and demonized humanity of to-day are to have successors, the young men of to-day must fill their places. Solemn thought! And yet the awful idea that should appal every heart, falls powerless and inefficient because of its hackneyed truism. We cannot stop here to enforce it. Time flies, and rapid years make haste to bear you on, and unseen hands busily prepare for your coronation in virtue or vice, in honor or infamy. Your destiny depends mainly upon your own decision. Man is the maker of immortal fate, and do you hesitate in your choice of crowns? Silently but certainly, imperceptibly but decisively, deliberately but irrevocably, your very delay is choosing for you.

Some have chosen the good part that shall never be taken from them; others are yet undecided, but can give no reason for halting between two opinions, while others, still, have made their election sure, and in the error of their way have madly chosen death: They are idle, intemperate, licentious, profane.

Around these central cluster a horde of subordinate vices, too numerous to mention, but any one of which is sufficient to blast reputation and character, and destroy in an hour the labor of a life-time. Regardless of the claims of family and society, of God and humanity, they rush to ruin. Under the combined influences of a debased public sentiment and debauched society, corrupt companions, bad books, sinful pleasures and amusements, these young men "commit uncleanliness with greediness, and glory in their shame." The corruption of youth is the crime of the age, and the wide extent to which it prevails is one of the most alarming signs of the times. The very early age at which the young become adepts in crime is remarkable. The very ardor of youth adds impetus to their career. Boys yet in their teens are old in vice, as our work-houses, jails, and penitentiaries attest. They press eagerly on in the "broad way," as if in haste to reach hell! Over two years ago we witnessed the execution, for murder, of two boys not 20 years old. One of them made a confession, which, for the sake of the moral instruction it conveys to young men, we propose publishing next week in the ADVOCATE.

Meanwhile, if any young man wishes to escape from the slavery of vice, let him break off his sins by righteousness, and his iniquity by turning to God: Give up idleness for honest labor, swearing for praying, bad company for good, bad books for the Bible. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts—above all, abandon the harlot, and the intoxicating bowl forever—cease to do evil, learn to do well. Serve God with a perfect heart and a willing mind—if thou seek him, he will be found of thee, and will abundantly pardon. To those in love with their sins we can only say as God says: "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth; walk thou in the ways of thy heart, and in the sight of thine eyes; but know thou that for all these things, God will bring thee into judgment."

His law is over thee, his love is lavished upon thee, and his own hand would guide thee: But if his goodness does not lead thee to repentance, but after thy hard and impenitent heart treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath; remember, that day shall come—God's eye is upon thee, his providence shall pursue thee, and his justice will overtake thee, and thou shalt mourn at the last, when thy flesh, and thy body are consumed, and say: "How have I hated instruction, and my heart despised reproof; I have not obeyed the voice of my teachers, nor inclined my ear unto those who instructed me!" And regret, recrimination, and remorse, shall be thy unavailing portion forever.

Corinth is a name that will live in American as well as Grecian history. The rebel army fell back here after the battle of Shiloh. They evacuated the place soon afterwards, though it was strongly fortified. A very hard battle was fought here in October, 1862, which resulted in an important Union victory, and gave Gen. Rosecranz a military reputation which the greater battles of Stone River and Chickamauga did not improve. The mementoes of those days still exist in the miles of heavy earthworks on all the surrounding elevations. These being built of a compact red clay, will stand almost as long as a brick wall, and unless leveled down by the hand of man, will last for centuries. Around all these are promiscuously scattered the graves of soldiers who died of disease or were killed in battle—These are now being disinterred and buried in the National Cemetery here. The graves are numbered, and so far the names of most of them are ascertained, and the records so kept that the grave of any particular soldier can be designated at any future time, but many of them are marked "unknown," and so must remain until the reville of the eternal morning and roll-call of the Judgment Day. Still it is a comfort to know that these nameless men shall have a grave respected and cared for by the country they died to save.

The town has been mostly built or rebuilt since the war, which gives it a new and thriving appearance. Surrounded by a pleasant country and at the crossing of two important railroads it has good prospects of future growth. Some enterprising capitalist might make a good thing by building a railroad from here to the Tennessee river—only eighteen miles—and cutting off the longer railroad freights from Columbus Ky., or Memphis.

Our church at Corinth is rather weak, and we cannot speak as well of them as we would like to. They don't take the Advocate there. Few of them can read, and they are generally poor. Several white men spoke favorably of the general conduct of the colored people, and so far as I learned, the general feeling towards them is very good. We continued our quarterly meeting a few nights and a few persons professed faith in Christ. Brother Hamilton, a minister of the Church, South, is teaching a school in the church, and apparently laboring very faithfully for their interest. In going from Corinth to Holly Springs we saw more signs of industry than we had before for a long time. Many of your readers may scarcely believe me, but it is true that I saw a white man plowing with a round sleek horse, and a leather collar and back band. The standard team is a mule whose hair is mostly turned wrong way, and hip bones projecting three inches beyond the line of sides, and ribs so distinct, they can be counted while going by on a railroad train; harness, shuck collar and gunny-bag back band, and two chains—We recovered from our surprise on learning that we had crossed the line and got into the loyal State of Tennessee An old gentlemen on the cars lamented the unfortunate condition of affairs under Brownlow's rule; and said they could not be any worse. We told him we had not seen such signs of prosperity for many months, and assured him that the great question in the unreconstructed States was not one of politics, but was whether the people were going to make a living or starve to death. A few miles above Holly Springs we saw a field of wheat. Some one means to be independent of Yankee flour.

At Holly Springs we found our brethren doing well. The large church was full of people three times on Sunday, and they got there in good time. Rev. Mr. Foster, of the Cumberland Presbyterian church, preached a good sermon in the afternoon, and assisted us in the administration of the Sacrament. He is going North soon to solicit aid for the poor of his county, and if any of our friends up there meet him we would commend him to their favor. We had twenty-seven additions to the church, and on Sunday night about fifty were forward for prayer. We sold out our stock of hymn-books and got some subscribers for the Advocate, and on the whole were well pleased with our first visit to Holly Springs.

The school under Capt. Gill and his lady, and Miss Dyer, is well conducted and prosperous. These teachers have contended with much opposition, and been threatened and ordered away, but have staid through it all, and worked faithfully for the education of the children for small pay. They deservedly have the confidence and esteem of the colored people.

The town, once a pretty place, was much injured by the war, but is being to a considerable extent rebuilt. The country is pleasant in appearance, climate fine and water good. We think northern Mississippi will soon offer many inducements to that class of northern people who desire a home in a warmer climate.

General News.

WASHINGTON, April 29, 1867.—The Supreme Court has decided that the city corporation must pay the internal revenue tax on gas consumed in the public lamps.

Twelve boxes of presents for President Johnson, Secretary Seward, and General Grant have been received by the Japanese ambassadors to day. Among the presents is a splendid sword for General Grant. It is of elaborate workmanship. The Commissioners will wait for Mr. Seward's return before presenting the presents.

The President has ordered an investigation of the navy yard, Treasury Department, etc.

Jeff. Davis' trial is set for next week in Richmond. A further postponement is expected. A motion to admit Davis to trial will be made. It is believed that President Johnson will take the responsibility to release him, under his military power, if there should be further postponement ordered by the court.

Thurlow Weed and other politicians are trying to prevent the proposed tour of the President to Raleigh and the South. They are said to be afraid that his speeches will favor the South.

COLUMBIA, S. C., April 29. Another meeting of whites and negroes was held to-day, and was largely attended. Gov. Orr addressed the meeting in a speech of an hour's length, giving the colored men advice as to their political and social duties, and urging that they should all at present, neither attach themselves to the Democratic or Republican parties, but to await and array themselves on the platform of a national Union party, that could be occupied in common by both races and all the people of the North, counselled moderation and patience, and promised that, provided the negroes did their duty, the people of the South would see them educated and secured in all the privileges of freedmen.

The committee on resolutions consisted of thirteen whites and blacks.

A conservative platform was unanimously adopted.

It provides for free schools for the education of all children, and the revision of the civil and criminal code of the State.

After the resolutions, a speech was made by Rev. Wm. Turner, colored, of Washington, D. C.

Speeches were made by ex-Mayor Hon. J. Gibbs, and several other citizens. Good feeling prevailed.

FOREIGN.

The Times has received intelligence of a very important character from Mexico, which, if true, would seem to indicate the final overthrow of Maximilian and his whole party in Mexico. It says:

We have startling and important news from Mexico, through private sources, which we regard as reliable.

Another battle has occurred near the beleaguered city of Queretaro, the final result of which was the defeat and complete disorganization of the Imperial forces and killing of its leader, the Mexican General Miramon.

After the fight, the city of Queretaro was at once occupied by the Liberals, and a vigilant search was made for the person of Maximilian but without discovering that empireless Emperor. Max. is, doubtless, by a secret flight, endeavoring to reach the protection of the American flag.

It is not probable that Maximilian will be treated otherwise than as an ordinary prisoner of war, should he have the misfortune to be captured.

Loyalty.

NO. II.

Within the last twenty days the writer has seen quite a number of persons, and many of his friends and visitors are quite profuse in their declarations of loyalty. We are told the same spirit is manifested in the interior, and that recent events have developed the somewhat startling intelligence that a majority of the people are real unconditional Unionists. It is indeed very strange that in a country where loyalty so abounds that any active effort ever could originate to destroy the glorious Union under whose banner so many thousands to-day are dwelling in peace and honor. And still stranger that such a gigantic war could have been carried on for four years against the Government by a people who are now presenting so many loyal antecedents.

The truth is, this outspoken loyalty is not the genuine article, and our authorities will so understand it. Many gentlemen have told us that they are among the distranchised class, who claim for themselves the most undoubted Union antecedents. We would be much obliged to be allowed to call these soi disant loyalists to the stand and ask them a few questions in regard to their loyalty. That there is true loyalty in the South, no man doubts, but its manifestations are like angel's visits, few and far between.

As we cannot interrogate the witnesses, allow us at least, to offer this numerous class a small portion of advice.

Many of our friends suppose that to have voted against secession constitutes the ne plus ultra of loyalty; but this will not do at all; it is no recommendation to any man to say or prove that he simply voted against secession, and then, when that act was consummated, he assumed an office under the enemy and lent the weight of his influence to destroy his old country's life. Away with such pseudo loyalty. Your country expects something more at your hands than the mere casting of your ballot for her political salvation. If you were loyal you must have been severely persecuted; you must have suffered something for your country's sake. But if you have not, if your record reaches no further than your vote, and your subsequent action and influence, and sympathies were with the rebels, then as a friend we would advise you not to parade your antecedents in pompous display, and strive to obtain Republican support upon such a frail foundation. Better to avow yourself a secessionist than a change of views. A political conversion may have changed your entire feelings, and made you a new man. Far better this than for you to have been a Unionist and made shipwreck of your faith, to have merely stood silently by, and after casting a righteous vote, to have armed and aided the rebellion in destroying the life of the nation you, to-day, profess so much to admire.

The Union renegade must have believed he owed his allegiance to the United States, but when secession was il fait accompli, he mildly turns around and voluntarily arms himself against his alma mater, and strives for years to ruin her, and at last, when the heroic valor of her soldiers rescues the old bleeding land from the tyrannic grasp of the usurper, he turns blandly round and desires a compound at once for all his political sins by (to him) the consoling reflection that I was an original Union man.

If you are a lover of our glorious old Union, I've sympathized with you, and we love you as a worker, and hail you as a fellow-laborer in the great work of rehabilitation. There is work for all of us to do, and let me tell you how you can now aid your country. Cease prating about your ancient loyalty and go to work. Down with the rebel pictures from your walls; let the blood stained field of Manassas be no longer your Marathon, nor Robert E. Lee, your Miltiades. Let rebel prints cease their hebdomadal visits to your postoffices, and let not the dirk of defamation be forever directed at the Republican Congress. Accept in the fullest terms, the propositions offered you for reconstruction, and above all, cease to abuse and condemn the poor freedman, and sigh no more for the re-establishment of his dark house of bondage; and further, join no rebel cliques to influence the freedman's vote, and to wrest his ballot to his own destruction. Stand by the good and true Union men of the land and all will be well.

Your political salvation is in your own hands, and it is left for you to work out that salvation with fear and trembling.

One word more and we have done. If you really wish the support and smiles of the Congress, whose mandate now is the fiat of destiny, you must support it and sustain it.

Do all this and all will be well. None then will doubt your loyalty. You will have then become one of that great Union party, whose patriotism sustained the nation when hope was sinking in despair, and whose valor bore her eagle flag to victory, when the last rebel flag went down, never to rise again. Then may you hope for rest, for comfort and consolation.

Come then one, come all true friends of the Great Republic, work, aid and encourage the good work of rehabilitation, and then peace shall dwell within your walls and prosperity within your palaces.

NUMBER XI.

Pensive evening's gray twilight was rapidly deepening into night and the hour was growing holy in its stillness. Only occasionally could be heard the far-off bark of a dog as it mingled with the clear sweet vesper song of the whippoorwill, the only sounds that broke the repose of the quiet hour.

"I love thee, Twilight! for thy gleams impart
Their dear, their dying influence to my heart,
When o'er the harp of thought thy passing wind
Awakens all the music of the mind,
And joy and sorrow, as the spirit burns,
And hope and memory sweep the chords by turns."

The dews were falling when we retired from our seats amid the green grass and flowers in and around the doorway to the sitting-room. After the evening devotions Papa, wearied with the toil of the day, reclined in the old arm-chair. With what feelings of veneration a child looks upon a noble father, who is ever true as the needle to the pole. It was with something akin to adoration that I remembered his unchanging love, as I bathed his head until he fell asleep in his chair, and recalled the words of the Psalmist who said: "Like as a father pitieth his children so the Lord pitieth them that fear him." Our Father was now over three-score years, somewhat enfeebled by ill health, still retaining all his vigor of mind and heart. Of him it could be said as in the proverb. "The hoary head is a crown of glory if found in the way of righteousness," for the head of a good man whitens on its approach to heaven as the mountain blends its snowy summit in the eternal blue beyond it.

Mama turned and said to us girls in a low tone of voice, "while Papa is resting we will spend an hour or two in paring and cutting apples for drying." In a few moments a large wooden tray was adjusted in the middle of the room containing the apples, and each of us with a tin basin filled with the ripe fruit and a sharp knife were soon paring off cycle after cycle from the golden apples; next quartering, coring and slicing ready for drying the next day.

In those days many of our neighbors had what were called apple-parings, when the fruit was brought in by the bushel basket, and all the boys and girls in the neighborhood gathered together to enjoy a gay old time; but the reports from these gatherings invariably were, that the apples were not well pared nor cored; that the gay and festive group had been more interested in sports and certain tricks, such as whirling the unbroken paring of an apple around the head twice and letting it fall the third time to form the first letter of a lover's name; or counting the seeds of a red apple of certain dimensions, which must spell the lover's entire name. We were never indulged in any of these parties, neither were we allowed to attend them, having no brothers at home to accompany us; and moreover, Pa and Ma did not consider them particularly elevating to social or religious enjoyment. Thus we pared our own apples for drying, and the time employed was always spent in pleasant chit chat. On this evening, Florence having just placed her knife in a fine round apple, said, "dear Mama, do please tell us something of your early life." "Oh, yes," added Agnes, "how charming it will be to listen while we work." It was difficult for Mama to refuse, for all five put in the same plea. She had many a time entertained us for hours with glowing descriptions of her Itinerant life, which occurred before our recollections; but somehow her silence in regard to her childhood and girlhood had led me to infer that perchance a shadow had fallen upon it; but now we were to listen to the whole story, for five voices chimed in, "Do, Mama; commence from your first recollection, when you were a little girl." Our Mother had a beautiful way of being firm, united with a sweet repose of spirit which I would give the world to possess, I sometimes think. At this moment a tear glistened in her mild blue eye, rendering her voice, if possible, more musically sweet, for it was evident the depths of her soul were stirred and this tear drop was its index as she recalled years, if not buried in the past, had been hushed into silence by the sterner duties of many succeeding years. "The first scene my recollection suggests," said she, "I was standing beside the dying bed of a lovely being which my little throbbing heart told me was my Mother. I was only three years old, still I recall it vividly. In this first grief of my young life, it seemed to me my heart was leaving me with the sad tears I shed when I gazed on her pale face, and I was told that this mysterious stillness was death I was informed, as I grew older, that two tiny flowers (twin sisters of mine) which drooped and died a few moments after the light of this world shone upon them, destroyed the parent stem, and all were together transplanted in God's beautiful Garden above—and I was left motherless and sisterless; I had three noble brothers left me, older than myself. For many, many years afterward, I could not solve the problem why it was that this cruel blow did not consign me also to the grave of my mother; but since grace has wrought upon my heart, I have wonderingly admired the wisdom of the All-Father, in tempering the wind to the shorn lamb, and I have imagined that perchance the spirit eye of my Mother, undimmed by Earth's film, was permitted to watch over my unfolding years—for many were the gentle hands reached out to "the Motherless." My Father was to me all that the tenderest devotion and affection could render him. As I was the youngest, and only daughter, I became the pet, if not the idol of my three older brothers; more than these, my Mother's eldest sister, aunt Reid, as I always called her, became my foster mother. Heaven be praised for the many dear aunts of motherless childhood, who cling with unvarying kindness to the bereft offspring of brothers and sisters. In two or three years my Father again married—a person who had been in our family a great deal, and one I was by no means fond of; but as I had, since the death of my Mother, been the acknowledged pet, if not by this time the five year old Lady Superior of the entire household, and as she had never interfered with my rights, none knew of my dislike for her; but when she came to us in this new relation, I well remember of asserting my childish dignity by exclaiming, 'Beck shan't be my mother!' but one look from her at this time caused my scepter of power to fall from my hand, and the sovereign right to reign was no longer mine.

My step-mother proved to be a good housekeeper, but naturally high tempered, and fond of reading novels." Mama could proceed no further, and looking up to us, said, "Daughters, I cannot lift the vail that long ago I drew over those years, for I may have been a stubborn, petted, spoiled child, more to blame than she was. Her spirit is now with God, who is the Judge, and I wish to hold her name sacred in respect to my beloved and honored Father, whose untimely death I recall only with a shudder. He was standing in a crowd, gazing at a beautiful and favorite horse as he passed, and just as he came opposite my Father, he became restive and kicked, hitting him and killing him instantly. This occurred, however, years after I left home, and long before my step-mother died. I recall but one instance that my Father ever punished me, and then it was at the suggestion of my step-mother; as soon as he did it he took me up, and pressed me fondly to his bosom, sobbing far deeper down in his heart than I did, and whispered lovingly amid his tears, 'You poor child, I will never whip you again.' As I grew older, a good deal of hard work and care devolved upon me, but I learned to love the children of this mother that came to us one after another, while they seemed to look up to me as their best friend, young as I was.

Years before, we had left our early home in Sharon, Conn., where I was born, and were now living in a somewhat new country, in central New York. My older brothers left home greatly to my sorrow; still, with true brotherly devotion they continued their watchful care over me, and when they saw that the household duties were far too arduous for one so young, they made arrangements for me to leave home. I was then fourteen years old, and when aunt Ried and brothers intimated their intentions to my Father—while he knew this plan was for my best interests yet he sighed, saying 'They have left me themselves, and now they will take away my Benjamin; this will bring my gray hairs with sorrow to the grave.' My step-mother, learning of this plan, interfered and would not let me go; so I was compelled to labor on for years afterward."

The apples had disappeared from the tray and the clock was striking ten, when Mama said, "We must retire, and I will relate the rest at some future time."

EVANGELINE.

According to the Superintendent of Public Instruction there are now one round million of scholars attending the free schools of New York.

THE HOLY SEPULCHER AT JERUSALEM.—The friendly arrangement between the three powers for the reconstruction of Holy Sepulcher at Jerusalem has given general satisfaction throughout the East. The sultan has made a point of asserting his authority as territorial sovereign and as a monarch ruling over several millions of Christians, by insisting upon bearing his share of the necessary expenditures of late years. The dilapidated condition of the building has caused serious accidents: worshippers in the interior of the church have been injured by stones falling from the dome.

SCHOOL MEETING.—A letter from Aberdeen, Miss., of the 13th inst, brings us information of a large meeting held among the colored people of that place, to confer together upon their educational interests.

Our informant says, that they came from all parts of the country to the number of 800 The meeting was one of interest. Speeches were made by Rev. Moses Adams, Pastor of the M. E. Church, by Joseph Collins and Aaron Moore.

Their purpose is to co-operate with the Freedmen's Aid Society of the M. E. Church.

Another meeting is to be held on the 20th inst, when they propose making subscriptions towards building a school house.

We hope that success may atten their efforts. And we hope too, that their interest and zeal in educational matters may never, les-en; for without education they never will be able to properly discharge their duties as citizens.

MARRIED.

April 25, 1867, by Rev. E. P. Royal, Philip Gray, to Miss Rose Cross, both of St. Mary's Parish, La.

Information Wanted.

We hope that pastors among the colored people will read, in their public congregations, the inquiries for relatives and friends which appear each week in the ADVOCATE. By so doing, much information may be elicited which would otherwise not be obtained.

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Information wanted of James Bell, who came to New Orleans from Henderson, Ky., about seventeen years ago. Supposed to have lived on Basin street, keeping a grocery store. Apply to FREEDMEN'S BUREAU, 154 Julia street, N. O.

Information wanted by Kittie Steveson concerning her two brothers Henry and Bartley Washington, who belonged in Winchester Va. to a Mr John Corbyn They were brought to this country about 30 years ago; also her sister Lucy Address Kitty Steveson, care of Mrs. H M. Roberts, Franklin, La.

Orleans Parish, Right Bank—W. H. Seymour, Thomas Kenefec and Georg Herbert.

Each member of the Board of Registers, before commencing his duties, will file in the office of the Assistant Inspector General at these headquarters, the oath required in the sixth section of the act referred to, and be governed in the execution of his duty by the provisions of the first section of that act—faithfully administering the oath therein prescribed to each person registered.

Boards of Registers will immediately select suitable officers, within their respective districts, having reference to convenience and facility of registration, and will enter upon their duties on the day designated. Each Board will be entitled to two clerks. Office hours for registration will be from 8 o'clock till 12 A. M., and from 4 till 7 P. M.

When elections are ordered, the Board of Registers for each district will designate the number of polls, and the places where they shall be opened in the election precincts within its district—appoint the commissioners and other

2. In obedience to the directions contained in the first section of the law of Congress, entitled "An Act supplemental to an Act entitled 'An Act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States,'" the registration of the legal voters, according to that law in the parish of Orleans, will be commenced on the 15th inst., and must be completed by the 15th of May.

The four municipal districts of the City of New Orleans, and the parish of Orleans, right bank, (Algiers,) will each constitute a registration district. Election precincts will remain as at present constituted.

The following appointments of Boards of Registers is hereby made—to continue in office until further orders, viz:

First District—John A. Roberts, William Baker and W. M. Geddes.

officers, necessary for properly conducting the elections, and will superintend the same.

They will also receive from the commissioners of elections of the different precincts the result of the vote, consolidate the same, and forward it to the Commanding General.

Registers and all officers connected with elections will be held to a rigid accountability, and will be subject to trial by Military Commission for fraud, or unlawful, or improper conduct in the performance of their duties. Their rate of compensation and manner of payment will be in accordance with the provisions of sections 6 and 7 of the supplemental act.

Brevet Brig. Gen. J. W. Forsyth, Assistant Inspector General of the Fifth Military District, is hereby directed to supervise the Board of Registration for the parish of Orleans, to listen to and adjust, or refer to this office all just causes of complaint. He is authorized to employ such experts as may be necessary to detect fraud in registration or elections.

Every male citizen of the United States twenty-one years old and upward, of whatever race, color or previous condition, who has been a resident in the State of Louisiana for one year and parish of Orleans for three months previous to the date at which he presents himself for registration, and who has not been disfranchised by act of Congress or for felony at common law, shall, after having taken and subscribed the oath prescribed in the first section of the act herein referred to, be entitled to be, and shall be, registered as a legal voter in the parish of Orleans and State of Louisiana.

Pending the decision of the Attorney General of the United States on the question as to who are disfranchised by law, Registers will give the most rigid interpretation to the law, and exclude from registration every person about whose right to vote there may be a doubt. Any person so excluded, who may, under the decision of the Attorney General be entitled to vote, shall be permitted to register after that decison is received—due notice of which will be given.

MEDICAL.

DR. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,
127 CARONDELET STREET,
Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.
This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic, and Acute
Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.
It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient, that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."
Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years, in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, instifying him in promising the cure of the patient, if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.
His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.
One or two hours spent at the institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering often life.
N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet Street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city
☞ Consultation free—stamps not "forgotten."

MASON & HAMLIN,
MANUFACTURERS OF
CABINET ORGANS,
ALSO
PORTABLE ORGANS,
ADAPTED TO SECULAR AND SACRED MUSIC, FOR DRAWING-ROOMS, CHURCHES, SUNDAY AND DAY SCHOOLS, LODGES, &C., &C.

Uniting to a considerable extent the capacity of the Piano Forte with that of the Pipe-Organ, and costing much less than either.
They occupy little space; are elegant as furniture; not liable to get out of order, and are securely boxed, so that they can be sent anywhere by ordinary freight routes, all ready for use.
Forty Styles, plain or elegant cases; one to twelve stops; Prices, $75, $90, $110, $125, $130, $1 0, $150, $160, $170, $200, $225, $250, $300, $435, $540, $550, $600, and upwards.
The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs were introduced four years since, and are a great improvement upon the Melodeon, Harmonium, and other reed organs, greatly excelling them especially in the excellent quality and variety of their tones; in power and quickness of action, and capacity for expression.

THEIR SUCCESS HAS BEEN ENTIRELY BEYOND PRECEDENT,
and proves how greatly such an instrument was needed. Again and again the manufactrers have been compelled to double their manufacturing facilities, until they have been increased six-fold. From the most eminent of the musical profession, the most distinguished pianists, organists, composers, and musical directors, the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs have received an amount and degree of commendation never before bestowed upon any similar musical instrument. More than two hundred and fifty of the most eminent musicians in the country have given written testimonials to the value of the improvements contained in them, and that they excel all other instruments of this class.
FIFTY-TWO GOLD OR SILVER MEDALS, or other highest Premiums have been awarded to Mason & Hamlin for the important improvements effected by them, and for the
SUPERIORITY OF THEIR INSTRUMENTS TO ALL OTHERS.
Constantly exhibiting their instruments in competition with others, they have been awarded the highest premium in every instance, but three or four.
For churches, sunday schools, etc., the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs are the instruments long wanted, of the very best quality, abundant power, not too expensive, nor liable to get out of order.
For private use, in drawing-rooms, &c. they are not less desirable, and are finding a place in the musical families of the principal cities.
They are adapted to a wider range of music than the piano, being fitted for all sacred music and for much secular music, while their quickness of action is such that the most lively, rapid music can be played on them. Then their cost is greatly less, as well as their liability to get out of order.

BRIEF EXTRACTS FROM OPINIONS OF DISTINGUISHED MUSICIANS.
I should think they would become very much sought after as part of instruments as well as for public performance.—Sigismond Thalberg, the world-renowned Pianist. Sure to find its way into every household of taste and refinement which can possibly afford its moderate expenses. Far superior to everything of its class I have seen.—L. M. Gottschalk, the eminent Pianist. Such pure musical tones; promptness and smoothness of action and fine variety of effect, I have not found in any other instrument of the class.—S. B. Mills, the eminent Pianist. Really so excellent that there can hardly be much difference of opinion respecting them.—William Mason, the eminent Pianist. The best instrument of its class with which I am acquainted, and worthy a place in every drawing room. Harry Sanderson, the eminent Pianist. In every respect far superior to everything I have ever seen of the kind, whether in Europe or America.—Geo. Washbourne Morgan the eminent organist, N. Y. I can only reiterate what so many in the musical profession have said, that for equality, promptness and exquisite tone, they are unequalled.—John H. Wilcox, the eminent Organist, Boston. Surpasses everything in this line I have ever seen, whether French or American.—Jon Zundel, the eminent Organist, N. Y. The best reed instruments in the world are made in the United States, and your Cabinet Organs are greatly superior, and by far the best made here.—Max aretzer, Musical Conductor, N. Y. Far surpasses all other similar instruments, which have come under my observation.—Carl Zerhau, Musical Conductor, Boston. Exceeds in my estimation every other instrument of this general class. Thos. Hastings. I can recommend them with confidence.—Lowell Mason. As soon as the people become acquainted with the superior merits of your instruments, your only trouble will be to supply the demand.—Wm. B. Bradbury. I have never seen anything of the kind which interested me so much.—Geo. F. Root. Exciting much interest in musical circles, and already becoming the fashion. N. Y. Home Journal. The highest accomplishment of industry in this department. This is not only our opinion, but the unanimous verdict of the organists.—Boston Advertiser. A glorious instrument for the temple service, so readily secured as to be available for any congregation, and effective and beautiful as to meet the desires of the most refined and fastidious.—N. Y. Observer.
The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs must not be confounded with other reed instruments, from which they vary essentially, their superiority veing largely derived from PATENTED IMPROVEMENTS, which cannot be employed by other makers. Among them are,
The AUTOMATIC BELLOWS SWELL, patented, a most important invention, and greatly the best swell ever devised being much more effective and easily used than any other. The variety and beauty of effect of which it is capable, can not be appreciated except from actual use. The many attempts to imitate or find a substitute for this swell, prove its value. None of them, however, approach it in excellence and simplicity.
IMPROVED SELF-ADJUSTING VALVES patented, secure much more perfect action, durability, and freedom from liability to get out of order.
WOOD'S OCTAVE COUPLET patented, in effect nearly doubles the power of the instrument in which it is used.
NOISELESS SAFETY VALVES patented, prevent the hissing sound often heard.
The IMPROVED COMBINATION REGISTER patented, gives of great facility in drawing stops.

Poetry.

Life and Heart-Work to God Belong.

The day is gone that's scarce begun,
Counting its labors, one by one,
I wonder at so little done.

And days like this make months and years,
Until the past of life appears
A sinful waste, unchanged by tears.

As power to do is nothing less
Than Duty's call, I must confess
My weakness, or my idleness.

While pleased with daily changing scenes,
And drunken with the wine of dreams,
Then life is to me as it seems.

But quiet hours bring dull, slow pain,
Unrest of soul, that fails to gain
The good it sees, and would attain.

Power to conquer self seems fled,
As if for time were closely wed
The living wish with purpose dead.

A broken staff when needed most
Is "strength of will," my former boast.
Leaning thereon, I suffer loss.

Complaining thoughts are some of these Answers to conscience, to appease
While yielding to the love of ease.

Spirit, awake! Effort is health!
Indolence undermines by stealth,
Barring you out from untold wealth.

Sustained by love of God within,
Patience and energy will win
Together, victory over sin.

Heart and life-work to God belong!
Pray! then weak purposes grow strong!
Lo! then begins the harvest song!

The Good Work.—It may be an encouragement to the friends of true Methodism in the Southwest, to let them know through their own proper organ what we are doing in this part of the Southern vineyard. When we organized our Mission District in Atlanta, a little more than a year ago, we scarcely dreamed of the blessed results of the labors of the less than a dozen missionaries sent forth from that "upper chamber" in the "Gate City." We had not at that time a single member, if we except a society at Huntsville, Ala., which was organized about that time. Since then we have gathered within the old maternal fold not less than seven thousand members, one-third of them whites, and there are now about eighty zealous laborers in the field. Let not the friends of truth and right be discouraged. With such results in so short a period, we may well "thank God and take courage."

Bishop Clark has done a noble work for this part of the South, in putting "the right man in the right place"—Rev. J. F. Charlfort, in the Superintendancy of this Mission District. It is owing under the smiles of the Great Father, chiefly to his sound judgment, skillful management, and pacific temper, as well as his energy and devotion to the work, that the cause has been thus far not only a success, but remarkably prosperous. He allows of no drones, no "green logs," as your confrere of the N. O. Christian Advocate said some years since, in "Post Oak Circuit." All who enter his lists in this department are expected to do their whole duty.

Work Among the Freedmen.—Here in Lagrange, and our other churches connected with it, we have over eleven hundred colored and a few white members. In the adjoining circuit, having the famous village of Newnan (not Newman) as its base, there are not less than seventeen hundred colored members. East of that there is a circuit (the Jonesborough,) where the whites are joining—sometimes by one and two scores at a time. But the great work in this part of the "Empire State" of the South (that used to be,) is among the freedmen. The "coming man" is getting along as well as could be expected, considering the times. He is getting ready to act his part in the grand drama of the moral, religious and political future of this great country. These, whether in the pulpit, on the stump or in the schoolroom, who are preparing him for that great epoch in his history, have to suffer many things at present; but they have great faith in God, in the future, in the effectiveness of those Divine principles which have smitten down the gigantic form of tyrany and oppression which once bestrode this goodly land, and made the "chattel" a man, a citizen and a power in the government. When we contemplate the triumph of such principles we are ready to cry out "Allelujah! the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth!"

Schools.—What strange spectacles now meet the sight of us Southerners, who, although "to the manor born," as some will have it, are now "Abolitionists," "Radicals," "Nigger preachers," "Nigger teachers," and, worse than all, "traitors"—that is, to Jefferson D. and the "lost cause." We behold right here in the centre of Secessia, real bona fide negro schools! Yes, Sir, negro schools—that five years ago would have driven to desperation any Southern community where such a thing might have been mentioned. I have organized several: here in Lagrange, a day and night school, of over 450 enrolled scholars; at West Point, Hogansville, Palmetto, an aggregate of near four hundred men, besides several flourishing Sunday schools. In a few weeks I hope to have three or four more under way. The work progresses in like manner in several other circuits. I need not tell you of the Crescent City and the Mississippi Conference, that the little "nigger" will learn. They can spell and read, and 'tis certain that some "can write and cipher, too." A few years will serve, under the systematic regime of the Freedmen's Bureau and Freedmen's Aid Societies and the stimulus that a free ballot-box will give to common school education, to bring Sambo junior to a respectable knowledge of books—It is almost ludicrous (quite so, if it were not for the sad reflections it suggests,) to see what an attitude some of "his best friends" now assume when they contemplate this educational process. A year ago the idea of teaching niggers was something that could enter the brain of no one but a Northern abolition fanatic, or a Southern "pervert"—now they look on and seem to say by their acts and words that they are half inclined to take a hand in it themselves. But snuffing a little, they seem to smell "radical" about the whole thing, and muttering something about their being always their "best friends," turn away in disgust. Some, however, have knuckled down to it in good earnest, and show a willingness, if it could be so arranged with some of the societies or the Bureau, to get themselves or their sons or daughters into some position.

You see how it works. In a few years we shall see the end of that chivalrous pride that snubbed us so unceremoniously when we began our work.—Chivalry, slave aristocracy and "Southern gentility" are destined to undergo as rapid and thorough a metamorphosis as are the fortunes of Sambo himself.

Political.—Georgia politics are shaping in the right direction. Two months ago ex-Gov Jos. E. Brown addressed a patriotic letter to the people of the State over which he had presided so successfully for three years and a half. He advised absolute acquiescence in the terms and measures of the Sherman Military Bill, as the safest and wisest course they could pursue. All his old political opponents, almost to a man, took their position against him. The several methods of abuse, denunciation and calumnious accusation were resorted to—in short the old battle axe of the slave power—terrorism—was called forth to smite him down. But deep in the hearts of the people there was not only found a profound respect for Gov. Brown, which none of his calumniators had ever been so fortunate as to gain, but an instinctive feeling that he was right. He may now be regarded as the leader of a new party in the State, and as that party not only acquiesces in the Congressional method of adjustment, but approves and commends it as just and right, it is, in truth, a Republican party. The opposition having determined to register and vote, and boasting great things in the way of controlling the negro vote, with a view of prejudicing the ignorant class of whites against it, and thus controlling them as well as the negroes, call it the Southern Radical party. Before December, the party will accept that appellation, for it will be its only method of removing the imputation of disloyalty, which the other party is determined shall mark their spirit and stamp itself upon their whole career, no matter what they may do in respect to reconstruction. But the Republican ranks are constantly growing, and will it is hoped, if the blacks co-operate in a body, be able to carry the State.

Per contra, you have seen Provisional Gov. Jenkins' great demonstration in bringing the matter in the form of a bill of injunction before the Supreme Court. One at a distance might conclude that Georgia was far from wishing to be reconstructed. But it must be remembered that this was the individual exploit of Mr. C. J. Jenkins, and possesses no more significance than if it had been performed by a less distinguished individual. There is something ludicrous in his "cutting this fantastic flight" as Governor of Georgia, when he was about as much Governor of Georgia (in the sense he fancied he was) as was Sancho Panza Governor of Baritania. He was at best only Provisional Governor, and that by the sufferance of General Pope. The General, in the late correspondence, made him duly sensible of that fact. People at a distance may wonder what could induce the gentleman who fancied himself the Governor of Georgia to perform this gubernatorial gyration. Many of the people of Georgia wonder at it too. The fact is, the Provisional Governor did not comprehend the situation—that is the whole secret of his extraordinary movement. It was wholly gratuitous; neither the legislature nor the people in primary assemblies had asked at his hands such a work of superogation. It was just Charles J. Jenkins, and nobody else. It is to be hoped that the Supreme Court will set the conscience of that worthy gentlemen at rest by showing that it has no jurisdiction of the case. When that is done, "dignity" will collapse in Georgia, and the Republican ranks will be increased.

The New Orleans Advocate.—No number of the great Advocate family is more welcome to my table than that which hails from the Crescent City. A lady not long ago was reading one of your best editorials, and after she finished, said, "I love that man." "Why," I asked. "Because," said she, "he writes like a good Christian." I told her I had had the pleasure of seeing and talking with him in the office of the Methodist in New York, and I fully agreed with her. So come on, good little Advocate, and cheer us up amid our toil and trials.

Religious Reform in Mexico.

The Empire totters and falls. Maximilian, unable to withstand the march of reform, is in the act of flight before its advocates.

Those promises made to the Pope of Rome before leaving Miramon, to occupy the throne in Mexico which Napoleon had carved for him in a silver mine, he has never been able to fulfil, and no future Pope will ask as a reward for his sacred Highness' good will a guarantee that church property shall be restored to the priesthood, and the people placed again under its iron heel. This struggle now ending in Mexico, is not between leaders or factions, but is the warring of great principles, such as have been decided elsewhere, and which can ultimately have but one glorious termination.

There are on the one side ignorance, superstition, physical and religious slavery, retrogression, the Romish Church; on the other, enlightenment, political freedom, religious liberty, progress.—The former have made an obstinate struggle these last fifty years, and refuse to die other than the death of a many-headed monster. As elsewhere, so in Mexico, the Romish Church is the determined enemy of civilization and progress, and the cunning priesthood, in clinging to Maximilian as a forlorn hope, have been contending against the great principle of advancement. The vast treasure and life which has thus been spent in Mexico has not been wasted, but is the legitimate, initiatory, expense current of a grand missionary labor, which upon the laying down of arms must be continued through peaceable channels.

It has been contended that to restrain a semi-civilized people from the excesses of barbarism, no influence has been so powerful as this religion founded upon superstition and legend. It is now too late in the world's history for this argument to be pressed, and priest power and sacerdotal rites must make way for God, individual responsibility and religious simplicity.

It had evidently been hoped by the Pope that the circumstance of the rebellion in the States would enable him through his agent, Maximilian, to obtain another lease of Mexico, and draw from her soil and her mines the contributions so much needed by him to sustain the church in his own continent, but God's hand in the ill success of the invading army of the French, and the ending of the rebellion in the States, have destroyed that illusion, and his Highness must resort to other means to repair the decaying church—must deify some saint, or possibly discover something new about the Immaculate Conception.

As for Mexico, all will be well. For her a glorious day dawns. She borders upon land, shone upon by a sun effulgent with the light of progress, and its long rays lap over upon this, her neighbor, awakening her into a life of religious and political freedom; its concomitants and sequences. Arrayed against this great church power, has of late been the Liberal forces under its Indian leader Juarez, whose name, says his biographer, "is the symbol of independence." Into his hands has the Ruler of destinies now entrusted this great duty of uniting, directing, leading his people to a happy future—a cutting of the bonds of idolatrous worship and priestly intermediation, and to an appreciation of glorious, conscious manhood.

Here then is a great field of labor. Some of the first acts of the successful Juarez should be introduction of schools—separation of Church and State, and a declaration of freedom of conscience, thus opening the doors to all religious sects; and under the moral influence of the age, and especially of her of her neighbors, who have of late so aided her cause, Mexico must yield to the fiat of progression.

The vast variety of soil and agricultural products; her rich mineral matter; and her most delightful and exhilerating climate render Mexico most agreeable as a place of residence.

No missionary field need be looked for on the other side of the globe. Such a one lies near at hand, and the Church Protestant should find in the sustainers of the Republic who are the enemies of the Church Romish, multitudes anxious to be led and directed forward to the results of constitutional and Religious reform.

O—I

Professor Agassiz not an Infidel.

From an introductory lecture delivered by Professor Agassiz before the Brooklyn Institute on Religion and Natural History, we make the following extracts:

"One great object of the study of Nature is to trace the connection between all created beings, to discover, if possible, the plan according to which they have been created, and to search out their relation to the great Author.

"But if science is to contribute its share to the recognition of the existence of God, if it is to lead the way to Him from the study of His works, that study must be independent of every other influence; and he who undertakes to state what science has developed with reference to this question, must not allow other and antecedent considerations or convictions to interfere. Hence the necessity I feel of presenting to you the results of science in this unbiassed spirit.

"I know that I have been considered by many persons an infidel, because I have not taken for my guidance in the study of science the dictum of certain creeds. But science cannot submit to dictation, it must build up what it seeks upon the premises which it finds. Let us be content if the results lead to the same conclusion; we shall stand there in the position of one who, having been brought up in the religion of his parents, and having been led astray by doubts, has at length, under the influence of a better frame of mind and of sober thoughts, come to reconsider the basis of his doubts, and by laborious investigation has returned to the faith he had forsaken.

"Such is the position of science. It is the questioning, the doubting element in human progress; and when that has gone far enough, it begins the work of reconstruction in such a way as will never harm true religion, or cause any reasonable apprehension to the real and sincere Christian. Such is my conviction; and while I am considered on one side as an infidel, and decried on the other, in scientific circles, as a bigot, as one who follows the lead of a creed rather than of science, I feel bound to say that I am neither; and that, if you will recieve these lectures in the simplicity with which I offer them, you will find I have not deceived you. * * * *

"The importance of the study of the animal kingdom with reference to its manifestation of the power, wisdom and goodness of God, is very great. But this is shown only as we advance in the knowledge of the phenomena presented by the animal kingdom. At this moment natural history can show not only that there is a plan in the creation of the animal kingdom, but that the plan has been preconceived, has been laid out in the course of time, and executed with the definite object of introducing man upon the earth.

* * * *

"It is now, therefore, the task of the naturalist to read the thoughts of that mind as expressed in the living realities that surround us; and the more we give up our own conceit in this work, the less selfish we become, the more we shall discern, the deeper we shall read, and the nearer shall we come to nature. It is to this attempt at presenting a translation made conscientiously after reading this plan that I ask your attention at this time. I shall attempt to show you that there is really a plan—a thoughtful plan—a plan which may be read—in the relations which you and I, and all living beings scattered over the surface of our earth, hold one to another."

The Duty of the Party to the South.

In the organization of the Republican party in the South, one thing is to be remembered—that the principles of Republicanism forbid any attempt to control and use the colored vote, as something dependent upon the party. Except in ordinary political calculations which are based on population, the Republican party knows no colored vote. It knows the people only, and between white and black can make no distinction.

Thus far the Southern Republicans have acted upon these principles. The North Carolina Convention did not acknowledge any difference of the races, and divided the offices equally between them; at the Arkansas Convention, April 2, it was resolved that the terms white and black should not be used, though colored delegates were present; the call of a Republican Convention in Tennessee said "we do not appeal to Whites or to Blacks"—we appeal to Men." It is only upon this honorable and just basis that the party can hope to establish itself permanently in the South. The colored voters do not intend to be patronized by any political organization; they expect equal rights, full representation in the party councils, and the power they are entitled to, not only by intelligence but numbers. Therefore, any attempt to organize a "Black Party" will be defeated by the colored voters themselves. In the war they were willing to fight in separate regiments, but they will not vote so.

The Republican party needs only a platform of absolute equality to embody—not attach or annex—the majority of the colored voters in itself. It, as the party which freed the slave, and gave him the ballot, has a claim upon his confidence, which no sophistry can destroy. The colored men universally understand this, and nothing but local interests will cause them to vote against Republican candidates. But this advantage is counterbalanced by the want of thorough organization in the Southern States, a want which, unless speedily supplied, must lose the Republican party thousands of votes. True, there is not a State in which good Union men have not taken some steps toward State organization, signally in Alabama and North Carolina; but the great deficiency is in the counties and districts. A Republican Convention in Raleigh or Little Rock does not necessarily imply that the Republican party, as a living, working organization, will be carried into every corner of North Carolina and Arkansas. That machinery of local committees and Union Leagues, which in New York or Pennsylvania disseminates a knowledge of men and principles throughout the State, does not exist for the Republican party in the South, but it does exist for our opponents there. They have the State Governments, the county officers; their leaders hold all civil authority; they have three-fourths of the newspapers; and this machinery which was used to accomplish secession, and sustain Rebellion, is equally valuable to oppose the progress of Republican principles. It yet remains to be seen whether the Reconstruction law itself may not be used against us: it provides for the appointment of Boards of Registration to determine who are legal voters, but it does not prescribe the manner in which these Boards shall be formed. We hold that it is the duty of the District Commanders, independently of all parties, to see that both white and black citizens are entrusted with a work so important.

Thus deficient in organization, though with ample power in numbers and enthusiasm, the success of the Republican party in the South, depends very much upon the energy of the Republicans in the North. We must give them what we have—speakers, newspapers, labor, money, organization. We must begin at once with the work; the loyal men of the South will do the rest.—N. Y. Tribune.

A Duel and its Consequences.—An amusing duel took place recently about five miles from Havana. It originated in a remark made by a man to his friend on seeing a lady coming out of church. The lady was unknown to the person making the remark, but happened to be the others wife. A slap in the face was the consequence, and a challenge came soon after. This was accepted, and the seconds selected a place. The wife got wind of the affair, and immediately took steps to prevent the dreadful catastrophe. Her first thought was to notify the police, but that might have given her husband the reputation of a coward, and she took a better method by going to the house of the other party, where she met his wife; and a plan was soon concocted between the feminines. On the morning appointed for the duel, both husbands got up early; wives ditto. Husbands took carriages, and their wives—one armed with five children and the other with three—took other vehicles in waiting. When the two duelists arrived at the spot, they were somewhat astonished on seeing the two other carriages drive up with their passengers, who coolly informed the men that they also had come to fight, so as to make it a complete family quarrel, each at the same time producing an empty purse and a package of baby linen as their arms and munitions of war. The little ones had pop-guns and fire-crackers, and soon some indulged in a cry. It is useless to add that the blood-thirsty Benedicks made peace on the spot, and returned to Havana, in company with their seconds, to celebrate the affair over a champagne dinner.

For the New Orleans Advocate.

The political necessity that elicited the separation of the Methodist E. Church, now no longer exists.

Slavery is driven from the land. Under the advancing star of civilization and religion the peculiar institution which unite the church in twain has been gathered to its fathers and there is now no longer any necessity for two seperate church organizations. The Church South, never would have had an existence but for the institution of slavery. It was this which, like an angry whirlwind disturbed the hitherto tranquil bosom of our militant Zion, and as the winds now move no more, the agitated waters will again be calm and all the arguments that hitherto existed necessitating a separate existence are now no more. In losing the support which slavery gave the Church, South, has lost her best bower anchor. Her finances are very seriously impaired; and the misty clouds of error that so long hung over the church are now fast fleeing away, and the attractive power of the old church is drawing daily some new accessions to its ranks. There is no longer any great dividing cause to perpetuate antagonism in the great heart of Methodism. The superior advantages of the old Church will by degrees draw first one and then another charge away, until at length universal weakness will prompt the Southern wing to a fusion with her alma mater. Encircled round with an entire cordon of the old Church, the Southern Church will each succeeding year grow more and more feeble, and ere many years shall have elapsed the old ecclesiastical flag of Methodism will, like the political banner of the Union, overshadow its smaller and less powerful neighbor.

We earnestly hope that in this great field of christian labor, no feelings of hostility may arise between the different armies of Methodism. Thousands in the field are thirsting for the word of eternal life, and other thousands are hungering for the wholesome aliment of education. There is work for all to do. The once poor down trodden slave is now a freedman, and has been clothed with all the political attributes of a citizen. It is right he should be educated, that his mind so long dwarfed by slavish fetters should be cultivated and fitted for the high and responsible position to which he has so suddenly attained. To the South there is no longer any necessity to keep him in ignorance. The wants of the age have liberated him, and all classes are alike interested in his educational advancement, and we trust that the members of the church South, who for so many years have so warmly interested themselves in his, the ex-slave's welfare, will show themselves equally solicitous in the advancement of his religious weal.

Nost assuredly he has many claims upon their charity and sympathy, and we trust he may not be disappointed.

Loyalist.

National Recognition of God.—A national religious convention, the object of which is to secure a national recognition of the being and providence of God, of the authority of Jesus Christ, and the supremacy of the bible in civil affairs, met on Tuesday evening in Philadelphia, Judge Strong presiding. Addresses were made by several eminent divines, and letters from others were read, expressing sympathy with the movement. An amendment to the Constitution was proposed, recognizing "Almighty God as the source of all authority and power in civil government."

How Shall we Obtain our Rights?

The patience with which the colored people of the South waited for their freedom, is rapidly giving way to impatience of all restrictions on their equal rights with their white fellow-citizens. That "waiting spirit" which characterized their race during their long night of bondage, not only excited the admiration of mankind, but was worthy of all commendation. With an abiding faith in God, that in His own good time, He would answer their prayers and break their chains of slavery, they suffered on, generation after generation. And they have not been disappointed. The day of deliverance came, and to-day they are free. Had no other political boon been conferred upon them, this was sufficient to fill the hearts of the present generation of blacks with unutterable joy. But added to their freedom, they have been elevated to the condition of enfranchised citizens by the supreme legislative body of the nation. Protected by the military, and not opposed by their old masters, they have assumed their rights, and to-day they are largely in the majority as registered voters. This indicates their appreciation of their political privileges, and is evidence that their freedom is an assured fact.

There are, however, certain social rights, which are still denied the colored man. Among these denied rights is unrestricted access to all public conveyances, to hotels, to places of amusement, to schools and churches. That our colored people should be allowed access to these public places, on the same conditions on which white men have access thereto, is undeniable; but how to accomplish this, is the material point we have in view in this article. There are but two ways—by force or by law. At present, there is a disposition on the part of some, to try force, which is both wrong and hazardous.

For a week past, our city has been in a state of feverish excitement, growing out of the attempt on the part of some colored men to ride in those of our city cars which hitherto has been reserved exclusively for the use of the whites. On last Sunday, we were on the verge of another bloody riot, and the excitement ran so high and the danger was so imminent, that his Honor, Mayor Heath, was compelled to appear upon the scene and warn the "crowd to disperse." To their credit, let it be said, the colored people followed the advice of their friend, the Mayor, and the impending trouble was averted. And fortunately for all concerned, the Presidents of the several city railroads, have decided that our city cars are for the accommodation of all citizens without respect to race or color.

Now, while we rejoice in the favorable result attained, yet we counsel our colored friends against the repetition of force to obtain those other social-equal-rights, now under consideration. With like earnestness, we should protest against the use of force by white men to possess similar rights. It is on this principle that we condemned the violent breaking up of the Constitutional Convention last July; and surely our loyal citizens will not imitate such a bad example. We are aware that the colored men of New Orleans are urged on in this wrongful course by a few white men who know better; and, we are also conversant of the fact, that their enemies heartily wish for an occasion of violence out of which they may manufacture political capital for the coming campaign. Against these abettors of your offense and inevitable suffering, we most earnestly warn you. Those who urge you to violence are not your true friends. Fanatical, passionate men themselves, you should not follow their counsel. Nor should you give occasion to your political enemies to charge you with resisting the law, and afford them the opportunity to kill you under the pretext of mantaining the peace.

Let us calmly inquire, How did you obtain the rights you now possess? Was it by violence? The war which resulted in your freedom, was waged by the government according to the laws of civilized warfare; and the proclamation of emancipation was in accordance with those laws. How were you invested with the right of franchise? By violence? Rather, was it not conferred upon you by the law-making power of Congress? Law not force, has made you voters. How long would it have taken you to secure your freedom and the right of suffrage by force? But law has given you the one and conferred the other upon you. So you shall come in possession of all your social rights by law, more certainly, more speedily, than by violence. Assert your rights as citizens, and if denied, then appeal to the courts. Remember, the General Commanding, the Governor, the Mayor, the State Attorney, and the Judge of our Criminal Court and other officials, are your friends, and are bound to vindicate your rights. They are your protectors. "Haste makes waste." Allow society time to adjust itself to the new order of things. Let those exclusive corporations know that you know your rights and will demand them; but give such bodies time to change their regulations for your accommodation. Should they refuse to accede to your reasonable demand, then appeal to our judicial tribunals and, armed with their decision, you shall be doubly happy in the enjoyment of all your social privileges protected by law.

What a Change!

Under God, the Military Bill has wrought a marvelous revolution in public sentiment. The change is most apparent to those who, for the past four years have toiled and suffered for loyalty and freedom. St. Paul's conversion was not more sudden than the change which has taken place in many, who, hitherto have been known as downright rebels. We care not now to inquire into the motives of this change—we have nothing to do with man's motives—it is enough for us to testify to the better spirit manifested by those who have so long opposed every movement to advance unionism in our midst. It is pleasing strange to see Mr. W. S. Mount, chairman of our public school directors, visiting and addressing negro schools and pledging himself to their support. Not a year ago this same gentleman was mainly instrumental in having union teachers dismissed from our public schools and otherwise evincing his opposition to loyalty. Well, there was room for improvement and we trust Mr. Mount will go on to perfection.

On every hand we discover indications that the black man's rights are being respected. The other day we were riding in a white man's car, into which a negro entered. On seeing him, the driver said gruffly, "get out of here, this is no star car." But the negro paid no attention to this insult; when the driver stopped the car and again ordered the colored man out. To our surprise the passengers sided with the negro, and exclaimed, "go on, go on, we dont care whether he is white or black." "Well" said the driver, "I don't care, if you dont," and drove on his mule. When the victory was gained, the freedman smiled, and one white man said to his friend, "I suppose that driver thinks we are Yankees, but we aint." To us this was all the better, and we thought, what a change!

C. C. North, Esq.

This eminent layman of our church arrived in New Orleans, on the 3d inst. On Sabbath he worshipped with us at the Mechanic's Institute, where he addressed our Sunday School to the edification and great delight of all present. In the afternoon he visited our Orphan's Home, and spoke in a most gentle manner to the hundred orphans. He related to them the dream of his little daughter Julia, which is one of the most beautiful and touching dreams we have ever heard. Would that, that dream were thrown on canvass! It is so natural, poetical, celestial. Our poor orphans will never forget it. From the Asylum Mr. North went to the House of Refuge, where he spoke for twenty minutes to over a hundred boys. He alluded to the temptations of his own boyhood and to his conversion to God. Under his moving remarks, his boy-auditors laughed and wept; and the Superintendent of the institution, spoke in terms of high approval of the address. In the evening Mr. North delivered a speech to the children of the congregational church. Thus the Holy Sabbath was spent in labors of love, and another godly example of zeal was given to the church, which is worthy of imitation by all our laymen. Our beloved friend left New Orleans on the 6th inst., for New York.

Hon. Judge Kelley.—This distinguished gentleman reached New Orleans by rail on Thursday last, and is the guest of our city. He was met at the depot by a large delegation, who escorted him to the St. Charles Hotel, where he was welcomed to New Orleans in neat speeches by his Honor, Mayor Heath, Judge Heistand, and Mr. Smith, (colored,) to which the Judge replied in a most touching and eloquent manner. He thanked them, that they had made him so far free that he could visit New Orleans in safety. Our citizens will soon have the distinguished honor to listen to this eloquent orator and popular statesman of equal rights.

Rev. Thomas W. Conway arrived in our city on the evening of the 5th inst. Mr. Conway is here on a political mission, and is warmly welcomed back to Louisiana by his many friends. He will be of great service to the Union cause in this State, and especially in organizing a party auxiliary to the great Republican party of the North.

The Mayor's Levee.—His Honor, Mayor Heath, held his second levee at his residence on last Tuesday evening. The number present was larger than on the former occasion. We could but admire with what quiet dignity and grace our new Mayor and his lady received their guests. Official dignity is natural to Americans. They pass from private into public life and do the honors of their new positions like those born to rule. Among those of note not present at the first reception, were Judge Woolfly, Dr. Goldman, Gen. Brown, of the Republican, Thomas W. Conway, Rev. Mr. Elliot, of New Orleans, and Rev Mr. Giffin, of Cincinnati. It was a delightful occasion, full of the refined amenities of social life.

Subscriptions for 1867.—Those of our patrons who have so promptly remitted their subscription money for the N. O. Advocate for 1867, will accept our hearty thanks. And we now earnestly hope that those yet in arrears will remit to us without delay. We rejoice that our friends, both North and South, seem determined to sustain this loyal Church paper in the Valley of the Mississippi.

Rev. Dr. Newman will preach in the Hall of the House of Representatives, to-morrow, at 11 o'clock.

Religious services will be held as usual, at Eagle Hall, corner of Prytania and Felicity Sts., to-morrow evening, at half past seven o'clock.

A New Washing Machine.—Among the new things under the sun," is a new Washing Machine, manufactured by S. W. Palmer & Co., of Auburn, N. Y. A child can operate it, so simple is it in construction and operation. We regard this Machine as combining more points of excellence than any other Machine that has come under our notice. From actual and thorough trial, we can commend it to those in want of a good Washing Machine.

To Colored Voters.

SIXTH PAPER.

We wish in this concluding paper to call your attention to a few practical suggestions:

1. Do not pledge yourself beforehand to vote for any special candidate. The right of casting a ballot is a public trust; it is an exercise of your sovereign power, and must be used not for your own private gratification or interest, or that of your friends, but solely with reference to the public good. Especially at this first election you should employ it for the establishment of great principles in which you and your children's children are alike interested. Be not induced then by the entreaty or flattery of any candidate, to promise him your support. Hold yourselves free from all embarrassing pledges, so that on election day you may cast a ballot solely with reference to the triumph of the cause which you wish to see prevail. There will be only one candidate on the republican ticket for each office. Dropping all others, we propose to unite together on one, and by our combined efforts to secure his election.

2. Be careful not to throw away your votes. Every vote cast for others than the regularly nominated candidates will be so much clear loss. Your opponents will use every means to lead you to do this. If they cannot persuade you to vote for their ticket, they will try to cause you to scatter your votes among a variety of candidates. If they can succeed in this, you will surely be defeated. A single vote thus thrown away may result in the loss of an election; and where parties are so evenly divided the failure to elect one of your candidates might lose us a working majority in the State, and leave it still in the hands of our enemies. Your votes are of too much value to be thrown away.

3. Act together in entire concert. Unity is absolutely essential to success, and in order to obtain it, some of you must necessarily forego your personal preferences. You all have friends that you would like to see elected to office; but if you persist in voting for your favorites and others for theirs, you will become hopelessly divided and the elections will be irretrievably lost. In order that you may not thus be divided and confused as to proper candidates, nominating conventions will in all probability be held in every parish or county. At these conventions you will determine by a majority vote what persons shall be supported for the various offices. You will then combine all your votes to elect the persons thus nominated, and by this means your full strength will be brought to support the ticket which represents your principles.

4. Do not allow yourselves to be prevented by threats, promises or bribes from supporting the men and the principles which you prefer. Be united and you need have no fears Your employers are just as dependent on you as you are upon them. Indeed you are just as much stronger than they as you outnumber them at the polls. Where there is one planter and ten workmen who have a vote, these ten workmen have ten times the power of the planter. Only be united, and your employers dare not dismiss you or treat you badly because you refuse to vote with them. Secure a union triumph at this first election, and you make it sure that forever hereafter you shall be at perfect liberty to vote for the men of your choice without fear or hindrance.

5. Work for the success of the great union party of the nation. You have now the opportunity of showing to your friends throughout the country that you appreciate the immense sacrifices they have made, and the priceless benefits they have been instrumental in conferring upon you. The whole country, we may say the entire world, recognizes the binding obligation upon you to be true to the great party of liberty. Your own interests, as well as gratitude, demand this. Your claim that you are capable of high-minded action, and that you can rise to the highest elevations of an ennobled manhood will be vindicated or disproved by your course at the coming election. Your late masters, much as they may say against it, cannot help respecting you for being true to the friends who have done so much for you, and to the great cause of human liberty to which you should be so devotedly attached. The men who try to threaten, flatter, or bribe you to support the rebel ticket will think but the more meanly of you if they succeed. They know what you ought to do, and it is just because they have a low opinion of your manhood that they resort to such vile means to influence your votes. A true man cannot be intimidated nor bought up by his enemies, and every man of you who by threats, money, or whisky, can be induced to give up his convictions, will be pointed out as a proof that the colored people are incapable of rising to the standard of men.

We now close these papers. We have written earnestly, candidly, and we trust kindly, on subjects of vast importance to you as a people. Interests far-reaching and more extended than you have ever dreamed are entrusted to your hands. A power mightier than was ever held by the sceptered hand of king or emperor is wielded by the freemen of this nation. You now equally participate in this great power. Use it calmly, rightly, wisely, and your latest posterity shall share in the blessings of that free manhood which you have attained.

A Warning to Young Men.

In accordance with our promise last week, we proceed to give the material portions of the confession made by one of the two young men executed in Baton Rouge in December, 1864, for the murder of Dr. Sadler, who at that time was Medical Director of the Military District. A full account of the whole matter, with the confession, was published in the daily N. O. Times for Jan. 11th, 1865. The writer of this was well acquainted with the Doctor and his murderers, and attended them in their last hours.

The following is the first paragraph of the "confession:"

My name is Larkin W. Rhea. I was born in Hancock county, Tenn., March 22d, 1845. My parents were members of the Baptist Church. I was religiously educated, and when 13 years old was baptized by Elder Moses Wilborne, and joined the church with my parents, and continued a member of that church, in good standing, when I enlisted. My associations in the army were unfavorable to religious life. I saw older and better men than I abandon Christian life, and they would tell me it was impossible to live religious in the army, and that it was not expected that soldiers would be Christians. It was not long till I began to follow their teaching and example, which, joined with the persecutions and ridicule of those who had never made any pretensions to piety, did their work effectually; and thus enticed, enforced, and yet consenting, I strayed from the path of religion and virtue. Little by little I began to practice the habits and vices common to camp life, and in a few months found myself drinking and swearing, etc. But I suffered much in mind, and often when alone would sit down to sober reflection—would think of home, of mother, then in heaven, of my former Christian life; would wonder, while I seemed to have presentiments of, where my wickedness would end, and would weep and pray and resolve to reform. But association with wicked companions would always overcome my good resolutions. I thus continued sinning and repenting for more than a year, when I seemed to lose all resolution to be a better man. I was still troubled with thoughts of my wicked course, and where it would lead me—of death, judgment and eternity—but I would try to get them out of mind, or drown them in hard drinking—And thus I continued until the night of that sad event which has so suddenly and shamefully ended my career.

We pass by his detail of the circumstances connected with the murder and the arrest of the criminals, after which he says:

I was then sent to jail and closely confined, though not ironed. I was duly sober. Then came deep and solemn reflection. I feared the results of what I had done. Again I thought of the past—of home, childhood, of my early conversion and union with the church, of my enlistment in the army, of my temptation and fall, how I wandered from "the straight and narrow way"—the only path of safety and true happiness—and where and to what my wayward steps had led me. My entire soldier life appeared, as had the deed of the previous night, like a dreadful dream. And yet I felt its fearful reality. For the first time I shuddered at what I had done, and felt fully conscious of my danger. I knew I had killed the Doctor, and if I was convicted it would cost my life.

Again we omit a portion, and take up the confession after the trial and sentence, where he says:

This morning, December 28th, the Chaplain brought me the published order containing my sentence and the day of my execution, which is day after to-morrow. I have but two days to live! My race is run; I die the ignominious death of a murderer before I have seen my 20th year! With me, so far as my earthly destiny is concerned, the die is cast, the deed is done; all is over, and too late to profit by it, I see and mourn over the errors I might have avoided, and for which I alone am mainly responsible. It is useless to lament—tears, regret, remorse, cannot restore the past, or prolong my life. I reap what I have sown; I bow to my fate; law and order must be preserved, and I have been disorderly and lawless, and am willing to suffer, as I must, if my execution may contribute anything toward maintaining army discipline, and restraining others from the course I have pursued. God grant it may.

And now a few words to my fellow-soldiers, and I have done: Wicked and vile companions, both of men and women, have been my ruin. Had I followed in the army as I did at home, the teachings of my mother and my Bible; had I maintained Christian principle, and chosen for my more intimate companions those of good habits and morals, I would to-day have been deemed an honorable and honored young man, instead of a murderer, under sentence of death. I speak of evil companions first, for here was my fatal error—I "walked in the counsel of the ungodly" and stood "in the way of sinners," until, at last, I sat down with the scornful. Go not with the many or the few to do evil: Read Prov. IV., Chap. 14th to the 19th verse, and V., Chap. 3d to 13th verse; read it, remember and follow it. O! that I had given heed to those warning words!

"The chief instrumentality through which wicked men and women accomplished my ruin, was intoxicating liquors. Under its influence I was ready to follow wherever they chose to lead. One vice led to another, until under its influence the crime of murder, the murder of an innocent and good man, (and who, but for the influence of liquor upon me, had yet been living,) has ended alike the career of my sins and my earthly existence. To one and all I would say, let liquor alone, abstain from all that can intoxicate. I never intended to drink to excess, but did not know, till too late, the power of the habit over me. And to think where it has led me! But I am only one of the thousands of young men it has led "as lambs to the slaughter." When you think of Dr. Sadler, of his many virtues, and mourn his loss, remember liquor did it; when you see me standing upon the gallows, soon to be launched into eternity, remember whisky brought me to it; when you see my lifeless body hanging in the air, remember liquor did it; and when you, the members of my company and regiment, blush with shame that one of your number, at so early an age, came to such a dishonorable death, remember liquor did it; and whenever the awful and solemn scenes of the murder and the execution shall recur to the minds of any who witnessed them, let them be remembered as the legitimate fruits of intoxication. And as you value your own happiness, the peace and safety of society, a prosperous life and an honorable death; as you value a good name and a grateful memory when you are gone from earth; nay, as you value your own souls and heaven, shun the intoxicating bowl.

But I would warn you against all the vices to which you are exposed in soldier life—intemperance, licentiousness, profanity, gambling and immorality of every kind. Virtue, sobriety and Christian principles are as important in the army as at home. Vice destroys health and strength, and produces insubordination. Army dissipation has destroyed more lives than has the enemy. Be careful of the beginnings of vice, and "shun the appearance of evil." If you begin, there is no telling where you will end. You see to what I have come; take warning, and be wise while you may. I had no idea of coming to this; no, not even one day's warning before the fatal second of December; no thought of it on the morning of that day, when three of us began to drink. Sin is treacherous and will betray you to death suddenly, and when you least expect it, and are least prepared for it. "Fear God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man;" and this path of duty is alone the path of safety.

If I could know that what I have written, what I have already experienced and am yet to suffer, would save any man from the course I have pursued, it would afford me a comfort in my last hour. I hope it may do some one good.

I have now nothing in my heart against any one. I have sometimes felt hard towards those who first led me astray. Oh, why did they do it! But they did not think what they were doing, or where it would end. And I was free, and should not have gone with them, or followed their counsel. I knew it was wrong, and yet I followed on, a victim to the pleasures of sin. And I, in turn, have led others into sin; the thought now gives me inexpressible pain; God forbid that their course should end as mine has! If any whom I have thus influenced see these lines, will they not do themselves and me the justice to reject my former counsel, and receive and follow these my most sincere and best, because my last words?

I have done. I hope to be forgiven as I forgive, and may God have mercy upon my soul! I have no hope but in His mercy.

Larkin W. Rhea,
Co. C, 7th Reg. Ky. Vol. Inf.,
Baton Rouge, La., Dec. 28, 1864.

Two days after the above was penned the present writer, with an inexpressibly sad heart, accompanied the unfortunate Rhea to the place of public execution, which was surrounded by the commanding general and his staff, the entire military force of the post, and thousands of citizens. Thus was the wayward youth made a spectacle to angels and men, and a warning to all who should come after him.

Thus perished, at the age of nineteen years, one of the brightest and bravest, and formerly one of the best young men we ever knew. Never can we forget his very youthful appearance, his fine, intellectual countenance, his manly and dignified bearing. It is little to say, he met his fate like a philosopher. Upon the scaffold, with but a moment dividing between him and eternity, the centre of a vast and deeply excited multitude, he stood, the only one, of all the thousands, who was perfectly calm and self-possessed. When asked if he had anything to say, he replied. "My confession contains all I wish to say; it will be published, and all will read, and, I hope, profit by it." And every reader will join in the hope.

To our own testimony on the corruption of youth, we add the following from the Journal and Messenger:

Thousands of young men are on the broad road to ruin, forsaking God, despising his word, rejecting his gospel, neglecting his ordinances, resisting his Spirit, impatient of moral restraint, and defiant of the authority of King Jesus. Everywhere we find them walking in the counsel of the ungodly, standing in the way of sinners, and sitting in the seat of the scornful. The theatre, the dancing hall, the drinking saloon, the house of prostitution, and the den of the gambler are full of them; and while these hold with one hand the old sinner and follow their lead, they grasp with their other hand the little boys and drag them after their example of sin and folly and crime. These young men mock God, blaspheme his name, scoff at his religion, scorn the idea of virtue, boast of vice without a blush of shame, and yet they move in our society, they frequent our assemblies, they visit our houses, they associate with our youth—and many a Christian parent has mourned with inconsolable grief over the ruin wrought by some unprincipled wretch with fair exterior and smooth address, but whose heart was stained with guilt and his hands with crime.

Who will take warning and fly from danger? The cup of forbidden pleasure is full of poison and death.

Important Order from General Sheridan.

ONE-HALF THE POLICE FORCE TO BE COMPOSED OF EX-UNION SOLDIERS.

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH MILITARY DISTRICT, New Orleans, La., May 2, 1867. Special Orders No. 33.

[Extract.]

1. On the 12th of February, 1866, the legislature of the State of Louisiana passed the following act by which the residence qualification for policemen in this city was increased from two to five years, to take effect after the election then pending for a new mayor:

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, in General Assembly convened, That from and after the next election of mayor for the city of New Orleans, the police of said city shall be organized by an ordinance, determining the number of officers and men of which it shall be composed, and the places and functions to be assigned to said officers and men, respectively, as well as the salary to be allowed them, and the uniforms they shall wear; Provided, That the salary of each policeman shall be eighty dollars per month.

* * * *

SECTION 3. Be it further enacted, etc., That the officers and men shall be selected from men who can read and write the English language, and who shall give evidence that they are citizens of the United States of America, and that they have resided in the city of New Orleans upwards of five consecutive years.

* * * *

The object of this act was to exclude ex-Union soldiers from the police force of the city. It was faithfully carried out by the newly elected mayor, John T. Monroe, and every ex-Union soldier discharged to make room for those of rebellious antecedents.

To annul this unjust proscription, so much of the above act as requires a residence of five years, is hereby suspended, and a residence qualification of two years adopted.

The mayor of this city, Edward Heath, is hereby directed to adjust the present police force so that at least one-half of said force shall be composed of ex-Union soldiers, and all acts and ordinances, State or municipal, in the way of this adjustment, will be disregarded.

Trial of Jeff. Davis.

RICHMOND, May 8.—It is now understood that Justice Chase will leave here Monday. Chandler, the prosecuting attorney, has not yet arrived.

United States Marshal Underwood, to-day received the following writ and leaves for Norfolk with it to-morrow: "The President of the United States, to Brigadier General Henry S. Burton, and to any person or persons having the custody of Jefferson Davis, greeting: we command you that you have the body of Jefferson Davis by you imprisoned and detained as it is said, together with the cause of such imprisonment and detention, by whatsoever name the said Jefferson Davis may be called, as charged, before our Circuit Court of the United States of the district of Virginia, at the next term thereof at Richmond, in said district, on the second Monday in May, 1867, at the opening of the court on that day, to be and receive what shall then and there be considered concerning the said Jefferson Davis."

Witness: Salmon P. Chase, our Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, this first day of May, 1867. W. H. Barry, clerk of the Circuit of United States District of Virginia.

Mr. Davis, when he arrives on Sunday, will still be in military custody, and will not be produced in court till Monday.

It is stated that he will be kept in Libby prison, where apartments will be assigned to him.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE QUESTIONS—OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

The following is an extract from the Journal of the College of Bishops:

"On Tuesday, April 16, the Book Editor, at the request of the Bishops, joined them in gathering, verifying, and casting up the votes of the annual conferences on two questions—Change of Name and Lay-representation—submitted by the late General Conference.

"Whereupon it appeared that returns had been received from all the annual conferences, with the following results:

"On Change of Name, 1,577 votes have been cast: yeas, 1,168; nays, 409. The affirmative vote being less than the required three-fourths of the whole, this question was pronounced lost.

"On Lay-representation, 1,570 votes have been cast: yeas, 1,199; nays, 371. The affirmative vote being the required three-fourths of the whole, this question was pronounced carried.

H. N. MCTYEIRE, Sec'y.

M. E. CHURCH.—The following clergymen of the M. E. Church have within the last few months been appointed to United States consulships: Rev. George F. Kettell, of the New York Conference, consul for Rhenish Bavaria; Rev. O. M. Spencer, D. D., consul at Geneva, Switzerland; and Rev. M. J. Cramer, of the Cincinnati Conference, [brother-in-law of General Grant,] consul at Leipsic, Germany.

Opelousas District.

TOUGH TRAVELLING—CHURCH TURNED OUT DOORS—UNCLE BEN.

Two or three days in the city, with plenty to do; a pile of letters to answer; chores for country friends, for wife and self; lumber to buy and other business, then away again. A choice of routes to Opelousas was now quite convenient. The steamboat failing her regular trip, the railroad brought me to the Bay, and the little Bayou steamer landed me about midnight at New Iberia. Rain was pouring down, and the sleepy traveler had unwillingly to plunge through the darkness and mud, enter the stage and in wet garments; ride until 4 o'clock A. M.; stop and breakfast by camp light, after waiting out doors for our landlord to make a fire and cook the same. Then again away in the old stage, and by noon at Opelousas, to learn that we are turned out of doors, because of the house being sold, which had been rented for a church and school. No other building could be had, so the quarterly meeting was moved six miles, to washington After some difficulty I got a pony and reached the quarterly conference by 4 o'lock P. M Our brethren had waited patiently and received me joyfully. We met in a small apartment, temporarily fitted up for church and school purposes, and rented to us by a colored man, who has several other tenants on the same premises. His rent had not been punctually paid and Uncle Ben was threatening to turn us out. Every nerve was strained to raise the balance needed to pay for the lot, so the landlord was neglected, and at night, on reaching the place to preach as appointed, 'the door was shut" and fastened too. However, after a talk with Benjamin, he opened unto us and we had the pleasure of again preaching to our Washington friends.

OPELOUSAS QUARTERLY CONFERENCE—DISCOURAGEMENT—EMPIRE PARISH.

This first quarterly meeting of the year was of great interest to the Opelousas and Washington Circuit. At both places we are out of doors, after being at much expense and trouble to hire and fit up rooms, driven from place to place as prejudice or selfishness dictated. The people are very poor but have been working hard to secure lots so as to obtain the missionary appropriation for building. In Opelousas nothing was done at this visit, for lack of a place to meet the people; but in Washington, more than enough money is pledged for the ground. A good lot 134 by 194 feet is secured, and the church is anxiously and joyfully waiting for a response from the missionary board in New York, to their appeal for help. There are fifteen members of the conference, only seven of whom were present, most of the absent were lawfully detained, and the best feeling prevailed. One local preacher, who had been absent from two quarterly meetings and had behaved disorderly, was suspended; one leader and one steward suspended for not complying with the rule about marriage. Four appointments were reported. Sunday-schools are in good condition, and two good day-schools. That in Opelousas has great difficulties to encounter, being kept in an old shanty, with no floor; but the lady teacher is persevering, and the gentleman in charge at Washington has been very faithful. Our Sabbath services were very interesting, but not so well attended as at the last conference. The children's meeting gave evidence that they were cared for. The Love Feast and sacraments were solemn seasons. Seven persons were received into full membership and three adults baptized. The preacher's report showed much work done, under great discouragements, but the prospect is good for success in the future. May God's blessing rest upon our feeble beginnings in the great Empire parish of St. Landry.

OLD METHODISTS—AFRICAN STORY—SHOOTING NEGROES.

We have some noble brethren and sisters here, who are from Maryland, Delaware and Virginia. The chorister in Washington is an old brother who was several years a member of St. Paul's Church, in New Orleans. They are old Methodists, and will make good material for a church. I am glad to say brother Jackson has been very active in getting up and carrying on day-schools, with very little co-operation or aid of any kind; in caring for the orphans and poor; getting subscribers for the Advocate, and making himself generally useful. He has just sent down to our Orphan Asylum, a crippled old man and his four destitute children, with four other orphaned little ones.

There is little open opposition to our work, but much ignorant prejudice, and not a little disloyalty. It is difficult also to make the colored people understand, why we take such pains for them; teaching, preaching, building, at such expense. A story has got abroad that the old fathers and mothers of the race in Africa, are sending money for their benefit, which the Bureau Agents, and missionaries are keeping from them. In this section some of the boasted civilizing influences of slavery may be seen. Many are curiously ignorant, but they are well spoken of for industry and orderly conduct. Rowdies and jaykawkers continue to molest them as before stated. Sunday night after my service was over, setting in my room, I heard several shots fired; it was kept up until about 11 o'clock, and was in the direction of a colored meeting, not of our people, conducted with no regard to order or time. The meeting and the firing was repeated on Monday night. I called upon the shepherd and learned that several horsemen, armed, had attacked the house, and that it was no unusual occurrence. Complaint had been made to the civil authorities and they had been told to arm and defend themselves, as the constables dared not interfere. Quite a number of guns and revolvers were taken to the meeting Monday night, but from prudential motives, were not used. The killing of one white man by a negro would have brought down the whole white population upon them.

HARDEE'S TACTICS—A RUDE CHURCH—WASHINGTON PROSPERING.

The shepherd referred to, was a curiosity, bare head and feet, with no garments but a fragmentary or ragged shirt and ragged duck pants; he could not read, and said it was not necessary, as God taught him directly how to preach; none of his people could read except the pastor, who came occasionally. I learned that said pastor used a Hardee's tactics in preaching, explaining the figures to be angels, and as illustrating the prophecies. It is the same man introduced to our notice last year, who "could read sometimes." I visited his church, a rough room; in one corner was a box pulpit, covered with coarse wall-paper; the door fastened by a chain and padlock. Upon it were several badly worn books—"Conversations on Chemistry"—"Elijah the Tishbite," and a Bible. Pasted upon the pulpit were some highly colored Romish prints, and some fashion or dry goods pictures; in the room were two bells; one large, hanging over the pulpit, to be rung by the preacher when he was ready to begin. A day-school had been kept there, and a sign upon the chimney gave notice, "school open daly." Are not these sad testimonies of the great importance of our work, and can christian people hesitate to bid us God speed and help us on?

I must not omit to say that all the better portion of the people here, wish success to our efforts in elevating the colored race, but for various reasons, none step forward to give us a helping hand. It is not unreasonable to hope that we shall soon be acknowledged and aided, as one great agency under God for the reorganization and prosperity of the country. In spite of hard times and bad seasons, Washington is improving. A large number of town lots have recently been sold, and many propose to build, May it prosper. Industry and good government will insure this result.

ITINERANT.

A letter from Meridian, Miss., says: "We have built a school house here 20 by 30 feet, capable of accommodating about 200 people.

We have held a meeting at last to see about raising money to build an Academy here. Many of the white people were out to see and hear what was going on. Among them was the Mayor of the city. He asked the object of the meeting, and I told him, education. He said that we needed education. We called him to the chair, and called on lawyer R. to make a speech. He said that he was willing to give us any right that was granted in law. He said that he had been opposed to the colored man's rights, but that now he was after giving them every right, even of suffrage, and was willing to help us build an Academy in Meridian. Mr. L. also made a speech.

After Mr. S., Mr. Collins, a colored man spoke, and said that he was glad to see that the white people were doing away with old things.

Mr. W., a thorough Union man spoke, and said that Mr. S. had changed his politics on the colored man. Not very long ago Mr. S. ranked the colored man but a little above the monkey or baboon, but now he had changed his coat.

We then took up a collection towards building an Academy. The Mayor gave us the first five dollars that was given. A Mr. R. who gave us the church lot, said that he would make us a present of the adjoining lot, for which we returned him thanks.

So we have a lot worth $500, and $21,75, in money.

NUMBER XII.

The day had glided pleasantly away, made up of the varied duties of every-day life—when a group of five girls were again seated around the tray of apples, busily paring off the red and golden rind of the ripe fruit, waiting somewhat impatiently for Mama to come and resume the history of her early life that had so deeply interested us the previous evening.

Having adjusted affairs in the sitting-room, and leaving Papa to repose for an hour on the lounge, Mama made her appearance in the kitchen, and took a seat in our midst. A candle placed on the table, shed a cheerful radiance on the happy group. The night was dark and rainy without; but what if it was—if dear Mama was with us, it was as the morning light; we could not live in the darkness if she was by our side, for she seemed to have an eternal light in her soul, that shed its halo all around us. O, ours was a blessed mother, and nothing else!

Mama knew our anxiety to have her continue the narrative of the previous evening, and commenced by saying—"At about the age of seventeen I went to live with aunt Reid and my brothers, near our old home where I was born. Up to this period my advantages to obtain an education had been limited; still I had seized every opportunity, and thus acquired some knowledge of books in school, and had read a good deal. I now felt that the moments were golden, and went to work in earnest to fit myself for a teacher; but not wishing in the meantime to be entirely dependent on my aunt or brothers, I worked at dress making and millinery, which appeared to come to me intuitively; and thus was employed all the hours not in school.

In regard to my early religious training I hardly know how to inform you—my parents were not members of a church, neither were they particularly religious, and yet the fear of God must have been before their eyes, for we were all taught the catechism, also to remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. In those days, the Sabbath commenced at the going down of the sun on Saturday evening, and ended at sundown on the Sabbath While at home, in my Father's house, and at my brothers', I was allowed to indulge in all worldly amusements, and became excessively fond of dancing.

After I went to live with my brothers I heard a great deal of a people called Methodists—having many peculiarities, and not a little despised withal. I, too, learned to consider them as fanatical, and shunned all contact with them for two years. It created no ordinary degree of surprise when Capt. H...., a wealthy and intelligent gentleman, and his family, cast in their lot with the Methodists; they were intimate with my aunt and brothers' families, and of course I knew them well. Mother Hudson, as she was familiarly known, soon became a real "Mother in Israel," and urged me to accompany her to a Methodist meeting. I did so, and the first preacher I heard was Rev. Wm. Case, of precious memory, who, by the way, in after years united your Father and Mother in marriage. The impressions of that first sermon never left me. About six months after that I was induced to attend a Camp Meeting in company with this pious woman, and while at this feast of tabernacles it pleased God to give me a new and joyous heart; while hundreds of happy saints were singing—

"Vain, delusive world, adieu,
With all of creature good;
Only Jesus I pursue,
Who bought me with his blood;
All thy pleasures I forego;
I trample on thy wealth and pride:
Only Jesus will I know,
And Jesus crucified."

The strains of that music, dear children, have been reverberating all along my life's pathway, and sweetly blending with my many years of christian experience. I have often imagined that the first song I sing in heaven will be set to this music—or if permitted to strike a golden harp it will be attuned to that sweet strain. I was very happy listening to the voice of new-born piety, for scores were converted; those were days when the power of God was signally manifested.

One man, notorious for his daring and wickedness in the vicinity, boasted that he would break up the meeting, and frighten this shouting people away; he became the ring-leader of a band of ruffians, and had an immense hat made, saying, 'I am going to carry my tent on my head.' One day they marched on the ground while a man of God was preaching and the people were praying; just as they reached the centre of the ground the power of God smote the leader and he fell prostrate as a dead man, hat and all; this discomfitted the band, and they fled in dismay, themselves far more frightened than they had boasted of frightening God's peculiar people. Fervent prayer was offered for those who had been smitten as was St. Paul on his way to Damascus, to persecute the early church of Jesus. While prayer ascended they cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do to be saved?' Then came the light from heaven, shining into their hearts, and ere long they were found clothed in their right minds, sitting at the feet of Jesus, singing, praying and shouting with these despised Methodists.

Lorenzo Dow was at this camp meeting; he was attired in a robe of very coarse texture, something like tow-cloth; his long hair and flowing beard gave him a very singular appearance; he was exceedingly eccentric, and yet he wrought wonders in the name of the Lord of Hosts.

When I returned from camp meeting I soon learned that the christian's life was a warfare, for my young associates shunned me as one suddenly grown wild. I had no desire to return to my former worldly amusements for the joy in my heart was greater than anything I had before experienced,—still I had many things to contend with, my friends not being Christians, and they tried to convince me that it was only excitement and I would soon abandon it. One gentleman, whose special attention I had received for some time, discontinued his visits as he remarked, until I should get these wild fangled notions out of my head; still none of these things moved me, my heart was fixed, trusting in the Lord.

On a visit to my Father's soon after, the fact that I had become a Methodist had preceeded me, and my old associates had laid many plans to divert my mind from these "wild notions," as they called them. Knowing my fondness for music and the dance, they planned a ball, and fearing I might refuse, kept it a secret until the evening came, when judge H., where I was visiting, came in and said to his wife, who was accessory to it, "there is to be a ball this evening at such a place, about six miles distant, and you and Polly," as I was called in those days for Mary, "must go." I at once remonstrated and said, I cannot go. After pleading and urging me to no avail, he said to his wife, "you must go any way, and as Polly cannot stay alone we will manage to leave her on the way to that old pious Baptist Lady's, and call again for her on our return." To this, I consented. When the evening came, we all got into the sleigh and rode pleasantly along until we came to the Baptist Lady's, house, but he had given the driver orders to drive rapidly past, and then by way of apology said, "when you get there and enjoy a good dance it will drive that wild Methodist fire out of you." I felt grieved at the deception practiced upon me, for now I discovered the plot. I turned my imploring eyes to heaven for help, and felt that God would vindicate my cause.—On reaching the place, the Judge, a strong man, and enjoying this that he called a good joke—but to me it seemed to involve my eternal destiny—took me in his arms and carried me into the room and set me down in a chair. My young friends, understanding the whole, commenced to remove my bonnet and cloak. I could restrain my feelings no longer. I trembled to hear the first sounds of music, lest I should be tempted and yield to the fascination of the dance. My eyes gave vent to a flood of tears which softened some of them into momentary sympathy; I then said firmly, I cannot, and I will not remain; I was promised to be left on the way, and did not intend to come here. The son of the old Baptist Lady being present, and hearing this remark, half-ashamed of the impiety of this scheme to deceive me, and half, it may be, admiring my firmness, said, "you shall go to my mother's if you wish, and I will take you." Immediately the sleigh was at the door, and thus my heavenly Father enabled me to escape this cruel snare.

EVANGELINE.

[For the New Orleans Advocate].

NEW ORLEANS, April 17, 1867.

Now that the sanitary condition of the city is being inquired into by the authorities, I offer the following suggestions, which, if of any value, you can publish in your growing Journal.

New Orleans possess great natural advantages for cleanliness, and if proper direction was given to the labor employed, her streets would be as clean as those of any city in the country. But how often have we seen the filth taken from the side-gutters and thrown into the middle of the streets, there to emit its foul miasma—and the mud of the streets scraped into piles, and there left to be scattered by the passing vehicles, or washed into the gutters again by the first heavy rain. For these rains are our salvation. If the filth, when taken from the gutters was put into buckets or tubs provided for that purpose, and with the mud scraped from the streets, carted immediately away, the saving in labor and the better condition of our city would be manifest.

The practice of sweeping the dust of the streets into piles, is only an invitation to the whirlwind.

The cleanliness of the city would be much improved if a coating of shells was put on the streets now paved with boulders. The surface would thus be made smooth—see the small piece shelled on Lafayette square, in front of the military headquarters. In conclusion, as a further sanitary measure, that the water plugs at the heads of the streets running from the river, be kept open; and that some disinfectant agent, such as lime in the rock, be scattered at the head of these streets, would not the flowing water thus impregnated, give a healthy tone in its entire course, and greatly assist in purifying the canals, bayous and swamps, into which they flow? Nothing is more hurtful than impure evaporation.

HENRY.

Headquarters 2d Republican Club, [Col.,] Baton Rouge, La., April 20. 1867.

Editor Advocate:

DEAR SIR—At a meeting of our Club, held on the night of the 18th inst., at which there was a full attendance, the Club pledged itself in support of the Republican party, and unanimously resolved to support no person or party who once tried to destroy the Union and to perpetuate slavery. The meeting was orderly and composed almost entirely of radical material. The colored men of this parish are wide-awake and thoroughly organized, and will wield the ballot understandingly, and to the general discomfiture of scheming and repentant (?) "rebs," who by seeming to be our friends think to control our votes, and then control us as of old. Their lately conceived friendship for the "colored man" is generally understood, and in the parish of East Baton Rouge. Their schemes are already checkmated; we are willing for them to ride with us, but cannot again trust the reins in their hands.

I remain, yours respectfully,

DAVID GRIMES, President.

HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS.—To those who feel the need of some strengthening bitters or tonic, we would say that none of which we have heard comes more highly recommended than the above. One reason why we can recommend it is, that it is prepared free from poisoned whisky, or any other spiritous liquor. The principal office manufactory is at 631 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa., where it can be obtained of the manufacturers, Jones & Evans, by the quantity, or the single bottle. It is likewise left for sale by all respectable druggists throughout the country.

Information Wanted.

Information is wanted of the family of Daniel Chinn, consisting of his sons January, Amos, Geo. C., and daughter Paulaunnie Chinn, who, some 21 years ago, resided in Owen Co., Ky., with a white man named Richard Sparrows. His family consisted of five sons—Warren, Dowen, Clifford, Henry and Seymour Sparrows. Any information will be thankfully received by addressing the undersigned, who was bought from said Sparrows family by persons named Sanford Davis and Robt. Snells, some 21 years ago.

MILLIE CHINN, Houma, Terrebone Parish, La.

Information wanted by Martha Washington concerning her son Charles Henry King, who belonged to Captain Palmer, Loudoun Co., Va; was taken by his master to Alabama. Address letter with information to Martha Griffin, Thibadeaux, La.

Charlotte Brown, the daughter of Ellick and Charity Brown, desires information concerning her children named Martha, Francis and Robert Smith, Christopher, Joseph Field, and Charles Henry. Also her husband, Rafe Wormerly. Her former owners were Frederick and Margaret Pitcher, Fredericksburg, Va. She left there about the year 1836.

officers, necessary for properly conducting the elections, and will superintend the same.

They will also receive from the commissioners of elections of the different precincts the result of the vote, consolidate the same, and forward it to the Commanding General.

Registers and all officers connected with elections will be held to a rigid accountability, and will be subject to trial by Military Commission for fraud, or unlawful, or improper conduct in the performance of their duties. Their rate of compensation and manner of payment will be in accordance with the provisions of sections 6 and 7 of the supplemental act.

Brevet Brig. Gen. J. W. Forsyth, Assistant Inspector General of the Fifth Military District, is hereby directed to supervise the Board of Registration for the parish of Orleans, to listen to and adjust, or refer to this office all just causes of complaint. He is authorized to employ such experts as may be necessary to detect fraud in registration or elections.

Every male citizen of the United States twenty one years old and upward, of whatever race, color or previous condition, who has been a resident in the State of Louisiana for one year and parish of Orleans for three months previous to the date at which he presents himself for registration, and who has not been disfranchised by act of Congress or for felony at common law, shall, after having taken and subscribed the oath prescribed in the first section of the act herein referred to, be entitled to be, and shall be, registered as a legal voter in the parish of Orleans and State of Louisiana.

Pending the decision of the Attorney General of the United States on the question as to who are disfranceised by law, Registers will give the most rigid interpretation to the law, and exclude from registration every person about whose right to vote there may be a doubt. Any person so excluded, who may, under the decision of the Attorney General be entitled to vote, shall be permitted to register after that decison is received—due notice of which will be given.

MEDICAL.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,
127 CARONDELET STREET,
Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic, and Acute

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician: proving to his patient, that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years, in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient, if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet Street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city

MASON & HAMLIN,

MANUFACTURERS OF

CABINET ORGANS,

ALSO

PORTABLE ORGANS,

ADAPTED TO SECULAR AND SACRED MUSIC, FOR DRAWING-ROOMS, CHURCHES, SUNDAY AND DAY SCHOOLS, LODGES, &C., &C.

Uniting to a considerable extent the capacity of the Piano Forte with that of the Pipe Organ, and costing much less than either.

They occupy little space; are elegant as furniture; not liable to get out of order, and are securely boxed, so that they can be sent anywhere by ordinary freight routes, all ready for use.

Forty Styles, plain or elegant cases; one to twelve stops; Prices, $75, $90, $110, $125, $130, $1 0, $150, $160, $170, $200, $225, $250, $300, $435, $540, $550, $600, and upwards.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs were introduced four years since, and are a great improvement upon the Melodeon, Harmonium, and other reed organs, greatly exceeding them especially in the excellent quality and variety of their tones; in power and quickness of action, and capacity for expression,

THEIR SUCCESS HAS BEEN ENTIRELY BEYOND PRECEDENT,

and proves how greatly such an instrument was needed. Again and again the manufacturers have been compelled to double their manufacturing facilities, until they have been increased six-fold. From the most eminent of the musical profession, the most distinguished pianists, organists, composers, and musical directors, the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs have received an amount and degree of commendation never before bestowed upon any similar musical instrument. More than two hundred and fifty of the most eminent musicians in the country have given written testimonials to the value of the improvements contained in them, and that they excel all other instruments of this class.

FIFTY-TWO GOLD OR SILVER MEDALS, or other highest Premiums have been awarded to Mason & Hamlin for the important improvements effected by them, and for the

SUPERIORITY OF THEIR INSTRUMENTS TO ALL OTHERS.

Constantly exhibiting their instruments in competition with others, they have been awarded the highest premium in every instance, but three or four.

For churches, sunday schools, etc., the Mason & Hamlin cabinet Organs are the instruments long wanted, of the very best quality, abundant power, not too expensive, nor liable to get out of order.

For private use, in drawing-rooms, &c. they are not less desirable, and are finding a place in the musical families of the principal cities.

They are adapted to a wider range of music than the piano, being fitted for all sacred music and for much secular music, while their quickness of action is such that the most lively, rapid music can be played on them. Then their cost is greatly less, as well as their liability to get out of order.

BRIEF EXTRACTS FROM OPINIONS OF DISTINGUISHED MUSICIANS.

I should think they would become very much sought after as parlor instruments as well as for public performance.—Sigismund Thalberg, the world-renowned Pianist.

Sure to find its way into every household of taste and refinement which can possibly afford its moderate expenses. Far superior to everything of its class I have seen.—L. M. Gottschalk, the eminent Pianist. Such pure musical tone, promptness and smoothness of action, and such variety of effect, I have not found in any other instrument of the class.—S. B. Mills, the eminent Pianist. Really so excellent that there can hardly be much difference of opinion respecting them.—William Mason, the eminent Pianist. The best instrument of its class with which I am acquainted, and worthy a place in every drawing room Harry Anderson, the eminent Pianist. In every respect far superior to everything I have ever seen of the kind, whether in Europe or America.—Geo. Washbourne organ the eminent organist, N. Y. I can only reiterate what so many in the musical profession have said, that for equality, promptness and exquisite tone, they are unequalled.—John H. Wilcox, the eminent Organist, Boston, surpasses everything in this line I have ever seen, whether French or American.—Jon Zundel, the eminent Organist, N. Y. The best reed instruments in the world are made in the United States, and your Cabinet Organs are greatly superior, and by far the best made here.—Max Maretzer, Musical Conductor, N. Y. Far surpasses all other similar instruments, which have come under my observation.—Carl Zerhan, Musical Conductor, Boston. Exceeds in my estimation every other instrument of this general class. Thos. Hastings. I can recommend them with confidence.—Lowell Mason. As soon as the people become acquainted with the superior merits of your instruments, your only trouble will be to supply the demand.—Wm. B. Bradbury I have never seen anything of the kind which interested me so much.—Geo. F. Root. Excites much interest in musical circles, and already becoming the fashion. N. Y. Home Journal. The highest accomplishment of industry in this department. This is not only our opinion, but the unanimous verdict of the organists.—Boston Advertiser. A glorious instrument for the temple service, so readily secured as to be available for any congregation, and effective and beautiful as to meet the desires of the most refined and fastidious.—N. Y. Observer.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs must not be confounded with other reed instruments, from which they vary essentially, their superiority being largely derived from PATENTED IMPROVEMENTS, which cannot be employed by other makers. Among them are,

The AUTOMATIC BELLOWS SWELL, patented, a most important invention, and greatly the best swell ever devised being much more effective and easily used than any other. The variety and beauty of effect of which it is capable, can not be appreciated except from actual use. The many attempts to imitate or find a substitute for this swell, prove its value. None of them, however, approach it in excellence and simplicity.

IMPROVED SELF-ADJUSTING VALVES patented, secure much more perfect action, durability, and freedom from liability to get out of order.

WOOD'S OCTAVE COUPLET patented, in effect nearly doubles the power of the instrument in which it is used.

NOISELESS SAFETY VALVES patented, prevent the hissing sound often heard.

The IMPROVED COMBINATION REGISTER patented, gives great facility in drawing stops.

NATURE'S Prayer and Praise.

The harp at Nature's advent strung
Has never ceased to play;
The song the stars of morning sung
Has never died away.

And prayer is made and praise is given
By all things near and far;
The ocean looketh up to heaven,
And mirrors every star.

Its waves are kneeling on the strand,
As kneels the human knee;
Their white locks bowing to the sand—
The priesthood of the sea!

They pour their glittering treasures forth,
Their gifts of pearl they bring,
And all the listening hills of earth
Take up the songs they sing.

The green earth sends her treasures up
From many a mountain shrine;
From folded leaf and dewy cup
She pours her sacred wine.

The mists above the morning rills
Rise white as wings of prayer;
The altar curtains of the hills,
Are sunset's purple air.

The winds with hymns of praise are loud,
Or low with sobs of pain,
The thunder-organ of the cloud,
The dropping tears of rain.

With drooping head, and branches cross'd,
That twilight forest grieves;
Or speaks with tongues of Pentecost,
From all its sunlit leaves.

The blue sky is the temple's arch,
Its trancept, earth and air;
The music of its starry march
The chorus of a prayer.

Thus Nature keeps the reverent frame
With which her years began,
And all her signs of voices shame
The prayerless heart of man.

[For the New Orleans Advocate].

Manifested Sympathy

AS AN ELEMENT IN EVANGELIZING THE WORLD.

BY CHAS. M. GIFFIN, OF CINCINNATI CONFERENCE.

It can only be a brainless and heartless professor of christianity who can be blind and careless as to the fearful demoralization of our race. Those who live amid the quiet and lovely scenes of the rural districts may be excusable for a want of that intense anxiety that the denizens of our city should feel, but he that can reside in a large metropolis where vice is bold, developed and venerable with age and, yet be indifferent, has no lot in the spirit of a propogating religion. The duty of interest in the moral elevation of others is one that is clearly taught in the Scriptures, and is certainly the very embodiment of the idea of redemption. No man can have rightly learned Christ who can wrap himself in himself and thus separated from all, glory in a personal salvation without recognizing the holy ties that unite him to the universal brotherhood and demand his labors and prayers in their behalf. Even where this duty of caring for others is acknowledged, we find a dimness thrown about it that makes it very uncertain in the nature of the obligation that it creates. To some whose eyes are but partly opened, this responsibility all centres in contributions. They go before the altar of God and lay on it their hundreds and thousands of dollars for the spread of saving knowledge and then retire, singing lullabies to their consciences, admiring themselves for their charity, and resting in the praise their own deceitful hearts and the flattering tongues of their fellows render unto them. These are contented with an offering of money only, and this is their mistake. So far as they have gone, they do well. These things they ought to do, but there is something else they should not leave undone. Money may be the tribute of a heart that is but poorly in sympathy with Christ's infinite love, and only hopes by gold to buy the favor of that God whom it fears, even dreads, but its faith and love never realize trust. There are many in the churches who are satisfied to pay their debts to others by praying for them. Some of this class belong to the first and give their money with their prayers. These approximate closely to the perfection of duty well performed. They lack but one thing to make them in their places what Christ was in his. We do have some admiration for those who join gold and petitions as their contributions to hasten the religious uplifting of their kind, for prayer prevails with God and money will procure the services of those who, moved by the Spirit, will go out on the work of evangelization. But for a professor of religion who will render unto his dying fellows nothing but the useless offer of his unheard and unanswered petition, we have no regard, and cannot, even in our charity, hope or believe that such are regarded favorably by God. What is the test of the honesty of a prayer? Does it reproduce itself in the practice of the supplicant? If you pray for repentance and repeat your sin, there was insincerity in your effort at the throne of grace. If you pray for others and bind your dollars to your heart, refusing to give and close your emotions so as to have no power to act, you have written hypocracy on the utterance of your lips. There is something wanted more than money, prayers or profession. It is that manifested sympathy that is the grandest power in human elevation. Look at Jesus, who is our example. Between himself and the Pharisees there was a perfect contrast.. We cannot question that it was a theory with this sect as with many in the church to-day, that the vile and wretched should be made happy and pure. How did they design teaching these classes their vileness? Not by anything else than their own proud, boastful pretensions to holiness. "See us and in the sight behold the depth of your degradation!" Then they drew the line beyond which these poor outcasts dare never venture. The Pharisee had a purity that could not bear the touch of a publican or sinner. It was a frail virtue that would be soiled or withered by contact with the vicious and defamed. Christ came purer than they all, challenging the world to show him a fault in his life, as innocent as a lamb, as loving as the Father in heaven. He did not deny that sinners were vile; he did not abate one jot or title of the law, but echoed its thunders against transgression. He professed to believe men should and could rise, and then began to work as if that profession was truth and not a lie. While he claimed purity, he taught that it was not so heavenly that earthlings by nearness to him, could rob it of its glory. He never seemed to think of defeat, but always of victory. We see him drawing the very dregs of society about himself, while he talked of truth and showed the powerful pity of God. So that Christ's biography was written in one sentence, "he went about doing good." Not in fear did he withhold himself from the demoralized, nor in indifference did he sit down in inactivity, nor in pious sentimentalism, only beseech God in their behalf, nor only give of his substance to satisfy the claims they had upon him, but reading their deepest want he met it by going down to them to tell them how dear they were to God, and that they had a right to reform, and divine help would be given to alter the life, and thus he cheered them by his sympathy; taught them by his doctrine; guided them by his spirit, and saved them by his blood. No wonder all the publicans and sinners drew near to him. There was a power in his mission and they felt it like a golden chain drawing them nearer to love, restored to purity and the possibility of heaven. The coldness of Phariseeism would have been the death of redemption if Christ had shown it, and wherever his deciples have the same indifference, vital piety and church growth are unknown. By far too much of our religion is a theory. The drifting multitudes float by, battling with waves of woe and want and wickedness, and we look on as unmoved as if it were but a spectacular drama on some theatrical stage. We write in our creed that they are dying of their sins and must be damned unless saved by the gospel, and yet we act as if we thought they were borne by angels' wings to heavenly homes and joys. And even when the spirit of Christ does take hold of a man or a woman and they begin to seek their fellows where they sink the lowest, the cry is raised against them by their friends in the church and for loving souls they are scandalized. Who does not accept the theory that we are to help the sinner to God, that is our life work. Who ever thinks of going to the home of that drunkard in the morning when he is just walking from his delirium and trying to get him to make a vow of sobriety? Who even dares to enter yon house that is darker than a sepulcher and try to resurrect the glorious womanhood that is buried there? We are afraid of being defied! Every day we mingle with the unconverted in business relations. They are often the visitors to these dens of iniquity, and by their means keep them alive. We do not think that by associating with these we compromise the dignity of morality. Why then should we in the other case unless it be their vice has no cloak? How inconsistent! If you repudiate one sinner reject them all and stand in holy horror of every one that is not a genuine devotee to religion. No one who thinks what grace has done for him will despise a fellow sinner. God's good providence and loving grace have helped us to be everything that is good in us and restrained us from all that is wrong in others. That bishop had a clear conviction of his debt of gratitude to one above when he exclaimed, as he pointed to a reeling drunkard going by—"there goes me except for the grace of God." We have been helped by divine power or we might ere this have been in an infamy as deep and dark as hell. Shall we vainly lift up ourselves and curse those beneath us? Rather shall we not glorify God for what he has done and show love to that fallen brother or sister? Think what it is the degraded need. It is this very sympathy and love we would show by going to them. Mark the downward progress of those who have reached the bottom of social rank. They sin in some way that is accounted odious. A reflection of the feeling others have toward them falls like a blighting shadow upon their hearts. That is the first step down the fatal stairway. If a man is right he may hold to his personal nobility if all others account him a sinner, for so Christ did. But if he is doing wrong and he finds that others know it and despise him for it, he will begin to despise himself, and then his ruin is nearly complete. Self-respect is gone and the foundation of virtuous action has been removed. See that tippler. Tempted for the first time, he enters a bar room. How quick and sly his glances lest some one should see him as he goes to the counter to get his first dram. He drinks with trembling haste lest some should enter and recognize him. He slips out as easily and quickly as he entered. It is one year since he took that first drink—see that sneaking tippler transformed into the confirmed drunkard, lounging about the door of the dramhole as if it were his home. Behold that innocent maiden! Her unsuspecting love trusts the betrayer and her virtue is stolen from her. Heartless society brands her with infamy and her own heart condemns, and with none to help her she goes quickly from one degree of degradation to a deeper nntil now the blushing girl treads our streets as an abandoned harlot! These have lost self-respect, the greatest loss that is possible. How shall this be restored? Not by the holy refraining from contact with them, but by going to them and making them feel there is a nobility buried in them, and no matter how deep its grave, it can be resurrected. There is a gem in every victim of vice that may be brought out of its burial place and polished bright for immortal gleaming. Reader, that is your work and mine. Treat all like friends and none like brutes. A Pharisaical spirit will bind more souls in ruin than any other one influence. If Christians are cold and cruel no wonder men sink hopelessly under the power of vice. We neglect them and our actions speak to them badly. They say, either they are not worth saving or redemption is impossible; in either case they have no hope rising. O, what has not the world felt of the awful influence of an unsympathizing church. The professed Christians of this land need a heart of flesh; one that can feel and throb in sympathy, and dictate high and noble efforts in behalf of those pressed down under the weight of sin and shame. These wicked people have a right to expect it of us, and are justly disappointed when it is not exhibited. And what a bitter disappointment it is! The only place whence they could look for smiles, and there they see darkest frowns. The poor, neglected outcast, who lay down to rest and in her dreams was carried back to the home where once she was the darling child and thought and frenzied with the thought of being again loved by those who had spurned her for her waywardness, she awoke only to find herself hated and alone, is but the picture of the disappointed thousands who wait for a word of welcome from the pious, and wait in vain. Oh! for a sympathetic church in all this land, to save us from the tide of woe that sweeps toward us If we are not to receive sinners, but reject and despise them, we can see nothing to save the lost. The first oath, the first theft, the first drink of rum, the first sensual indulgence, binds eternal chains upon the soul, and writes "hopeless" on every sinner's time and eternity!

"She saw again her father's smile,

Sammy was reading the Bible very attentively, when his father came into the room and asked him what he had found that was so interesting. The boy looking up eagerly, exclaimed: "I have found a place in the Bible where they were all Methodists!" "How so?" inquired the father. "Because," said he, 'all the people said Amen."

Recollections of the late War.

BY A MUSICIAN.

NO. III.

Off for Vicksburg—Christmas Eve—Up the Yazoo—Chickasaw Bayou—On to the City—A negro guide—Driving in the pickets—The night before a battle—The ball opened—"Dodging around"—Terrific firing—A march towards the jaws of death—The attack a failure.

About the time we had begun to enjoy camp life the order came for us to report at the river bank. On the boat we went, soldiers, horses, cattle and mules; and being provided with rations and other things necessary for a campaign, we were now ready to turn our backs upon Helena for the vicinity of Vicksburg. But an army of boats is almost as unwieldy as an army of men; and it required considerable time to muster them in marching order. At length the signal gun was fired and we moved off down the river in regular order. Meanwhile the little boats called "orderlies" were as busy as bees conveying intelligence from one boat to another, reminding me continually of the little orderly sergeant of one of our companies.

We spent Christmas eve at Milliken's Bend. Many of the boys spoke of where they were a year before, and the striking difference of circumstances and surroundings afforded a contrast which tended to make us feel melancholy. To call to mind the merry party, the roast turkey and the rosy cheeked girls, while we were eating hard crackers and raw meat on a miserable transport, was enough to make the most thoughtless look serious. And then the "holidays," the time of mirth and gayety, where should we spend them? Ye who think that soldiers are reckless and wicked, could you have seen us then, your opinion might have undergone a change. Instead of a party, we had meeting at night, when our chaplain commended us to Him, without whose notice a sparrow cannot fall to the ground.

The day after Christmas we started up the Yazoo river, landing on the day following, about noon, on the left bank some three miles from Yazoo Bluffs. The main army, thirty thousand strong, disembarked below the mouth of Chickasaw Bayou, while our division, except one brigade, was landed above it. Taking from our knapsacks an oil cloth and blanket, and providing ourselves according to orders, with three days rations, we caught up the war cry of "on to Vicksburg." Already we heard, as we supposed, the thunder of Grant's guns in the direction of Haine's Bluffs, and our hearts beat high with expectation when—we were marched into a large field of cockle-burs. They stood thick upon the ground and so high that the tallest man on horseback could not see over them. However we considered them beneath our notice and were more glad than otherwise when the command of "forward, march," was given. The sun was now about two hours high; it was some five miles to Vicksburg, and allowing a few minutes for unavoidable delays, we expected to reach that city about the time of the going down of the sun. To facilitate our progress we secured the services of a "negro guide," who professed to be well "posted." Had we known more fully the "lay of the land" before us, perhaps we would not have been so sanguine. On our right was the Chickasaw Bayou; on our left a swamp; and immediately in front was a narrow neck of land leading to a long corduroy causeway, which, in its turn, led directly to the mouths of the enemy's big guns at the foot of the bluffs.

As we were marching along full of hope, an idea struck one of our boys, and he asked our "guide" how many men were guarding the road we were about to take. "About five hundred," said he.

"And how long has it been since you saw them?"

"Only two days ago, massa," said he.

The answer did not seem as satisfactory as the "guide" had supposed; at any rate a faint suspicion entered our minds that there might have been some changes within that length of time which might hinder our progress.

A few minutes afterward, and while the members of the field band were walking carelessly along on top of the levee, seeing what we could see, the sound of musketry and the whiz of bullets about our ears told us that the rebel pickets were not far off and knew we were coming. They had fired upon our advanced guard, and we being in a direct line to the rear felt the pleasing (?) emotion of being under fire. Of course we got off the levee in double quick, and sought a less conspicuous locality. Seating myself upon a log, (the regiment having now halted,) and while trying to collect my scattered thoughts, something struck a high stump near by, buzzed leisurely over my head and fell upon the ground, a few feet from where I was sitting. It proved to be a stray piece of shell of a moderate size and a very ugly shape. The report of small arms was near by on our right, but the cannonading was so far away it seemed almost a mystery how that piece of shell had wandered so far out of its path.

As night was now approaching we concluded to defer the taking of Vicksburg until another day; especially as the rapid increase of musketry on our right made it evident that the enterprise would be no child's play. Being within range of the enemies' guns we could build no fires for cooking, and could therefore do nothing but eat our supper of hard crackers and raw meat, spread down our blankets and try to sleep.

The night before a battle! Ah, who can describe the emotions of such a time? Could some ready writer have noted the thoughts of that vast multitude, what a page they would make in in history! As to myself, I was soon asleep, but awaking several times in the night, the thought that there might be a terrible conflict on the following day would rush through my mind, filling me with strange, indescribable emotions. We arose early, and while yet dark, built a fire behind a large tree, fried some meat, made coffee and ate our breakfast. Then after reading a chapter from the Bible, as was our custom at Helena, and filling our canteens with water we were ready for the duties of the day.

A heavy fog hung around us and delayed operations till the sun drove it away. Then we heard a heavy gun on our right, soon another and another. A little after we heard the sound of musketry as though a charge was being made on the rebel works. Then came orders for us to "fall in," and in a few minutes "forward, march," was sounded along the line. We moved forward through the dense woods, somewhat mechanically, expecting every moment to receive a salute from the rebels. Gaining position our artillery opened fire, which was answered promptly by theirs. First came a shot through the tops of the trees, scattering the limbs and creating quite a havoc. Then came another and another, until directly one came shrieking above our heads and buried itself in a tree near by. From then till noon we had a practical illustration of the old song "Dodging Around" acted out by those not in ranks. Getting behind a tree I felt comparatively safe, till looking up I saw several large branches which I thought might accidently fall upon my head, and concluding that a tree was poor protection, immediately "stood from under."

By noon the cannonading, except along the levee, had slackened on our side of the bayou, and nothing but occasional rifle balls were left to break the peace. These did but little damage to our regiment, as the rank and file, in obedience to orders, lay close to the grounnd during the day; only two being killed and one or two wounded. As soon as my fears had subsided sufficiently to allow my curiosity to get the better of them, I concluded to go once more to the levee and get a glimpse of the rebs and their works. I was on it about a second when the "whiz" of several bullets and the explosion of a shell a few rods in front offered great inducements to a speedy retreat. But "why are we lying still and doing nothing when there is such heavy work to our right?" was the query often put by our soldiers without a satisfactory answer. We afterwards learned that to have gone forward would have realized the fearful description,

"Cannon to the righ of us,
Cannon to the left of us,
Cannon in front of us,
Volleyed and thundered."

And then the retreat that would have been inevitable over that long corduroy causeway would have exposed us to a tremendous enfilading fire. What could we do then but retire to the boats, go around below the mouth of Chickasaw Bayou and get in position to assist our wearied comrades on the morrow.

Toward noon of the next day the most terrific cannonading began that I had yet heard. The rattle of musketry, though nearly three miles away, and the roar of artillery were truly awful. About noon the last brigade, (Hovey's) of Steel's division took up its line of march for the scene of action. And such a march! From our front, and stretching as far as the eye could reach towards the field of battle, was a long line of ambulances winding their slow way back to the river. As we met and passed them some were gory with blood; from others came the groans of the wounded.

As I write the scene rises vividly before me; that long line of ambulances emerging from, and our solemn march towards the "jaws of death."

But little more need to be told. By the time we had arrived at the front the firing had almost ceased, the attack had been a failure, and the first sad sickening reverse had been given to our arms in the west. The soldiers felt aggrieved. It seemed that more had been required than they could reasonably be expected to accomplish; and yielding to the first impulse, laid the blame on Sherman, not knowing then the real cause of the failure which was the traitorous or imbecile conduct of Col. Murphy, in command at Holly Springs.

A Smile or a Tear.

BY M. ANNESLEY.

Experience is mental fact, and it comes home to the heart—and many a one will respond to this little incident of internal life—that in the way of duty we increase grace to bear trial. It is quite a mistake to shut one's self up to brood upon sorrow, and nurse unbelief—for it is the very same kind of trial which Christ has carried thousands of his children safely through. Said one, "a sadness was upon my spirit, and not from an imaginary cause, either. I was seeking a time and place to weep, and could hardly control the starting tear from others; but one duty after another pressed so closely, that the grief could not be indulged; then I was unexpectedly called to visit a sick and dying person, who had been recently reclaimed from his erring ways. I sat down beside him, and we talked most cheerfully of his future home, and the love of Jesus; he smiled, and was very happy—ready to bid farewell to earth and its cares. I prayed with him, and came away. The ready tear was gone, and I had a sweet smile in my heart. Then, in the evening meeting found a vacant space to speak for Jesus, and honor him, by saying what I did know of his love, and when retiring to rest gladness filled my heart, and there were no tears to be found."

Give Jesus the benefit of all your sorrow, that he may wipe it away with his "soft hand," as good Rutherford says.

Liberia Mission Conference.

The annual session of this conference was held in Careysburgh, Liberia, Western Africa, in February. Bishop Roberts presided. The same number of preachers are stationed this year as last, namely, seventeen. The ministerial work embraces, in addition to these, thirty-one local preachers. The pastoral work is divided into five districts, each presiding elder having also a pastoral charge assigned him. The following table presents the principal statistics:

	Liberians. Americans	Natives.	Baptisms.	Churches.	Val. of Ch. Property
Monrovia.....	159	40	17	1	$3,000

Death of Ex-Governor Wright.

By a cable dispatch of the 13th inst., we learn of the death and burial of the Hon. Joseph A. Wright, American Minister to the Court of Prussia. This sad intelligence will fill the land with mourning. Few of our public men were more highly esteemed than he. Rising from the great mass of the people, and without special, early advantages, he attained a national reputation, which will live in history. Born in Washington Co., Pa., April 17, 1810, at the age of nineteen, he was admitted to the bar in Indiana, whither the family had previously removed, where he soon found himself in the midst of an excellent practice. In 1833 he was elected to the State legislature, where he soon attracted attention by his eloquent advocacy of important measures for the improvement of the State. In 1840 he was elected to the State Senate, and in 1843 to Congress. At the expiration of his Congressional term in 1849 he was chosen governor of the State, running largely ahead of his ticket. At the close of his first term he was re-elected by largely increased majorities. At the close of his second term he returned to private life, but was soon called by the United States government to represent it at the court of Berlin. His success at his last post has been most honorable to himself and to the country which he represents.

Governor Wright has long been a devoted and useful member of the M. E. Church, promoting her various interests with distinguished ability and zeal. He has been thrice married, his third wife being Mrs. Caroline R. Deuel, a lady well and favorably known to the Christian public of New York. Personally, Governor Wright has always been characterized as a frank, courteous, hospitable Christian gentleman. His health has been very feeble for several months, during which time Mrs. Wright has watched over him with the most tender care. Recently letters have assured us that during his continued serious illness his Christian experience has been most triumphant.

On March 19, Mrs. Wright wrote us as follows:

24 Riegenten Strasse,
Berlin, March 19.

My Dear Friend:—The continued illness of my dear husband forces me to answer your kind letter to him, which was received this morning—giving us both real pleasure.

* * * *

Oh, how often have I wished for you both to come to Europe—no one out of my own family would either Mr. Wright or myself rather see than you and your blessed wife, (my darling friend.) Since the serious illness of Mr. W.—now four months since he was taken sick—how often have I thought of you, associated as you are with the most eventful portion of my life, and how much pleasure it would be to us if you could only come and sit an hour or two in our sick chamber. I cannot tell you, my beloved friends, what I have suffered mentally the past winter. Mr. Wright's critical situation giving me continual anxiety and apprehension; my mind was alternating between hope and fear for several weeks. One great cause of anxiety was that he might drop instantly away, his heart being suffused in water. The most eminent of the Medical Faculty of Germany were called, and consultation after consultation was held—but no radical change or relief, except when the water was removed mechanically. About a week since we changed to Homeopathy, being the third change we have made since his illness. God grant that this may prove effectual. So far we feel greatly encouraged.

But, my brother, you will be most pleased to learn that amid all these sorrows, anxieties and fears, neither of us have been left comfortless—no, the gracious, loving Master has been constantly with us, enlarging our views of his Sovereign Compassion and Infinite Love. Ever whispering to our hearts, "I am thy Salvation," "I will never leave or forsake thee." And His precious invitation to "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Never before have the gracious promises of the Redeemer seemed so full of meaning, and never before have we been able to grasp the richness of the fullness they embody. The great advancement in spiritual light and knowledge imparted to my precious invalid since his affliction, is worth living for many wearisome, sorrowing, and tedious years,—if years could be tedious with the presence of the blessed Comforter, whispering hourly, "Let not your heart be troubled."

Mr. W. is the most changed person you could imagine—all serenity, calmness, perfectly submissive to the will of God, living or dying. He can say emphatically with the great Apostle, "For me to live, is Christ; to die, is gain." Would that I possessed the same passive trust and resignation. I cannot say from the heart "Thy will be done," if my husband is to be removed by death, but I can and do plead constantly for that grace that will uphold and sustain me under every trial, however great. Do unite with me in strong supplications that his precious life may be spared to me, to his family, to the Church, and his Country."

On the margin of this letter the Governor wrote us the following beautiful lines:

My Dearest Friends:—God bless you for giving you such a companion in my affliction. My peace is made with my God, and I am ready to fall into the arms of my blessed Redeemer, who will accept all who trust him. I think I shall never see you, dear Brother and Sister, in this world. But my hope is full of immortality and of meeting you above.

Your affectionate brother in Christ,
J. A. Wright.

Who Shall Rule?

Shall white men or black men rule this city? Such is the issue which is being forced upon our community. It is a question of the gravest possible import. It is a movement environed with difficulties and pregnant with results which appall our best and wisest citizens. It is the tocsin note of the "war of races"

Not content with their right of suffrage; not satisfied with their eligibility to office, there are certain men of color in New Orleans who now claim the exclusive right to rule this city. We had fondly hoped that such an issue would not be raised, but as it is forced upon us, we shall meet it fairly and oppose it to the utmost of our ability. In the discussion of this grave question, it may be well to consider, Who these men are—What are the grounds of their claim, and What are the reasons for our opposition.

We make the first point—Who these men are, because we here enter a disclaimer in behalf of the Freedmen of this city, that they are not party to this claim. Grateful to their deliverers, conscious of their own yet incompetency, and themselves opposed to caste, they do not favor an exclusively colored government for New Orleans. Content to share with the white man in the offices of public trust, they are too sensible, modest and patriotic to put forth a claim for exclusive rule. Well knowing that they owe to their white friends their liberty and their right of suffrage, they are not such ingrates as to turn and rend their benefactors; and having trusted those friends in the past, without disappointment, they feel that they can trust them for the future. But not so with the handful of free-born blacks, who are the claimants of exclusive rule. Formerly slave-holders themselves, who bought and sold their own brethren, and some of whom fought bravely in the confederate ranks, they are as much opposed to the Freedman holding office as they are opposed to our white loyal citizens being elected to share with them the positions of trust and power. With them, it is not a question of color but of class; not of race, but of caste. Having observed for many months this tendency to caste, we now solemnly protest against it. The free-born negro has no rights which do not belong to the freedman, and by nature has no superiority. We therefore reiterate the opinion, that those who favor the exclusion of white men from participation in the government of this city, are not the Freedmen, but colored Creoles, and we are glad to know their number though influential, is as yet small;—many of the free-born blacks of New Orleans have now no sympathy with this movement—they are too wise and generous.

But What are the grounds of their claims? It is boldly announced that the white Republicans of New Orleans cannot be trusted with its government. Had this announcement been made by the N. O. Times, it would not have surprised us; but coming from the source from which it emanates, it is the echoed slander of rebellion, treason, and slavery. Forgetful of the past services of these loyal white men, to the colored race, they are denounced as traitors to the principles for which they have fought, suffered and sacrificed property and position. Another instance of such ingratitude can hardly be found in history. Trusted in the long struggle for freedom; trusted to fight the battles of the Union; trusted in the effort to secure the right of suffrage; they are now slandered, rejected, forgotten. This is too much for white men to endure! It was what our enemies predicted, but what we never feared; yet you have fulfilled the prophecy, and aroused the fear.

The complaint is made that colored registrars and policemen have not been appointed; and Mayor Heath is made the scape-goat to bear the sins of his friends to the wilderness of oblivion. There is not a white Republican in this city, who is not in favor of such appointments and did not do what he could to secure the same; but for satisfactory reasons, the appointing power declined to accede to their wishes. Colored men with white men were reported as registrars of voters by the white gentlemen who had been selected to nominate such officers, but having determined that the holding of office by colored men should be initiated by the people themselves, the commanding General selected white union men only. For the like reason, the same power refused to accede to the Mayor's wish for some colored policemen. And now because his wish was not complied with, Mr. Heath is called upon to resign. A similar request was made to Mr Stanton, but the Secretary of War could better serve his country by remaining in Mr. Johnson's cabinet, than by resigning. Precisely so with Mayor Heath. He has wisely remained, and we trust he will remain.

And we have now to consider—What are the reasons of our opposition to this claim for exclusive colored rule in New Orleans.

I. It is the inauguration of the "war of races." If the plan is adopted, it will be black man against white man. The animus of the opposition will not be Republican against Democrat, the loyal against the disloyal, but the African against the Caucasian. Without a justifying motive; without a great, broad, sound principle to advocate as the reason for such a contest; without the shadow of an excuse for this intestine strife, the only apology that can be offered, is the difference of the races. It is the most heartless, bootless, infidel, inhuman conception of the age. Nor should the blacks forget, that in this contest they must be the greater sufferers. While conceding that all men are created equal, yet, because of superior numbers, advantages, and powers, we hold that such a strife of the races will end in the total destruction of the colored race. It is a law of God, that the superior, when right, shall triumph. Enter this contest, and you will unite the whites throughout the nation, and the blacks will fade before them like the red men of the forest. The true principle, and the only one of safety, is, not to vote for a man because he is black, or because he is white, but because he is a Man.

II. It will be the destruction of the great Republican party. Neither the white man's party nor the black man's, its great moving principle is the common brotherhood of man. Its leaders can never consent to the admission or exclusion of men because of race or color. Having been instrumental in the elevation of the blacks to what they are, that party would be held responsible were it to recognize a Black Republican Party in the South; and being held thus responsible, the loyal people of this country would abandon its ranks and seek an organization more consistent with the genius and institutions of the Republic; indeed, they would unite heart and soul to defeat such a movement as we are now opposing. They are the friends of the negro, not because he is black, but because he is a man; not because he is an African, but because he is a citizen. If the originators of this measure persist in their suicidal course, we shall counsel all Republicans to abandon them to their well-deserved fate. And it should not be forgotten that these persons are now advocating for themselves, that which they have so violently condemned in others—political caste.

III. It is anti-Christian, anti-human, anti-republican. The gospel of Jesus is no respecter of persons. Its Divine Founder recognized the unity of our race, and taught that all men are brethren; that men are to be preferred for what they are, and not for what they have; and, that the true type of the Church and the State is where all men are equal before the altar and before the law. Upon these benevolent doctrines rests the Republic of our fathers. He who denies these principles or obstructs their practical application is not a Republican, whatever may be his high-sounding professions; he is rather an exclusionist, a factionist, an enemy to his kind. Humanity—broad, grand, united, lifts its voice against this political caste; every dictate of religion condemns this race-exclusiveness.; and all the great, fundamental principles of our government, stand in unconquerable antagonism to the "war of races."

To Our Colored People.

Last week, we called the attention of our colored people to the fact, that it is their solemn duty to carefully avoid collisions with the whites. We know that our church-members will reverently heed our advice; but there are those who are not within the pale of the church, who seem determined to have a row. Under pretense of obtaining their rights, they cause public disturbances and provoke quarrels. Several instances of this kind have occurred within the past week, and others are likely to occur. Ever willing to aid our colored men to obtain every right which belongs to the American citizen, yet we now plainly say to the disturbers of the public peace, that we shall do all that is within our power to bring such to justice. We have lived long enough to know that there are mean black men, as well as mean white men, and we have no sympathy with either. A bad man with a black skin is not entitled to more favor than a bad man with a white skin. When negroes become loafers and rowdies, the best place for them is the Parish prison. We are aware that there are some white men in this community who call themselves Republicans, who instigate these black men, to such violations of the peace, and we now forewarn these men, that they are known to the authorities, both civil and military, and if they are not careful, they will find themselves in limbo, before many days. In the present state of society, every man should seek to promote the public peace, add pass through the present political excitement in the most harmonious manner possible.

The Mass Meeting.

From ten to twenty thousand people assembled last saturday night in Lafayette Square, to welcome the Hon. William D. Kelley to New Orleans. It was the out-pouring of the loyal people of this city, who were decorous and enthusiastic. On the stand were many of our well-tried loyal citizens, while around the stand, the freedmen assembled in thousands. His Hon. Mayor Heath, presided and introduced Mr. Kelley in a few well-timed remarks. Judge Kelley then proceeded to deliver a carefully prepared address, which was received with frequent applause. He reviewed the history of the great anti-slavery struggle in this country, and then gave some wise counsels to both whites and blacks. He was followed by Thomas W. Conway, who was warmly received by his old Louisiana friends. A series of resolutions were read and adopted, when the vast assembly quietly dispersed.

Editorial Items.

Rev. Mr. McDonald will preach in the Hall of the House of Representatives, to-morrow, at 11 o'clock.

Religious services will be held as usual, at Eagle Hall, corner of Prytania and Felicity Sts., to-morrow evening, at half past seven o'clock.

The First National Bank of New Orleans, has been closed by order of commissioners from Washington. The deficit is over $800,000. Many of our citizens were depositers and are the immediate sufferers. Mr. May, late President, has surrendered all his private property ($1,200,000,) to meet the deficiency.

The U. S. Assistant Treasurer is implicated, in the affair, to the extent of one million dollars.

A serious riot occurred in Mobile on the 15th inst., while Judge Kelley of Philadelphia was speaking. Several persons were killed and others wounded.

Mayor Heath and General Mower have issued proclamations to the citizens of New Orleans, to keep the peace. There is much political excitement in town, and an outbreak may occur at any moment.

Hon. Senator Wilson, of Massachusetts, addressed an immense mass-meeting in this city, on last Thursday night. He is a wise counselor and an eloquent orator.

Collector Kellog, of the Customhouse has appointed four colored men to positions in his department. This is the be ginning.

Clerk of the Fifth District Court.—We are happy to announce the appointment, by General Sheridan, of Francis A. Woolfley, as Clerk of the Fifth District Court, in the city of New Orleans, in place of Louis Power, dismissed. The General could not have made a more popular or judicious selection.

General Sypher.—This Gentleman was recently appointed deputy collector of internal revenue, for this district, by General Steedman, but was removed from office on Thursday last because he participated in the reception given to Hon. Judge Kelley. We are not surprised at this, for a man like General Steedman, who intentionally sought the downfall of that noble one armed soldier of the Republic. Major General O. O. Howard, is capable of doing very small things.

To preachers and people of the Mississippi District:

Dear Brethren—On account of the sickness of my family, whom I have not seen for over a year, I shall be gone North about a month. This will compel me to postpone some matters requiring early attention.

Wm. M. Darnell.

May 10th, 1867.

Central Executive Committee.—At a session of this body, held last evening, a resolution was adopted providing that the future meetings of the committee shall be held in Economy Hall, Ursulines street.

W. R. Crane, president of the committee, tendered his resignation, which was accepted. Hon. Rufus Waples was then unanimously chosen presiding officer by acclamation.

National Reconstruction State Committee.—George A. Fosdick has been elected President of that Committee, in place of J. Q. A. Fellows resigned.

Jefferson Davis has been released on bail in the sum of $100,000.. Horace Greely is on his bond.

Registration in the Parishes.

From private letters we are enabled to lay before our readers some facts on the progress of registration in the county parishes:

PARISH OF ASCEENSION.

From this parish we learn that up to the 11th inst., there had been 1054 persons registered, of whom 91 were white and the remainder colored.

CADDO PARISH.

Shreveport, May 7th, 1867.

The steamer National will leave here to-day with five thieves—three destined for the penitentiary. Two brothers, Jourdan and Addison Kelley, aged 22 and 24 years, for six months, for stealing a pistol. They are bad characters. One negro for two years, for stealing a mule. The two others are youths of 17 and 21 years, of better parentage, and of sufficient influence to shield them from a deserved place in the penitentiary. The eldest, Henry Hein, is a very shrewd young man, of more than common ability; has been declared insane, and is a fit subject for the Asylum. (This may account for the report from that institution that they have more applications than they could make provision for.) This boy stole several thousand dollars worth of jewelry, and it is not his first offence. The other, young Lacy, is under bonds at Marshall, Texas, for stealing a horse, but to save farther disgrace, his friends are sending him below to have him shipped before the mast on an English vessel. He is a very sharp boy.

The youth of all this country are excessively dissolute, and the general tendency of things is for the worse and not for the better. Morals seem with the people to be only a bagatelle. The thing most to be dreaded is "taxation without representation," (a very strong court word now.) In a republican government virtue should be as much a perequisite to representation as taxation.

DESOTO PARISH.

The Registrars, Messrs. Cary, Chienville and Morton, with their efficient clerk, Geo. W. Willy, commenced work promptly at the Courthouse in Mansfield on the first day of May, and had reistered, at the close of Saturday, 84 whites and 78 blacks. The citizens generally manifested a good spirit, and seem desirous that all should register who are eligible. Some indiscreet youths think that this looks too much like submission. The freedmen were out in force on Saturday, and quite a number had to leave without registering for want of time. A momentary excitement occurred just before closing. A drunken rowdy took exception to something said or done, drew his pistol and made some flourishes, but he was promptly taken below by a citizen. Many of the planters say they will bring in all the freedmen in their employ, and the most intelligent and best citizens give good counsel to both whites and blacks. The registrars are good men, and were well received by the community.

CONCORDIA PARISH.

Vidalia, La., May 8, 1867.

Sir—I have the honor to inform you that I arrived at this point on Monday, April 29.

Up to 12 M. this day, we have registered 408 colored voters, and 8 white voters, making a total of 416.

The parish is all overflowed, but the water is falling fast.

Please send me two or three copies of your paper when we return from our tour. I shall endeavor to write while we are on the move.

I am, very respectfully, etc.,

MANSFIELD PARISH.

Mansfield Dist. & Parish, La.
May 3, 1867.

There are two youths now confined in the Parish jail here, named Adams and Byers, each about 17 years old. The former for killing his father, the latter for killing his brother-in-law—both of recent occurrence. The have both had preliminary trials, and now await the final court to decide on the heniousness of their crimes.

One of the witnesses in the Adams case, a boy also about 17 years of age, testified that the accused, on the evening of the murder, told him that he had shot his father. The other testimony is rather circumstantial, but strongly corroborative. The father had rebuked the son for abusing a young horse, and threatened to drive him from home if he did not do better. After some angry words the boy left home. He borrowed a gun from a neighbor, stating that he wanted to kill some turkeys on his way home. In the evening a shot was heard not far from the house, and soon after the father was found in a dying condition, not able to tell who committed the deed. The gun was not returned but left concealed till after the arrest was made. Several of the family were witnesses in the trial. Their education has been very much neglected, as most of them had to make their mark in signing their testimony, showing the great deficiency in the common school system of the country.

In the other case, a Mr. McElroy, a very industrious young man, who was the main support of a widowed mother, had eloped with the sister of Byers, and returned to the home of his mother. It was believed that the McElroy family had become reconciled. He was, however, induced by Byers to go into the woods to hunt, or burn off the leaves for early grass, and was shot by the accused with two charges of buckshot, one in the back and the other in the face. The accused confessed to the killing, but said he did it in self defense, as they had got into an altercation growing out of some boasting remarks of the deceased about the elopement. The circumstances as adduced on the trial were very much against the prisoner.

There does not seem to be much sympathy in this community for these unfortunate youths. It should be taken into consideration that they have had their characters formed to a great extent in the last six years, which has been full of bloodshed and bushwhacking—when every one seemed to have a license to take immediate and personal revenge.

Pike county, Miss., May 11.

Mr. Editor—Our meeting in Washington parish, La., has been paraded by name before the readers of the rebel press and we abused as Radicals. But the comments even pronounced by the most rabid of rebels make a good record for five of us out of the seven. It does hurt our people awfully to think that respectable planters, Southern born and reared, should have produced such a set of Black Republican resolutions. Louisiana is safe, but very many moons will have to wax and wane before this State will become repentant. There is no repentance here. People clamor for their just rights, and once they get fully reinstated in Congress, they will just as assuredly plunge into war as they fail to control the Government.

If we are to go back unrepentant with our hearts still unchastened, the next best thing that Congress could do would be to give up the Government to them. Congress can take its choice, either to retain the reins in its own hands, or surrender up the whole affair to the Rebs and Copperheads. I read this language in a recent rebel paper of late date: "This country is ours. We are competent to rule it, and we will rule it. Let us immediately reconstruct, get the State into the Union, and then with the assistance of the northern Democrats, we can in three years control the government, and drive into merited obscurity," etc.

Very truly yours, Loyalist.

P. S.—Have just read a letter from Alanson Parks, one of the Registers of Washington Parish. Says they have registered 90, of whom only 24 are colored, and one row has occurred between whites and freedmen.

L.

In connection with this subject we now inform our friends in the country that, as a rule, the Registrars are reliable Union men, and that their advice in political matters can be safely followed. We know there are some exceptions—men who are proving themselves unworthy of the positions which they now hold. If these gentlemen are not more discreet, and do not discharge their duty with greater impartiality, and more in accordance with the instructions from Gen. Sheridan, they will probably be removed.

Opelousas District.

THREE DAYS ON HORSEBACK—FOES AND FRIENDS—SNOW, RAIN AND MUD.

The journey to Alexandria was long and rough—a hundred miles through the storm. The morning was chill and damp; but for Aunt Sarah's care in providing me with an ample nubia, I should have suffered during the long cold ride of that day. My noon hour was spent at the house of the kind people who lodged me last summer. Wind and sleet impeded my progress, so that only about forty miles were made; the preacher's horse plunged painfully through the mud, and toward night, nearly frozen, the hospitality of a planter was craved. His reply was, "Are you a northern man?" Now a Methodist preacher, like a true patriot, knows no section, but having been born in the good old Empire State (N. Y.), and being unmistakably in favor of the old government, our host gave us plainly to understand that only the claims of humanity made him receive us. Too cold to regard dignity, had we been disposed, his fire, table and bed were thankfully accepted. Politics were not discussed, and next morning farewell was said, with the impression that our entertainer had a kind heart, if his first greeting was not over courteous.

It was a bad day for travelling; over head and under foot alike forbidding. By noon the dwelling of kind friends was reached, and past toils well nigh forgotten in their warm greetings and good cheer. Here a place was selected for a church and school, which will afford accommodations for the people of several large plantations. The planters and freedmen will unite to help build. A local preacher teaches the colored school, and we have a society here of over a hundred members.

Passed through Cherryville, where there are two good brick churches, Episcopalian ane Campbelite, and a frame Baptist church. The pastor of the latter is said to have remained at his post during the war.

At night found shelter at the house of a planter, who felt very sore over the war, and talked frankly about it. I was invited to call again, and assured that politics would not be talked. Next day at 7 o'clock, started, and after a seven hours ride, reached Alexandria and the Quarterly Conference at 2 o'clock P. M. Thankful for a brief rest from travel during three days in the rain, cold and mud.

ALEXANDRIA QUARTERLY CONFERENCE—A NEW CIRCUIT.

Entering Alexandria, my toils were rewarded by the sight of our new church, frame up and covered. The neat school house and snug little parsonage; only the long spell of wet weather has prevented the builder from giving possession of the church before now. Brother Small has been very faithful in Alexandria, besides looking after a circuit of 30 or 40 miles in extent. The storm made the attendance at our Quarterly Conference very thin, but the reports were good. Several new appointments have been taken in this quarter; from all parts of the Parish requests are coming for Brother Small to come and organize Societies. Five hundred persons have joined the church. Four new Sunday Schools have been organized, with over two hundred scholars. Several local preachers and exhorters have been licensed. Five appointments reported with 450 members and probationers, an increase of over 200 since Conference. Five Sunday-schools, with about 250 scholars. Twenty-five marriages have been solemnized; forty sermons delivered; sixty meetings held; fourteen baptisms, and two deaths of members. The official brethren have, with few exceptions, been faithful. One was reproved for not being obedient; another for showing no improvement since last conference. It is very desirable that the large district along Bayou Beuf and in Avoyelles parish, should be set off as a separate work, being too distant for proper care in this circuit. Thirty copies of the Advocate are taken, and nearly seventy-five copies of the Conference minutes have been purchased by these people. Our church property has been much increased in value since Conference. A little parsonage has been built and paid for by the people. The school house is in good condition, and our new church will be ready for services in two or three weeks, if the weather permits.

SABBATH SERVICES—CHILDREN CONVERTED—DAY-SCHOOLS.

The storm cleared away by Sabbath morning. God's sunshine was poured out to warm and cheer us, while his spirit was poured forth to bless our souls. The love-feast was held at 8 o'clock A. M. We suffered some from cold, but it was a profitable time. At 9½ o'clock, the children's sermon was preached and examination held. The scholars acquited themselves well, having been well instructed by their preacher. At 11 o'clock, our house was crowded; at 3 o'clock, preaching again and the Lord's Supper. Eight persons came forward to join the church, some by letter; three were mourners; one a girl of twelve years, very earnestly seeking the Savior. A number of children have been converted in this church. As the interest seemed to warrant it, services were continued Monday and Tuesday with excellent results; in spite of a heavy rain the last night, our house was full, and the people dispersed unwillingly. It was a precious quarterly meeting.

The Bureau Agent here, Major Willower and his active assistant, Mr. Farr, have been very energetic of late in establishing schools. Last year there were not half a dozen, now thirty or forty day and night schools are in operation, and the work still goes on. Some of the teachers employed are colored men. The school of about seventy scholars taught in our church, is now in charge of a lady from Rochester, New York. The night school is open to all free of charge. Mr. Farr writes me that at least fifty children in Alexandria are deprived of schooling, because their parents are unable to pay their tuition. What a work there is all over the land for our Freedmen's Aid Society.

MURDERERS AT LARGE—STATE SEMINARY—DEMOCRATIC PAPERS—MARRIAGE FEES.

It is sad to know that acts of lawlessness are still committed in Rapide's parish. Last week a planter on Bayou Beuf, seeing a colored boy across the bayou whistling, ordered him to cease, and then began firing his revolver at him. Another who had been in the habit of drawing his revolver recklessly on his work hands, found himself one morning without laborers. He at once started the constable after them with a coil of rope to secure and return them, but our Provost Marshal very properly interfered. Sunday evening I was told that a negro had been killed somewhere near town, and other shooting affairs were reported at the Bureau. Affidavits were made by the Agent, but the civil authorities so far, have taken no notice of them. Speaking of revolvers, they seem to be a part of ones dress here. I learn that even the boys of the State Seminary carry them. Quite a fuss occurred among the young gentlemen recently. A comrade being threatened with punishment for some fault; they drew pistols and brought the faculty to terms. The affair resulted in the resignation of the professor implicated. In last week's Louisiana Democrat, published here, was a low article, holding up to ridicule our church and its pastor. This organ of the democracy follows the lead of the Franklin and Opelousas papers. It is thus, that men claiming to be leaders of the Southern people, insult the freedmen and meet their effort to become intelligent, useful, pious. Brother small and his church have however, the goodwill, and are well spoken of by all classes, save this editor and his admirers. I want to add to the shame of the parties concerned, that this is the only parish where a high charge is made the freedmen for license to marry. Five dollars is demanded; in some cases amounting to a prohibition; with the rather equivocal privilege of having the ceremony performed by the clerk or his deputy. In other parishes a fee of two or two and a half is charged. The wrong is the greater when it is remembered that in many instances these people have lived together faithfully for years, and go through the legal forms for the gospel's sake, and to secure the civil rights of which they have so long been unjustly deprived.

ITINERANT.

Mississippi Items.

From Holly Springs we went to Oxford. This place is the seat of the Miss. State University, and was probably a rather pleasant little town once. It was badly damaged by the war, but has been partly rebuilt. The College buildings were not destroyed but are in need of repairs and fresh paint. They are scattered around in a pretty grove of oak trees, and were built with little regard to any order of architecture. The Institution is in working order, and a considerable number of students in attendance.

We observed more signs of attention to fruit raising here than at any other point we have visited. Saw several beds of strawberries and a few small vineyards, but even they showed the ignorance and inattention of their owners. It seems strange that with all the natural advantages possessed by this country and the profitable character of the business, fruit culture should have received so little attention. Enough has been done to show that it would pay well. One man near Vicksburg, before the war, sold forty thousand dollars worth of fruit in one year

The colored people at Oxford have received little attention so far. Brother Phillips, a colored man, from Holly Springs, is teaching a small school, and holding meetings in his school room. They are anxious to come under the "Old Church" and have helped to build a house. We promised them help if we could get it. We might soon have a good society there.

Some lawless persons had broken in the windows of Brother Phillip's house. He thinks however, that the authorities and the citizens generally were anxious to prevent any repetition of the offence. They told him to arm himself and shoot any one who molested him and they would protect him in so doing.

At Grenada we found things going well. Congregations were large—over forty were at the altar for prayers and fifteen joined the church during the Quarterly Meeting. The school taught by Misses Harwood and Segur is flourishing. The opposition once so violent, has disappeared, and the people and church, and school are going on in peace.

At Canton the people are preparing to purchase ground for a church. As soon as their lot is paid for their church will be put under contract. They are worshipping in a building that is too small for present wants, and increasing in numbers, notwithstanding unfavorable circumstances. A school is taught by Rev. Mr. Drain, who is a Southern man, and Miss Close, a Northern lady; it is self-supporting and seemingly succeeding well.

We have completed our first rouno of quarterly meetings and can report progress and prosperity. Some of our societies have lost a part of their membership by removal to other places, but all have had accessions, and most of them made considerable progress. Our organizations are not as complete as we could wish, and we cannot give as exact statistics as we might desire. New societies have been organized at Enterprise, Marion and Macon, and several country appointments, and will be at Oxford and other places soon. We hope to be able to form several self-supporting country circuits if the crops do not fail this year. They are sending to us from remote parts of the country. There is very little serious opposition to us now. We have not been aware of any personal danger, nor have we any cause to complain of personal disrespect. So far as we can see, public feeling is much more favorable to us than it was some months ago, and there is increased confidence in our stability.

If we read the signs of the times and the indications of providence aright, there is a promising future before our church in this State.

Each member of the Boards of Registers, before commencing his duties, will file with the chairman of his board, for transmittal to the Assistant Inspector General of these headquarters, the following oath: "I, A. B., do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I have never voluntarily borne arms against the United States since I have been a citizen thereof; that I have voluntarily given no aid, countenance, counsel or encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility thereto; that I have neither sought, nor accepted nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever, under any authority, or pretended authority, in hostility to the United States; that I have not yielded a voluntary support to any pretended government, authority, power or constitution within the United States, hostile or inimical thereto. And I do further swear (or affirm) that, to the best of my knowledge and ability, I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter, so help me God."

Registers will be governed in the execution of their duties by the provisions of the first section of the "Supplementary Act,"—faithfully administering the oath therein prescribed to each person registered.

Boards of Registers will first organize and commence their duties at the courthouses of their respective parishes; they will afterwards move to such other points, having reference to convenience and facility of registration as will ensure the complete registration of their parishes in the shortest practical time. The necessary expenses incurred for transportation to their respective parishes, and in traveling within them, in accordance with this order, will be paid at these headquarters to each Register on his affidavit approved by the supervising officer of his board, and by the Major General Commanding the Military District. Each Board will be entitled to one clerk. Office hours for registration will be from eight o'clock to 12 M., and from 4 to 7 P. M.

When elections are ordered, the Board of Registers for each district will designate the number of polls, and the places where they shall be opened in the election precincts within its district, appoint the commissioners and other officers necessary for properly conducting the elections, and will superintend the same.

They will also receive from the commissioners of elections of the different precincts the result of the vote, consolidate the same and forward it to the Commanding General.

Registers and all officers connected with elections will be held to a rigid accountability, and will be subject to trial by Military Commission for fraud, or unlawful and improper conduct in the performance of their duties.

The following named officers are hereby appointed to supervise the Boards of Registers of the parishes following their names, to listen to or adjust, or refer to this office all just causes of complaint.

Brevet Major Kinzie Bates, Capt. 1st U. S Infantry: Rapides, Avoyelles, St. Landry, St. Martin, Lafayette.

First Lieutenant B. F. Humphreys, Brevet Capt. 1st Artillery: Calcasieu, Vermillion, St. Mary's.

Brevet Lieut. Col. Sheldon Sturgeon, Captain 1st U. S. Infantry: Point Coupee, West Baton Rouge, Iberville, Assumption, Terre Bonne, Lafourche.

1st Lieut. Clifford Stickney, 20th U. S. Infantry: West Feliciana, East Feliciana, East Baton Rouge, Ascension, St. James, St. John Baptist.

Brevet Colonel A. D. Nelson, Major 1st U. S. Infantry: St. Charles, Jefferson, Plaquemine, St. Bernard.

2d Lieut. Horace Binney, 20th U. S. Infantry: St. Helena, Livingston, Washington, St. Tammany.

2d Lieut. F. E. Pierce, 1st U. S. Infantry: Caddo, De Soto, Sabine, Nachitoches, Winn.

2d Lieutenant B. Carney, 20th U. S. Infantry: Carroll, Madison, Tensas, Concordia.

Every male citizen of the United States twenty-one years old and upward, of whatever race, color, or previous condition, who has been a resident in the State of Louisiana for one year, and in his parish for three months previous to the date at which he presents himself for registration, and who has not been disfranchised by act of Congress, or for felony at common law, shall, after having taken and subscribed the oath prescribed in the first section of the act herein referred to, entitled to be, and shall be registered as a legal voter.

Pending the decision of the Attorney General of the United States on the question as to who are disfranchised by law, registers will give the most rigid interpretation to the law, and exclude from registration every person about whose right to vote there may be a doubt. Any person so excluded who, may, under the decision of the Attorney General, be entitled to vote, shall be permitted to register after that decision is received, due notice of which will be given.

No person engaged on the Boards of Registration will be permitted to be a candidate for office while so serving.

Intelligence from our Mission Rooms.

THE NEW MISSION HOUSE.—It was popularly thought, as we believe, that no Centenary proposition was hailed with more favor and interest than that of providing a new Mission House, which, while it should not be extravagant in the cost or in the style of building, should stand as a monument of our brief but glorious past in the missionary work, and indicate the probable results in the future. The failure to realize a sufficient sum from Centenary subscriptions for this purpose was foreshadowed some time ago, and deep regret was expressed in very many quarters. But upon the reports of subscriptions made in the conferences in the East, amounting to from $40,000 to $60,000, the Board of Managers have felt themselves justified in taking an important preliminary step by the purchase of the property mentioned below. The board also felt called on to take this decisive step by the earnest expectation and urgent demand of the contributors to the new Mission House Fund, and, indeed, by the general voice of the Church. The prevailing feeling was that the present mission premises in Mulberry-street were not only discreditable to the Church but were repulsive to the sight and dangerous to the health of all that occupied them.

It will be seen from the report below that the board has kept steadily in view the general desire of the church to have the Missionary Society and Book Concern own and occupy adjacent property for the mutual convenience and advantage of the pastors and people throughout the church. The present temporary arrangements of the property in Fifth Avenue will continue for a reasonable time, in view of determining the practicability of adjacent locations for the Missionary Society and Book Concern. In making these wise and comprehensive arrangements, the board employed the agency of an intelligent committee composed chiefly of business laymen. The following report from this committee was made to the board at its regular session Tuesday, April 16, and was adopted with great unanimity:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

The inquiries in regard to the probability of procuring a new mission house have lately been numerous and very urgent. We are happy to be able to state that the committee has purchased a very eligible and valuable property on the northwest corner of Fifth Avenue and Thirteenth street. A brown stone building of very superior quality, and of severely chaste style, covers the whole front on fifth Avenue, and extends along Thirteenth-street sixty feet, there being an open space forty feet by fifty feet in the rear. The interior of the building is well arranged, and will afford ample accommodations for the Missionary Society.

The purchase was made somewhat in view of the low price at which the property was offered, but mainly in view of the strong probability that Fifth Avenue will be shortly extended through Washington Square, and thence down to Canal street. A bill is now pending, or has passed, at Albany, to authorize this extension, and perpetually excluding a railroad from the Avenue. Upon this being done, the property will, it is believed, quickly and largely advance in value, and in a few years Fifth Avenue will rival Braadway as a street of business. The Missionary Society will then be in a position either to convert the property into stores and offices, reserving accommodations for the society, or to sell it at a large advance on price, and build elsewhere

In any case, whether these premises be held by the Missionary Society as a permanent location, or be sold for another site; or whether it shall become practicable, as we hope it soon will be, for the authorities of the Book Concern to unite with the Missionary Society in the occupation of contiguous premises there or elsewhere, for the convienience of the pastors and people of the church, we deem the purchase already mentioned a good financial arrangement, and beneficial to the church.

The committee of purchase submit the above report to the Board, and recommend the adoption of the following resolutions, namely:

1. That we approve of the preceding report, and order it to be recorded in the Minutes of the Board.

2. That the treasurer of the Society be and he is hereby authorized and empowered to execute on behalf of the Missionary Society the contract of purchase for the premises on the northwest corner of Fifth Avenue and Thirteenth street in the city of New York, and to affix the seal of this Society.

THE GREAT CHANGE.—There was a man who started from Jerusalem towards Damascus, on a mission of persecution and murder, proud, cruel, and vindictive; he came from Damascus with a yearning towards all mankind, with the humility of a child, and with affection as tender as a woman's love. He went towards Damascus with an intellect narrowed down to a rapier's point, and harder than its steel; he came from Damascus with an intellect broadened and fused with divine fire, and with a logic so invincible, and with its links so warm with the Holy Ghost, that it moulded the thought of the world for eighteen centuries.

A PERNICIOUS EVIL.—In going from home to Sunday-school I pass a candy store, and invariably see a number of children passing in and out; it is obvious for what purpose. I think this is a serious matter, and calculated to lead to very pernicious results. First, to the child, who becomes regardless of the sacredness of the day, and is likely in after life to be an inveterate Sabbath breaker. Second, to the school and its claims. The money they spend has in all probability been given to them for the purpose of meeting some of those claims. Now I ask the question, what can be done to meet this?—Methodist Home Journal.

A GOOD ANSWER.—A young lady in a Sabbath school asked her class, "How soon should a child give its heart to God?" One little girl said, "when thirteen years old," another, "ten," another, "six." At length the last child in the class spoke, "Just as soon as we know who God is."

The amount distributed to destitute freedmen and refugees in the South during the past six months is $539,000.

THE MILITARY BILL.

REGISTRATION ORDERED—NAMES OF THE REGISTRARS—REGISTRY TO BE MADE BETWEEN 15TH OF APRIL AND 15TH OF MAY.

The following order from the District Commander, Major Gen. Sheridan, gives the initiation to the reconstruction of our State under the military bill.

We trust that every man who has a vote under the acts of Congress will be registered at once.

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH MILITARY DISTRICT,
New Orleans, La., April 10, 1867.
Special Orders No. 15.

(Extract.)

* * * * *

Second District—Edward Ames, T. C. Thomas and Michael Vidal.

Third District—Charles F. Berens, John McWhorter and H. Stiles.

Fourth District—John L. Davis, Henry Bensel, Jr. and Edmund Flood.

Orleans Parish, Right Bank—W. H. Seymour, Thomas Kenefec and Georg Herbert.

Each member of the Board of Registers, before commencing his duties, will file in the office of the Assistant Inspector General at these headquarters, the oath required in the sixth section of the act referred to, and be governed in the execution of his duty by the provisions of the first section of that act—faithfully administering the oath therein prescribed to each person registered.

Boards of Registers will immediately selec suitable officers, within their respective dist tricts, having reference to convenience and facility of registration, and will enter upon their duties on the day designated. Each Board will be entitled to two clerks. Office hours for registration will be from 8 o'clock till 12 A. M., and from 4 till 7 P. M.

When elections are ordered, the Board of Registers for each district will designate the number of polls, and the places where they shall be opened in the election prscincts within its district—appoint the commissioners and other

2. In obedience to the directions contained in the first section of the law of Congress, entitled "An Act supplemental to an Act entitled 'An Act to provide for the more efficient government of the rebel States,'" the registration of the legal voters, according to that law in the parish of Orleans, will be commenced on the 15th inst., and must be completed by the 15th of May.

The four municipal districts of the City of New Orleans, and the parish of Orleans, right bank, (Algiers,) will each constitute a registration district. Election precincts will remain as at present constituted.

The following appointments of Boards of Registers is hereby made—to continue in office until further orders, viz:

First District—John A. Roberts, William Baker and W. M. Geddes.

officers, necessary for properly conducting the elections, and will superintend the same.

They will also receive from the commissioners of elections of the different precincts the result of the vote, consolidate the same, and forward it to the Commanding General.

Registers and all officers connected with elections will be held to a rigid accountability, and will be subject to trial by Military Commission for fraud, or unlawful, or improper conduct in the performance of their duties. Their rate of compensation and manner of payment will be in accordance with the provisions of sections 6 and 7 of the supplemental act.

Brevet Brig. Gen. J. W. Forsyth, Assistant Inspector General of the Fifth Military District, is hereby directed to supervise the Board of Registration for the parish of Orleans, to listen to and adjust, or refer to this office all just causes of complaint. He is authorized to employ such experts as may be necessary to detect fraud in registration or elections.

Every male citizen of the Uuited States twenty-one years old and upward, of whatever race, color or previous condition, who has been a resident in the State of Louisiana for one year and parish of Orleans for three months previous to the date at which he presents himself for registration, and who has not been disfranchised by act of Congress or for felony at common law, shall, after having taken and subscribed the oath prescribed in the first section of the act herein refered to, be entitled to be, and shall be, registered as a legal voter n the parish of Orleans and State of Louisiana.

Pending the decision of the Attorney General of the United States on the question as to who are disfranceised by law, Registers will give the most rigid interpretation to the law, and exclude from registration every person about whose right to vote there may be a doubt. Any person so excluded, who may, under the decision of the Attorney General be entitled to vote, shall be permitted to register after that decison is received—due notice of which will be given.

MEDICAL.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,
127 CARONDELET STREET,

Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic, and Acute

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient, that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years, in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient, if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the Institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet Street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city

MASON & HAMLIN,

MANUFACTURERS OF

CABINET ORGANS,

ALSO

PORTABLE ORGANS,

ADAPTED TO SECULAR AND SACRED MUSIC, FOR DRAWING-ROOMS, CHURCHES, SUNDAY AND DAY SCHOOLS, LODGES, &C., &C.

Uniting to a considerable extent the capacity of the Piano-Forte with that of the Pipe-Organ, and costing much less than either.

They occupy little space; are elegant as furniture; not liable to get out of order, and are securely boxed, so that they can be sent anywhere by ordinary freight routes, all ready for use.

Forty Styles, plain or elegant cases; one to twelve stops; Prices, $75, $90, $110, $125, $130, $1 0, $150, $160, $170, $200, $225, $250, $300, $435, $540, $550, $600, and upwards.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs were introduced four years since, and are a great imprement upon the Melodeon, Harmonium, and other reed organs, greatly excelling them especially in the excellent quality and variety of their tones; in power and quickness of action, and capacity for expression, and proves how greatly such an instrument was needed. Again and again the manufacturers have been compelled to double their manufacturing facilities, until they have been increased six-fold. From the most eminent of the musical profession, the most distinguished pianists, organists, composers, and musical directors, the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs have received an amount and degree of commendation never before bestowed upon any similar musical instrument. More than two hundred and fifty of the most eminent musicians in the country have given written testimonials to the value of the improvements contained in them, and that they excel all other instruments of this class.

THEIR SUCCESS HAS BEEN ENTIRELY BEYOND PRECEDENT,

FIFTY-TWO GOLD OR SILVER MEDALS, or other highest Premiums have been awarded to Mason & Hamlin for the important improvements effected by them, and for the

SUPERIORITY OF THEIR INSTRUMENTS TO ALL OTHERS.

Constantly exhibiting their instruments in competition with others, they have been awarded the highest premium in every instance, but three or four.

For churches, sunday schools, etc., the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs are the instruments long wanted, of the very best quality, abundant power, not too expensive, nor liable to get out of order.

For private use, in drawing-rooms, &c. they are not less desirable, and are finding a place in the musical families of the principal cities.

They are adapted to a wider range of music than the piano, being fitted for all sacred music and for much secular music, while their quickness of action is such that the most lively, rapid music can be played on them, Then their cost is greatly less, as well as their liability to get out of order.

BRIEF EXTRACTS FROM OPINIONS OF DISTINGUISHED MUSICIANS.

I should think they would become very much sought after as parlor instruments as well as for public performance.—Sigismond Thalberg, the world-renowned Pianist. Sure to find its way into every household of taste and refinement which can possibly afford its moderate expenses. Far superior to everything of its class I have seen.—L. M. Gottschalk, the eminent Pianist. Such pure musical tones, promptness and smoothness of action and fine variety of effect, I have not found in any other instrument of the class.—S. B. Mills, the eminent Pianist. Really so excellent that there can hardly be much difference of opinion respecting them.—William Mason, the eminent Pianist. The best instrument of its class with which I am acquainted, and worthy a place in every drawing room. Harry Sanderson, the eminent Pianist. In every respect far superior to everything I have ever seen of the kind, whether in Europe or America.—Geo. Washbourne Morgan the eminent organist, N. Y. I can only reiterate what so many in the musical profession have said, that for equality, promptness and exqusite tone, they are unequalled,—John H. Wilcox, the eminent Organist, Boston. Surpasses everything in this line I have ever seen, whether French or American.—Jon Zundel, the eminent Organist, N. Y. The best reed instruments in the world are made in the United States, and your Cabinet Organs are greatly superior, and by far the best made here.—Max Maretzer, Musical Conductor, N. Y. Far surpasses all other similar instruments, which have come under my observation.—Carl Zerhau, Musical Conductor, Boston. Exceeds in my estimation every other instrument of this general class. Thos. Hastings. I can recommend them with confidence.—Lowell Mason. As soon as the people become acquainted with the superior merits of your instruments, your only trouble will be to supply the demand.—Wm. B. Bradbury. I have never seen anything of the kind which interested me so much.—Geo. F. Root. Exciting much interest in musical circles, and already becoming the fashion. N. Y. Home Journal. The highest accomplishment of industry in this department. This is not only our opinion, but the unanimous verdict of the organists.—Boston Advertiser. A glorious instrument for the temple service, so readily secured as to be available for any congregation, and effective and beautiful as to meet the desires of the most refined and fastidious.—N. Y. Observer.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs must not be confounded with other reed instruments, from which they vary essentially, their superiority veing largely derived from PATENTED IMPROVEMENTS, which cannot be employed by other makers. Among them are,

THE AUTOMATIC BELLOWS SWELL, patented, a most important invention, and greatly the best swell ever devised being much more effective and easily used than any other. The variety and beauty of effect of which it is capable, can not be appreciated except from actual use. The many attempts to imitate or find a substitute for this swell, prove its value. None of them, however, approach it in excellence and simplicity.

IMPROVED SELF-ADJUSTING VALVES patented, secure much more perfect action, durability, and freedom from liability to get out of order.

WOOD'S OCTAVE COUPLET patented, in effect nearly doubles the power of the instrument in which it is used.

NOISELESS SAFETY VALVES patented, prevent the hissing sound often heard.

The IMPROVED COMBINATION REGISTER patented, gives of great facility in drawing stops.

Poetry.

Selected.

Kings and thrones are falling.
The sound comes o'er the sea.
Deep unto deep is calling
To the conflict of the free:
At the voices of the Nations.
Like the roaring of a flood,
The sun is changed to darkness,
The moon is turned to blood.

The word of power is spoken
In accents loud and long:
The iron chain is broken
From the ancles of the strong.
The blind and beaten giant
Is gathering up at lenght,
And the pillars of his prison house.
Begin to feel his strength.

To exile goes the King,
The throne is in the street.
The royal floors are echoing,
The sounds of plebian feet:
O'er gilded rooms and halls of state,
The common people throng.
Half fearful of the specter yet
That haunted them so long.

The powers of earth are shaken
From the Danube to the Rhine.
Old Germany is wakeing
Like a Cyclop from his wine:
And dark his brow with hatred,
And red his eye with wrath,
And will scatter his tormenters
Like pigmies from his path.

The famished Celt is crying,
Arm brethren one and all:
The Saxon Lord is flying
To castle, keep and wall:
Unhappy Ireland grasps again
The old detested bands
And lifts towards the indignant heavens
Her torn and bleeding hands.

What terror, pain and sorrow
Till the travail throes are past.
But then a glorious morrow
And the promised rest at last;
For the gospel of the Crucified
Shall triumph like the light,
From the golden gates of morning
O'er the darkness of the light.

King or priest shall never Rebuild the broken wall:
Man here is freed forever,
And truth is free for all:
The startled nations hear a voice,
Through heaven and earth resound
The everlasting word of God,
Shall never more be bound.

O'er shattered thrones shall rise
The kingdom of the Son.
And every tongue thro' earth and skies
Proclaim his reign begun;
And angel voices heard before.
On the plain of Galilee,
Shall sound once more on every shore,
And over every sea.

Emancipation in Brazil.

The telegraph brings us news to-day that the last formidable stronghold of Slavery remaining in Christendom has virtually fallen before the irresistible advance of the great movement for universal freedom and equal rights. Brazil has given the death-blow to the wicked system which has been so long both her grievous burden and her foul disgrace. Henceforth, every child born into the empire is free, and in twenty years the chains will fall from the limbs of her last surviving slave. By this decree, nearly 3,000,000 blacks are raised up from the dust; and though but few of this generation can hope to see the day of general emancipation, it is much for them to know that the curse which rested on the parents will no longer be transmitted to the children; it is something that the younger of them have a bright although distant future to look toward and to wait for. Very likely, too, the dying institution will not be suffered to linger out the whole of the existence which the new law accords to it; as the benefits of free labor to the whole country become appreciated, fresh legislation may hasten the advent of national liberty and justice.

The State which has just taken this important step in the road of progress, covers about three million square miles of the richest portion of the South American continent, being a little greater in extent than the United States. Nature has given it the most magnificent river system in the world. The Amazon rolls its mighty waves through the dense forests of the northern provinces—forests teeming with all the gorgeousness and luxuriance of the tropics, rich in precious woods and valuable fruit-bearing trees, and alive with the most brilliant forms of animal nature; and its tributaries are streams which in any other part of the world would be called rivers of the first class. The Rio Francisco in the East, and the affluents of the La Plata in the south, give fertility and channels of easy intercommunication to enormous extents of country, while in the interior stretch the great grass-grown pampas, with their countless herds of cattle, covering a region seven times as big as the whole of France. There are mines of gold; there is coal in plenty; there is iron; and the annual product of diamonds is not far from $2,000,000. There is not a desert in the empire. The whole is a rich loam, covered with a vegetation unequaled for magnificence and beauty, except, perhaps, in some of the fairy-like islands of the Indian Ocean. Even with her present meager development, Brazil supplies half the world with coffee, and sends abroad also great quantities of cotton, sugar and tobacco. She has exported more of coffee, and sugar in eighteen months than of diamonds in eighty years. It is three hundred years since the first permanent settlement of the country by Europeans; yet in all this time, and with all the marvelous wealth of the soil and the charms of a genial climate to tempt immigration, not one acre in a hundred and fifty has ever felt the labor of the husbandman; and immense regions are almost as unknown to-day as when Pincon, the companion of Columbus, first took possession of the country in the name of the King of Castile.

Nor, for many years at least, has the Government, which is one of the best, most liberal, and most progressive monarchies in the world, spared any effort to attract the superabundant population of Europe. Since the Brazilians wrested their independence from the mother country, Portugal, in 1822, they have devoted themselves zealously to works of social and industrial improvement. They have freedom of education, freedom of the press, and freedom of religious worship. They have labored hard to develop their means of communication with the old world, having regular lines of mail steamers to the principal European ports. They have steamers on the coast and rivers. They have railways built by English and American engineers. Their trade with Great Britain France, and the United States is large, and constantly increasing. Their imports at the latest date for which we have returns (1863) amounted to $55,000,000, and their exports to $68,000,000. Six or seven years ago, there were already some fifty foreign colonies, formed by the aid of liberal grants of Government lands; but the colonists did not number, all told, more than 60,000; and, at any rate, it is not by banding themselves together in isolated communities that immigrants can materially benefit the country of their adoption. The infusion of new blood must permeate the whole body politic; and if the old blood and the new cannot mingle, one or the other will be driven out

It is precisely because there was an element in the social and political life of Brazil which repelled these sturdy settlers that the great South American Empire is still so thinly peopled; having only about 8,000,000 inhabitants, or less than a quarter of our own population. The same cause which in this country has uniformly directed the stream of immigration to the Northern and Western instead of to the Southern States, has been constantly counteracting all the inducements held out by nature and by man to draw settlers to Brazil. Slavery and a wholesome free immigration are natural enemies, and always have been, the world over. Brazil has beckoned to the settler with one hand, while with the other she has upheld the great wickedness that drives him away. The first colonists enslaved the Indians; and, despite the futile measures of emancipation adopted by the Portugese crown in 1570, in 1647, and in 1684, these unfortunate natives remained in servitude until 1755, and would perhaps have been held to this day had they not proved very unprofitable. Negroes were accordingly imported from other Portugese dominions, and a slave-trade with the African coast naturally sprang up, and is only just ended. Portugal bound herself by treaty with England, in 1815, to abolish the trade. Brazil renewed the obligation in her own name in 1826. Yet in 1839 it was estimated that 80,000 Blacks were imported every year; and, ten years later, the Minister of Foreign Affairs reported that the brutal traffic had only been reduced one-fourth. The energetic action of England, declaring in 1845 that Brazilian slave-ships should be amenable to English authorities, led to a long diplomatic contest and threats of war; but it bore fruit in 1850 in a statute wherein Brazil assimilated the trade to piracy, and in 1852 the Emperor declared it virtually extinct. In the meantime, an opposition, not to the slave-trade alone, but to slavery, too, gradually strengthened itself within the Empire. Manumission became frequent, and the laws made it very easy. A Society was organized under the protection of the Emperor, which, every year, in open church, solemnly liberated a number of slaves; and in 1856 the English Embassador wrote home that the Government had communicated to him their resolution gradually to abolish slavery in every part of the Empire. The grand step which they now have taken has no doubt been impelled by the example of our own country. It is one of the many precious fruits which have sprung, and are destined yet to spring, from the soil which we watered so freely with patriot blood.

Six years have witnessed the emancipation of 25,000,0000 serfs in Russia; the liberation of 4,000,000 slaves in the United States, and the virtual manumission of 3,000,000 negroes in Brazil. It is a glorious six years' work—32,000,000 of men restored to freedom, and a curse taken off three of the largest empires in the world! The little that remains to do cannot rest long undone. The miserable relic of barbarism lingers now only on a few islands belonging to the Spanish crown; and the slave-holder who, in the face of events of the last few years, hopes to retain the right to buy and sell his fellow-man, even in those islands, must be sanguine indeed. —N. The World's Fair.

The Great Exposition has been open since the first of April, but to-day we receive the first accounts of its success, which reached us in the way of correspondence. The splendid story is told at last, and for the first time we appreciate the real nature and extent of the revelation of industrial treasures which the world has continued to heap up in Paris. We see that this World's Fair, if not all that the world can do, is at least worthy of some of its brightest faculties and highest powers. It gives us cosmical greeting. None of the arts and industries are unrepresented in it; none of the nationalities are quite absent from its participation; and the powers of the earth have for once come together in harmony. There is no vexed diplomatic question to decide at this Congress of Crafts. The nations have apparently given their best and kept their worst. Dumb things are allowed to represent them more potently than a good many talkative Embassadors. American invention has gone forth as our Minister Plenipotentiary, and we believe it has no quarrel with any foreign and kindred power. To this extent the world holds together in harmony, and if the empire at this time is not peace, the world's industries certainly are. We see it in its grand character of workmen pledging the future that much as has been achieved by the skilled mind and arm of the inventor and mechanic, much more will be done, and that speedily. The rough hand of the world is thus full of those hard-won jewels of labor which purchase peace in spite of the passion of peoples.

We esteem the opening of the World's Fair as an event of high interest to mankind. It is the latest and the best of the international exhibitions, the widest in its scope, the most ample in its accommodation. To-day the finest capital in the world has been metamorphosed into one general spectacle by the magic of the Exposition. Visitors flock from all quarters of the globe to what Frenchmen have been pleased to call the Paradise of cities. France is fortunate as well as the world in thus having charge of its festivities. We have but to fancy a building 180,000 feet square, situated in a park of three times its size, the park itself containing hundreds of pleasure-houses, and we have a rude sketch of the preparation, Paris and France have made to feast the nations, and exhibit their treasures. Bismarck and Napoleon confront each each other with menaces, and France and Prussia catch the first symptons of warlike Spring-fever from their angry countenances. The prophets predict war; but, in spite of every portent, we discern the consolation that the world is pleased to exhibit itself in Paris. War might have happened even now if industrial civilization did not plant itself in the background and pull at the skirts of princes and armies. The great Exhibition, at least, means Peace.

THE SCENE

Twice the dimensions of the great circle of the Exhibition, which has been not inaptly compared to a monstrous gasometer, is the park environing it, 1,000 yards in length and in breadth 300. Sixty edifices are interspersed in this; 2,000 trees of good unbrageous growth are planted in it; five lakes and three watefalls lie in its cool grasses; it is intersected with artistic irregularity by 70 paths and drives, and comprehends within it one edifice of every architecture known to civilized man. If you enter from the great portal on the side of the Seine, and turn off the broad vestibule to either side, you meet successively a Spanish theatre, where the Gitanos dance to the clinking pulses of castinets; a Chinese booth, where jougleurs impale each other and eat red hot fire; a Protestant chapel, where there is worship every day in the English language; a hospital, where any wounded in the crush of multitudes or by machinery receive speedy relief; an Egyptian cemetery in gorgeous Moresque; a French ball where the girls in the cancan throw their feet into the spheres, waltzing eccentrically to the music of Fra Diavolo; an international theatre, where at alternate hours, a troup of every known nation, from Fetish dancers to negro minstrels make hilarity; a lake of clear water filled with the trout of Fontainbleau that Bonaparte used to feed; a tropical aquarium where you can see a weak copy of Mr. Hugo's Devil Fish, catching spiders and minnows as a lady's fan catches hearts; a Gothic cathedral, brown as if with age, and pompous with masses from noon till dark; chalets of the Swiss, such as grow on Alpine tops, with real chamois grazing on their miniature precipices; Swedish and Russian shops and huts, grotesquely carved, where candles are sold as articles of food, and the Reindeer's horned branch from the gables; a mock harem, inhabited by real Georgian girls, not prepossessing enough to keep close in their country, and many Chinese pagodas, all of porcelain, where Confucius looks contempt at the outside barbarians; Japanese households, with two of their country women, and a pair of little-footed wives or grass widows from China, smiling like a couple of almonds with double kernels in them; strange houses for rare lamps and engines; cook-furnaces that make such dishes as would turn a Christian stomach though it had forty coats; innumerable pavilions of rustic patterns; scaled by kissing flowers with thirty cups; kiosques and orchestral stations, which blow music and the tinkle of bells on every quivering sunbeam; tents such as are spread by the Arabs when they open the Thousand and One Nights and call the Genii into their opium smoke; observatories where the telescopes swing all day; and tiny rivers trickling off through pearly bottoms, turning little mills; while in the air great wind wings turn lazily, as in a Dutchman's dream, and over all the light-houses, 130 feet in the clouds, flings its solid calcium glare into the constellations to rival their fixed blaze. By day the garden is a green convalescence after the cramped splendor of the Exhibition, when the tints of a Continental day mock the painted glasses of the Babel interior; here stroll the little girls, half-way over womanhood, the soft lights fading from their faces and the ruddyness of thoughtful and dawning ambitions making deeper tints, while the great English dames stagger down the walks in the beefness of their middle age, and florid ladies of Germany, all of one fervid flax, rise up in the perspective like some metamorphosed field of overripe grain. Midst these you see the American girl, delicately-eyed, speaking heart and thought, and purity in evey modest step, light of foot and shy of presence, the noblest and least imitable contribution the world has given. At night, when the hammers are quiet within the broad palace, and in the grasses the tapers glisten as if they were burning drops of dew, the gaieties of the garden start into life, and the cafes chantant the globes of light fall upon beautiful singers, twirling the tambourine, or Theresa, merry as a drunken washer-woman, satirizing the times, and beautiful Cora Pearl, come out of sin to art with the stains lost in the sad splendor of her eyes.—N. Y. Tribune.

PROTESTANT SERVICES AT THE EXPOSITION.

Dr. Prime, editor of the New York Observer, writes from Paris announcing the plan adopted by the Union Committee for evangelical preaching on the Protestant mission ground during the progress of the great Exposition. There is to be a daily prayer and conference meeting at half past ten A. M., open to all; and while the English and French languages will be chiefly spoken, others may be used. No practical difficulty will be found in this mingling of dialects; for if one speaks in an unknown tongue, others will interpret; and thus all will come to understand, Additional interest may be imparted to the meetings by this union of nations and hearts in the common love and work. There will be a daily service with preaching, if it is found that the attention of the people, in any considerable number, can be arrested for the purpose, which is very doubtful. Those who have paid their money to go into the Exposition will probably think it best to spend their time in seeing, not hearing.

On the Sabbath there will be five services in the chapel—the first at eight o'clock A. M., designed mainly for the workmen in the palace and grounds; and special efforts will be made to secure the attendance of as many of them as possible. Perhaps some of them may be reached. In the forenoon and in the evening the preaching will be in the English language; and in the middle of the day and afternoon there are to be two services in other tongues, of which notice will be given, and indicated by signals.

In this way it is hoped that the chapel will become a rendezvous for all who are interested in religious efforts; and Christians from all lands may find one spot in Paris where they will surely feel at home.

Audubon.

The fourth of this month was the anniversary of the birth of one of Louisiana's most worthy and most famous sons, without at least a brief tribute to whom it would be negligent, indeed to allow the occasion to glide into the irrevocable past. No man sleeps beneath the soil of this continent who has higher claims to a perennial place in the memory of his fellow countrymen; and as yet, they have done but little towards securing it for him. If his name does stand in a proud and enduring niche in the temple of fame, it is there simply as he left it, wrought with his own indomitable and enthusiastic love of nature, his own heroic braving of difficulties and dangers, his own gentle sweetness of disposition. Though he has now been dead more than sixteen years, his tomb in Trinity Church yard in New York is marked by no monument to his memory, and a biography promised of him shortly after his death has not yet seen the light, full of interest though it could not but be.

John James Audubon was born on a plantation in Louisiana, owned by his family. So little, however, do the authorities, know or state about him, that they do not tell us in what part of the territory the plantation on which he was born was situated, and of four of them, two say that he was born in 1780, the other two in 1782? And for each of these dates, one authority is British, the other American! Notwithstanding lapses and differences, however, enough is known of his busy and useful life of some three score and ten years, to command the admiration of all who value true work. Displaying from his earliest days an irrepressible love of nature, his education was so directed as to enable him to cultivate it to advantage, and for the rest of his life he sacrificed all the joys and ease of home and all the prospects of business to its earnest, incessant and enterprising pursuit. The result the world knows. His magnificent "Birds of America," containing 488 life size representations, beautifully drawn and colored, with scientific and interesting descriptions, obtained 178 subscribers at $1000 each, more than one-half of whom were procured in Europe, with the sovereigns of France and England at their head. Of his other works we need not speak in this brief notice. Such men as Humboldt, Herschell, Wilson, welcomed him to their ranks with applause, as Wilson, the ornithologist, and Prince Charles Lucien Bonaparte had admired him while laboring with him in the same field, with great success, indeed, but without accomplishing nearly so much as he did. He was elected a member of several learned and scientific societies, and in short attained as high an eminence in his particular sphere as any man who ever laborod in it. He died in January 1851, in the sweet peacefulness so appropriate to his gentle, nature-loving character.—N. O. Crescent.

Voltaire as a Preacher.

The great French skeptic was intimate with some of the Catholic clergy of France, and, as a matter of favor to them, he sometimes laid aside his unbelief and prepared sermons for them to preach to their flocks. A recent biographer gives a striking case of this sort where the abbe had the effrontery to publish the sermon as his own:

The Abbe d'Arty being appointed to preach the panegyric of St. Louis before the king, began his task betimes. Having spent three months on the composition, he showed it to some of his lettered friends in Paris, but did not feel very comfortable after hearing their various judgments. In his trouble he paid a visit to Voltaire, bringing with him his aunt, and Mme. du Chatelet. He presented his written copy, and begged the great man to cast his eye over it and mark the defective passages. The ladies seconded his request, which Voltaire very unwillingly complied with, saying the thing was not in his way at all. However, he fell to, and when the abbe called next day he returned the MS. scored in every page. He had the courage or cruelty to tell the poor author that it was a most common place performance, not worthy of a scholar in the sixth form, and that the uttering of it in the pulpit would do him no credit.

What was to be done? The very best thing, under the circumstances, was done by the abbe, and his aunt, and Mme. du Chatelet. They earnestly besought the ready writer to compose a completely new panegyric. One of the company went down on knees to add force to the entreaty, and though the patron over and over protested that such an operation was altogether out of his line, his scruples were powerless before Mme. du Chatelet's urgencies. He and she were leaving Paris the same day for her chateau at Cirey, and as soon as they arrived he took pen and paper and composed the panegyric. His amanuensis made a fair copy, and put put it into an envelope, and on the fifth day after the affecting ceremony in Paris the happy abbe received his treasure. He had six weeks to commit it to memory and make other necessary preparations. This delivery was a success, and in consequence of it, or of other merits, he was promoted to a bishopric.

Lectures on Romanism

The York-street Church, Jersey City, was packed last Sabbath evening, as it probably never was before, to hear the lecture by Dr. Mattison on "The Worship of the Virgin Mary." About one-third of the audience were of the more intelligent class of Catholics. After proving from Catholic authors that they pray to and worship the Virgin Mary, and that she is pre-eminently the God of the Catholic Church, the Doctor proceeded to show that all such worship is displeasing to God; that it is impossible for Mary to hear or know anything about those who pray to her; that to worhip her is to worship a creature instead of the Creator; that in the Acts of the Apostles, which is a record of the travels, sermons, prayers, and directions to penitents for thirty years, there is not even an allusion to the Virgin Mary; that in the twenty-two Epistles, including the Revelation, which were penned by five different writers, (among whom was "Peter, the first Pope,") no mention is made of the Virgin, etc. He assured them that all their prayers to Mary had been in vain, and that they were yet in their sins. He then pointed them to a Savior whose pardon would avail to save, and who would give power to cease swearing, getting druuk, whipping their wives, etc. They were told the reason why so many of their people were poor and immoral, and in poor-houses and jails was, that they had not the true religion; and they were earnestly exhorted to come to Christs, who is mighty to save.

For an hour and five minutes the attention was most profound, and there was not the least evidence of irritability of passion on the part of any hearer. In spite of the threatened curse of their priests, many Catholics of Jersey City have now attended five of Dr. Mattison's lectures upon the errors of Romanism, and many expressed regret for the present they are to be discontinued. The doctor promises to show hereafter that Romanism has been declining for the last hundred years, and is now declining among the nations faster than at any former period.

A Curious Custom.

In the quaint town of Brock Holland, the church spire rises from amid elegantly neat houses, chiefly of wood, much carved and ornamented, and covered with glazed tiles; a most curious place. In each of these houses is a certain elaborately adorned door, by which at their weddings the newly married pair enter; it is then closed up, and never opened again till the man or his wife is carried out a corpse.

WORDSWORTH.

Men's lives should be like the day, more beautiful in the evening, or like the summer, aglow with promise, and autumn, rich golden sheaves where good works and deeds have ripened on the field.

They say I am growing old because my hair is silvered, and there are crow's feet upon my forehead, and my step is not so firm and elastic as of yore. But they are mistaken. That is not me. The knees are weak, but the knees are not me. The brow is wrinkled, but the brow is not me.—This is the house in which I live. But I am young; younger now than I ever was before.—Dr. Guthrie.

Thomson Biblical Institute.

This institution under the tuition of Rev. A. C. McDonald, is accomplishing a noble work for the church. There have been fifteen students admitted during the present term, most of whom have been regular and constant in their attendance. Twelve of these are, from the necessity of their condition, supported as charity students, and a much larger number of such might have been admitted did the funds of the institution warrant the outlay. The course of instruction has embraced reading, spelling, writing, arithmetic, grammar and Watson's Theological Institntes. Commendable proficiency has been made in all of these branches, while the progress in spelling, English grammar and Watson's Institutes, is especially gratifying. Two of the students, who at the beginning of the term could read, but indifferently in words of one and two syllables, are now well advanced in Pinneo's grammar, and are expected to complete the book by the end of the term. The class in Watson's Institutes has advanced to the Second Part, and they are deeply interested in the study of this profound work. There are of course portions of it beyond their grasp, but they are laying hold of many of its great thoughts and their profiting will doubtless appear when they shall have entered upon the work of the ministry.

Among these students are some young men of more than ordinary promise. Having grown up in slavery under circumstances in which to be seen with a book exposed them to fearful punishment, the expedients to which some of them resorted in order to gain the rudiments of an education form a story of thrilling interest. We feel assured, that if the chuch at large could know the gratitude manifested by these young men for the privilege they enjoy, their earnest application to their studies, their great anxiety to improve, their steady advancement and zeal in their Sabbath labors there would be an immediate increase of interest in the education of colored ministers. The colored people of the South are rapidly rising, both in morals and civilization, and an educated ministry for them will soon become one of the necessities of the times.

The establishment of the Biblical Institute proves to have been a step in the right direction. The class of last year, of whom most were received into our conference at its last session, has furnished us with some of our most laborious and successful preachers. The present class is larger; composed of younger men, and is equally or more promising.

On each Saturday in the forenoon, literary exercises are held, embracing written essays, sketches and plans of of sermons, delivery of sermons and debates. As a specimen of what is produced on these occasions, we give below a sketch written by John Lea. This student has quite a history. While growing up as a slave on a Georgia plantation he had an irresistable longing for an education. Having procured a spelling book he hid it in a hollow tree in the woods. During the week he would observe attentively the white children whenever they were reading or spelling, and on Sabbath afternoons he would steal away to his hiding place, when he could do so unobserved, and drawing forth his spelling book, would proceed as best he could to master the letters, and then learn to spell. In this way he was finally enabled to read and write. During the war he was kept within the confederate lines, and was several times in extreme danger on account of his intelligence and suspected sympathy with the yankees. He was an eye witness of the terrible scenes of Andersonville. And as he saw the thousands of our prisoners there in the hands of the rebels, he thought, while his heart sank within him, that the union army might as well give up. The article we give below, though in some respects it might not stand severe criticism, is still a creditable production for one who, till a few months ago, had never been inside of a schoolroom.

CHRIST AS OUR REDEEMER.

The first Book of Moses called Genesis, opens by saying: In the beginning, God created the heaven and the earth. And a little further we hear him say, Let us make man. Now it seems to me, that he was speaking to some one. And this must have been, the promised Messiah. For, in the selfsame day that Adam and Eve sinned, by eating the forbidden fruit, he was promised, and indeed by perusing the Scriptures, we find him prophesied of, from generation to generation. He is called the Son of God, and called the Son of man. And he was looked for, by good men in all ages, with great anxiety. Kings, Prophets, Priests, and People, waited hopefully and patiently to see the coming of the great Redeemer that should come into the world, but died without the sight of the great Saviour, that was promised to Adam and Eve, in the garden of Eden Six Thousand years ago. But less than Two Thousand years ago, the mysterious event took place. And, indeed his advent into the world, was so surprisingly disappointing to the Jews, that they could not acknowledge him to be the promised Saviour of the world.

As it is written: "He came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him to them, gave he power to become the sons of God." They would not accept him because he was meek and lowly, and called himself the friend of sinners, a teacher of the ignorant, a Preacher to the poor. But indeed our Saviour has made his appearance on earth. He accomplished the work, that his Father had appointed unto him to do.

And he has ascended to Heaven whence he came, there to make intercession for all that believe on him. And besides all of his labors, among unbeleivers, He has left to us on record, many bright and shining examples, of rendering good for evil, of loving our enemies, of doing unto all men as we would have them do to us. He also taught, as one having authority, "Never man spake as he spoke." And we have many unmistakeable evidences, that he was the very promised Saviour. Is it not wonderfully surprising and astonishing, to see how he was misunderstood by the wise and rich, and how readily he was understood by the ignorant and the poor? This certainly was God in man on Earth.

Is not all this indeed very wonderful? Is it not surprising, that men following him, and seeing the wonderful works and miracles which he performed, would not believe?

But this proves that he was not of the world, and though confessing himself to be the Son of God, yet he did not intend to establish his throne on earth. Therefore the world hated him. But now he has made the way possible and passable from earth to glory, and rebellious man through him may have free access unto the Father. But the best of his declarations is that he said: I am the vine, ye are the branches. This gives us great consolation, to think that we are so united to the Son of God. Brethren, what do you think about the vine and the branches? Let us consider and see if the branches can live without the vine.

We at once see that out of Christ we are dead.

But what is more joyful and delightful for us to contemplate is, that this unites us into Holy Brotherhood, we certainly and undoubtedly are true blood Brothers, if we are bound to God, and have been purged from our sins by his blood. Surely there is no difference with God. "Brethren is not this delightful?" For the Scripture says, that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation, he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness is accepted with him.

"Who Shall Rule."

The high and the low, the rich and the poor, the white—man and the black—man, have heartily thanked us for our article in last week's Advocate, entitled "Who Shall Rule." Indeed, we were not aware that our humble effort had accomplished so much good until greeted and thanked on all sides by those who comprehended the position we had assumed. We knew the political situation of union men in this city was desperate; and, that apparently everything that could possibly be done had been done to unite the friends of equal-rights, but we did not suspect that we were to be the instrument to correct an evil which all good men were deprecating, and the removal of which will go far toward the unity of the Republican Party in Louisiana. We yield to no man or set of men in our fidelity to the grand principles of equal-rights and in boldly advocating the same; and, when those whose course we condemned, were slave-holders and otherwise identified with secession, we were boldly declaring the rights of all men. We are deeply sensible of the approval of our friends, and especially, the thanks of the freedmen have given us great satisfaction. Their eyes are now open to the danger that threatened them, and they are more than ever convinced that there should be in the South, but one great harmonious party, composed of all good men without respect to race or color.

In writing as we did, we well knew that we were spoiling a nice little plan which a handful of men had laid. From the registration returns, they boasted of a three-fourths majority of colored voters in this City, and Mr. D—was named for Mayor, and Mr. B—for United States Senator for Louisiana, etc., etc., while white—men, and the Freedmen were to take back seats. Personally, we had no objection to the gentlemen named, but we were radically opposed to the caste principle on which they were to be elected, and accordingly, we gave the alarm—note of danger.

The results of our article are most salutary. We have the very great satisfaction to know that the N. O. Tribune has abandoned its exclusive policy. Last week, its columns were filled with the following caste sentiments:

"A colored Mayor should be the watch-word."

"We are glad to see that the idea of electing a colored Mayor has made an immense progress in two days. When the colored voters are the most numerous class, why should they not exercise their right to choose the Mayor from among themselves? In all cities in the United States, the nomination is given to the most numerous class of voters. In Pennsylvania, for instance, in town and cities where the German element outnumbers the native element, the nomination for Mayor is made from among the adopted Germans. This is a general rule in election matters." It applies to New Orleans as well as to any other cities.

In the present instance, there are important motives to insist upon our right. We have good cause to apprehend that we cannot get impartial treatment at the hands of the other—though friendly—element. Experience teaches us that we cannot depend upon men whose social, family and business relations are an obstacle to their shaking off of prejudices. Up to this very hour, the best intentioned among them has done nothing. It is therefore for us to come forth, and use our rights."

* * * *

"We are able to elect a Mayor taken from the midst of the proscribed class, by a three-fourths majority. This is the only way that this now proscribed class will inaugurate impartial treatment and secure it for the future."

Such were the pronounced sentiments of the Tribune up to the appearance of our denunciation of this "class distinction," and it is apparent to every candid mind, that the men who favored a "class mayor," would also demand that every office within the gift of the people should be filled by men of like stamp. But the evil is averted, the danger is past; our friends of the Tribune have come to their senses. Behold the change! In their last Sunday morning's issue we have the following:

"We are proud of the company of steadfast white men who are united with us in our common struggle for the success of the principle of justice."

* * * *

"We do not dream of the idea that the Republican Party must be regarded as "a negro party" because our people constitute the majority of that party in the State. As well might the party in Massachusetts be called "a white man's party" because the whites are in the majority in that State. We contend for the Republican Party its unity, its glory, its radicalism."

On the 21st the light shone more clearly:

"We mean to protest, in our humble but earnest way, to a continuation of class Government. We believe it anti-republican, and shall, therefore, oppose it to the end."

* * * *

"We do not mean that we want "black men to rule this city" when we express our choice for Mayor. Our reverend cotemporary must know that the Mayor is not the city government and that, he is simply an executive officer."

* * * *

"We beg leave again to inform our neighbor that we are Republicans, and that we want the Republican party to rule—that is all. A negro party or a white man's party enters not into our programme."

On the 22d, the clouds were nearly dispersed and the sun of hope and peace shone out clearly:

"Republicans of Louisiana, come and let us reason to-gether. We are not engaged in a struggle for office; nor in a struggle for the spoils; nor in a struggle for places of plunder for our friends. Are we not engaged in a contest where rights, sacred, Constitutional rights, are involved? Are we not to let fly the banner of true radical republicanism in this State? We all say "yes." Then let us proceed manfully to the work, and let us show our power and sincerity with which we hold our principles, by that sort of combination, energy and harmony which will insure a glorious victory. Let not precious time be exhausted in fruitless, causeless jealousies and wranglings."

* * * * *

"We ask not to lead, and we care less for the offices. Do we not all want honest and good men, to lead us, whether they be white or black? We do; and it is useless to croak over the contrary when we have repeatedly said that we spurn the idea."

Thus we have reclaimed our neighbor from his wanderings and brought him back to the "good old paths." To be sure, he resisted stoutly and called us hard names, and said unworthy things, but about which we care not a straw. In all ages, reformers have been subjected to such abuses, even from those whom they sought to benefit. It is true, the change is rather sudden to be genunine; we prefer a man to remain on the stool of repentance a little longer; but we accept the change as sincere, and hope it will prove permanent. And now neighbor of the Tribune, go on in the noble path of equal-rights, for which we were wont to admire you in the past. Avoid political caste, and keep clear of the semblance of "class office holders." And let all good men be united and Louisiana shall grow in virtue, increase in wealth, and advance in liberal principles.

"Newman on the Situation."—Is the title of an editorial in the N. O. Tribune, of the 21st, purporting to be a review of of our earnest and dignified leader in our last week's issue, headed, "Who shall rule." Glancing at its length and reading the first three paragraphs, we supposed an elaborate reply would be necessary, but as we read on, and discovered it to be a low-bred personal attack, we concluded to follow Solomon's sensible advice, and "Answer not a fool according to his folly, lest thou also be like unto him."

Banks.

By the failure of two of our principal banks, many of our citizens are greatly embarrassed. With full faith in the solvency of these banks, they had made their deposits therein, and to-day are suffering in consequence of their misplaced confidence. Not a few of the depositors are persons of small means, while others are poor widows, who had accumulated a little for a "rainy day." Mr. May of the First National Bank has certainly acted nobly in surrendering his princely fortune of $1,200,000, for the benefit of his depositors. But what has old Jacob Barker done for his creditors. His Bank of Commerce is suspended and the laboring classes of this City, who had entrusted him with their hard earnings, are daily standing at his bank-door, imploring him to return their money. Up to within an hour of the time when he suspended, he received deposits.

Now we insist, that private bankers and bank directors should be compelled to be prepared to pay their depositors at any time. Speculations on the basis of the funds of depositors, should be punished by imprisonment. It is gambling with another man's money, and without that man's consent. Jacob Barker is an "old citizen;" Jacob Barker, has the reputation of being a shrewed banker; Jacob Barker is living in luxury, while his poor depositors are crying for bread. Is not this a case for the military to investigate? By all means, the Grand Jury for the Parish of Orleans, should immediately inquire why Jacob Barker dont pay his depositors.

Our colored friends are importuning us for political information. They desire to know which party they shall join, and to which of the clubs they shall attach themselves. Our answer is "wait a little longer." We will keep you posted. For the present, go and register. The politicians are saying, "Lo here and Lo there," but pay no attention to them. Read and wait; reflect and pray, and out of the darkness the light will soon shine.

New Orleans, May 22, 1867.

Editor of the Advocate;

Dear Sir:

In your paper of the 18th, I saw an article on "Who Shall Rule the City?" I say the white man with the aid of the black man. Shall we abandon our leaders with whom we fought side by side the battles of our country? No, side by side we will fight the political battles of our country. Those who are the friends of our liberties and our rights should rule the city.

The handful of free-born blacks, who make such great claims are foolish. They have been slave-holders, a great many of them, and it is in them yet. Many of them were disloyal to the Government; the Freedman are loyal.

Such men should be put in as are calculated to do the duties of the office.

Yours,

J. P. M.

School Exhibition.—The day school at the Marais street M. E. Church, under the direction of Wm. Finney, held an exhibition on the afternoon of Tuesday, the 21st.

The school consists of from 100 to 125 scholars, and three teachers. Great taste was shown in decorating the room with flowers, evergreens, &c.

The exercises commenced with singing and prayer; after which the Ten Commandments, the Apostles Creed, &c, were recited in concert by the whole school. Then came declamations, dialogues, &c, which were interspersed with singing. Short speeches were made by the Pastor and visitors in attendance. The house was filled with an audience that seemed greatly interested in the exercises.

What One Book Did.

We are indebted to Rev. Dr. Gillett, author of "The Life and Times of John Huss," for the following facts, embracing the lineage of several books, and giving us an illustration of the remarkable power for good of one book.

More than 250 years ago, towards the close of the reign of Queen Elizabeth an obscure Puritan minister of England, named Edmund Bunny, came across a work on "Pious Resolutions," written by the Jesuit Parsons, containing some good things—too good to be lost, he thought; so he took the papal book, cut the popery out of it, recast the good part after another pattern, and gave it to the printer, who gave it to the public under the title of "Bunny's Resolutions."

The little book went abroad upon a limited circulation, its principal readers being the personal friends of its humble compiler. At last, an old torn copy strayed away into an humble cottage of Shropshire, and fell into the hands of Richard Baxter, then a lad 15 years old. He read it, and from that hour began a new life—the christian life—and throughout a laborious career, crowned with a wonderful success, we see reproduced in all he, (Baxter) wrote and spoke, the "pungency, point, and fervor of Bunny's Resolutions," Baxter died in 1691. He had been dead 25 years when his "Call to the Unconverted" (a book of which 20,000 copies were sold in a single year) fell into the hands of Phillip Doddrige, then a student at St. Alban's. The reading of "Baxter's Call" was the conversion of the young student and Doddrige became the eloquent and successful pastor of the church in Northampton; educated in his seminary several young men for the ministry; wrote his "Family Expositor" which has gone into tens of thousands of households; composed many of the sweetest hymns that for centuries have been sung in the christian sanctuaries and which we are singing still; and finally wrote that remarkable work "Doddriges's Rise and Progress"—a book which has been published in German, Erench, and other European, as well as in heathen languages, and has preached to millions, and been the means of converting thousands.

Doddrige had been dead 33 years when a copy of his "Rise and Progress" found its way to the table of Mr Unwin, a correspondent of Cowper. A young English statesman, just setting out on his journey to Southern France, and in want of a book to read by the way, took it up and asked its character. "One of the best books ever written," replied his travelling companion, Milner, "let us take it with us and read it on our journey." The young statesman consented, and the reading of that book made a deep and indelible impression upon his mind. He began to read the Bible, and examine Christianity for himself, and with singular interest. And the result was, he became a christian. That young man was William Wilberforce, His name is forever associated with the legislative reforms and philanthropy of the English nation; the abolition of the slave-trade, and the introduction of Christianity into India. He was an author as well as a statesman, and wrote among many other things, a religious work—"Practical View of Christianity"—translated into other tongues, it travelled round the globe, and has been read alike upon the banks of the Ganges and the Mississippi. It has gone through more than a hundred editions. The great Edmud Burke spent the last two days of his life reading it, declaring that he had derived much comfort from it, and thanked its author for having sent such a book into the world.

The book soon found its way to the Isle of Wight, and fell into the hands of a young curate, who began to read, and could not cease till he had read it through. A decided change was wrought in his views of Divine truth, in so much that he afterwards said: "I feel a debt of gratitude which I owe to God and man to say that, to the unsought and unexpected introduction of Mr. Wilberforce's book, I owe through God's mercy, the first sacred impression which I ever received as to the spiritual nature of the Gospel system." That young curate was Leigh Richmond, author of "The Poor African," and "The Dairyman's Daughter"—works which are now read in numerous languages, which have brought thousonds to Christ, and which will live to the end of time.

Mr. Wilberforce's book crossed the Tweed and fell into the hands of a young Scotch clergyman, a man of princely gifts—of whom Andrew Fuller said that, "If that young man would throw aside his notes and preach extempore he might be king of Scotland"—but who with all his gifts and graces was absorbed in scientific pursuits, and oblivios of the solemn responsibilities of his sacred calling: He was learned and eloquent, but ambitious and worldly minded, as are some ministers of the present day. But he read Wilberforce's "Practical View" and its perusal proved a turning point in his career; so much so that when subsequently speaking of his conversion he said: "The reading of Mr. Wilberforce's book produced a great revolution in my views of Christianity, and under its influence I experienced a very great transition of sentiment." That young Scotch clergyman was Dr. Chalmers, and under God the reading of that book made him a new man: it called him to a higher life, and filled him with a nobler ambition: its pages converted his princely intellect to the cause of evangelical truth, fitted him to speak forth in trumpet tones to christendom, and made him the Moses to lead the Free Church of Scotland out from its bondage to state patronage and control. So for the condensed facts from Dr. Gillett.

But more than this: Mr. Wilberforce's book crossed the Atlantic and landing upon the shores of the New World it rekindled the flame of expiring devotion in the Episcopal Church in Virginia, and gave new life and inspiration to the evangelical character and labors of Bishops White, Madison, and Meade. And here we pause. What a mighty tide of influence has issued forth from the little spring by which we stood at first! And yet, we have traced but a few of its streams. Notice: 1. The material for Bunny's little book was wheat gathered from among the tares. 2. It was not orirignal, but compiled. 3. The compiler was an obscure, humble man. 4. His book was a very small one. 5 Bunny was sleeping in the grave when the boy Baxter first read his Resolution. 6. Baxter had been dead twenty-five years before his "Call" fell into the hands of Doddridge. 7. Doddridge had been dead thirty-three years before his "Rise and Progress" fell in the hands of Wilberforce. And all these tho' dead yet speak." Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; they rest from their labors and their works do follow them.

Wesley after ten years of earnest seeking, was converted while he listened to the reading of what Luther had written on "faith" in the preface to his work on Romans. One of our living bishops was led to Christ by the prayer of a child, and the late bishop Hamlin was awakened by reading "Fletcher's Appeal."—a small work put into his hands by a christian lady of Cincinnati. Chemists tell us that a single grain of iodine will impart color to 7,000 times its own weight of water. So does individual influence diffuse itself, and leave its coloring in the great ocean of human existence. One book, one companion, one habit, one word, one prayer, one effort may affect a whole life and character, whose influence may touch and tone seven thousand others, each one of whom may affect seven thousand more.

OLD FRENCH TOWNS—A LADY EDITOR—RELIGIOUS DESOLATION.

Natchitoches is said to be four years older than Philadelphia. It is an old French town like St. Martinsville, and with it, has been left behind in the march of time, straggling from the army of progress. Old Red river one day took a fancy to make a cut off; leaving the town about four miles inland, save at rare intervals, when there is very high water, then the old river bed, now called Cane river, is navigable for steamboats. This is now the case; so it presents a somewhat lively appearance. Travelers and traders from the Sabine country come this way to New Orleans; cotton is hauled, and stock driven through for a hundred miles from Texas. With good times the place will be moderately prosperous. There is a public school in operation; a quite readable newspaper is published, just now unusually brilliant with the editorship of Mrs. Bryan, a well known and popular magazine and newspaper writer. Her pen is facile, and though to us seeming South-side, she gives the influence of her talents to elevate and reform. There is no Protestant Worship here, except in the colored church, but it cannot be called a godless place, for day and night, Sundays not excepted mammon and pleasure are worshipped. The people madly sacrifiice themselves upon these altars of desolation. "How long Oh Lord!" The South Methodist preacher, referred to at my last visit, has been obliged to leave, for lack of support. While another minister of the same church, living in the vicinity, is serving as member of the legislature in New Orleans.—Item. Southern Clergymen do not meddle with politics.

NATCHITOCHES QUARTERLY CONFERENCE—SABBATH SERVICES—THE PREACHER AND PEOPLE.

The meeting was very pleasant and satisfactory. The official brethren are learning their duties, and improve every way. Six members were present, no complaints. One local preacher and three exhorters were licensed. A promising young brother, who recently joined us, and who teaches the day-school, was appointed assistant to brother Duncan, as Recording Steward, and S. S. Superintendent. Five appointments were reported; four marriages, two deaths; five baptisms The Sunday and day schools are very prosperoas. Several new appointments were added, and calls from many places, come for us to organize classes, and receive preaches. Only men and means are wanting, to open before us this whole country. The Sabbath services were well attended, and solemn. Our house was crowded, and the indications are that good was done. At 9 o'clock Sunday School meeting was held, the lessons and singing were very creditable to both teachers and children. Love feast at 11 o'clock was a memorable season; after the speaking eighteen probationers were received into full membership, and three persons came forward as penitents. At 3 o'clock, preaching and the Lords supper. At night Brother Hayward preached and I tried to report his sermon, which may appear in the paper. He is highly esteemed by all, and is confessedly doing much good, His people have paid for a lot and erected a schoolhouse, used also as a temporary Chnrch. He has good congregations and a prosperous Sunday School, besides day and night schools for children and adults. The strange delay of the promised appropriation is a grief to them; for the people, white and colored are very poor; having lost by last years flood, nearly all the little left them by the war, and now working on shares, can expect no money until the crop is gathered.

NEWSPAPERS—SHOOTING—SCHOOLS—WHISKEY—POLITICS.

About forty advocates are taken on this Circuit, and only poverty of the people hinders our list from being much larger. The proposed column in French will help us greatly here. About a dozen other religious weeklies are taken from this Post Office; several being of the Church South, two or three Baptist, two Roman Catholic and a number of secular weeklies. Judging from this, with the Public School and lively Parish paper, the place is ahead of its neighors in intelligence.

The Bureau Agent tells me that only three cases of shooting Freedmen have occured in three weeks past and no action taken by the civil authorities. The planter imprisoned at my last visit, has broke jail and is at large. Several excellent Schools are in operation under the Bureau and others are being organized. A teacher named Christy has just come up from New Orleans, he seems to be the right material. There are now ——Freedmens day and night Schools and——Sabbath Schools with——Scholars under instruction in the Parish The whiskey pestilence prevails here as elsewhere, 200 places being licensed for its sale in this and laborial parish, and its desolations are plainly visible. The burning flood, leaves its terrible brand all over the country, misery, poverty, death. I learn that measures are being taken here for prompt action in state organization, there are many sterling friends of the Government in and about Natchitoches, and a disposition is manifested to participate in the patriotic work. The masterly inactivity and dignity people seem to be few or at least not active enough to form a party, may this movement be the precursor of moral and religious properity.

HIGH WATER—FUGITIVES—COSTLY TRAVELING—POME.

The water was rising as I left Alexandria going up the Red, but a few days after returning, the river had fallen and hopes were entertained that, overflow would be escaped. Further down however the waters from the Mississippi, were still swelling and where the Red, Atchafalaya and Mississippi met, tho sight was grand. It was a meeting of giant monsters to destroy. My return ride to Washington though stormy and toilsome, dwindled to insignificance, in view of the wide spread destruction by the flood, desolate homes, fugitive families, drowning cattle and the labor expended, hopes of thousands, being swept away. I talked with some who were seeking new houses. one from the overflow lands told me that where he had lived, a man could get rich in five years, the land was so fertile. The good steamer Victory speedily brought me to the City, where a change of laborers brought a measure of rest. Though too old a traveler to complain much of discomfort and charges, let me say that to pay two dollars for a hack ride of four miles, eight dollars on a steamer from breakfast to dinner time, ten dollars for ten hours stage ride, one dollar for your corn bread, coffee and fried eggs. To pay $120.00 for three weeks travel—part of the time at no expense, among friends or on your own horse,—is it least worth mentioning. Now for discomfort: so cold at night, to sleep is impossible, to lie on lumpy husk beds and walk bedroom floors so dirty, that the soil and bricks accompany you to bed. Often the high charges are due more to bad roads and scant travel, than to tavern keepers and stable men Of the few comfortable places for travelers on the route, may be named O'Neils Hotel at Franklin, Trainors at Washington, Mrs. Fitzgerald in Nachitoches. With what delight does the pilgrim lay by his soiled and rent garments, take his ample, delicious bath, put on his clean sound clothing, and sit down at last for a real rest of at least two or three days, under the sunny smiles of his loved ones. Its luxury can never be known by those who stay at home.

ITINERANT.

The Issues of Peace and War.

Mr. EDITOR:

Our friends of the so-called Democratic Conservative party, are quite astonished at the programme of our party for peace, they denounce our terms as harsh, unkind and unbrotherly. We would take the liberty of reminding them that we thought exactly the same of the terms upon which they made war. We were opposed to any war and only accepted it to preserve the life of the nation Our opponents inaugurated the war entirely without our consent and advice; they strove to cut the nation in twain in order to perpetuate their power and the bondage of the Slave. To preserve the life of the Nation our party accepted the gage of battle offered us and God crowned our Banners with triumph. They made war and we make peace, and in doing so our terms are full of mildness and generosity. Our late opponents who only a few months ago wished to wrap our cities in fire and deluge our fields with blood, were at last compelled by the persistent valor of Union soldiers to cast down the mighty weapon they had so unnecessarily been using, and a mild pardon has been conceeded to the larger portion of them. But not content with mere pardon they demand the full and entire control of the State and local governments, to the entire exclusion of the men who fought for the salvation of the new.

Unless the Government concludes to follow the example of the executive and makes loyalty an unmeaning by word, unless it intends to disgrace patriotism and put a premium on rebellion, it surely will keep the reins firmly in its own hands and give the offices of honor, trust and profit to those who have been stedfast in adversity, and who have never prostituted their political virtue at the feet of the once colossal slave power.

The powers who had control of this State Government and steered their vessels upon such reefs of rock and amid such dangerous whirpools, should not again desire to be placed in command for the next voyage. They must have seen the perils of their late venture They must surely see that they have reduced the State from affluence and independence down to bankruptcy and ruin. Peace and independence. These infatuated leaders would not be satisfied with, they must follow the mad ambition of South Carolina and measure swords with the colossal United States; and now prostrate and dejected, the genius of Louisiana mourns over her fallen heroes, while the alligator and tortoise are revelling in her mansions of departed greatness Friends of Louisiana! Look at what your State was six years ago, and then what war has reduced her to and ask yourselves, are the leaders who marshalled her from glory to ignominy worthy again to be entrusted with the high gifts of office?

LOYALTY.

Ladies' Department.

Angel of the Vale.

NUMBER XIII.

Minnie mine, those were happy evenings we used to spend in the sitting room after the early evening prayer:—Papa reading from some good book;—Mama with her work basket by her side filled with sewing or garments to mend. Oh, I seem to see her angel face and busy fingers now!—While each of us, with either our sewing or knitting filled up this old family picture, for on many a page in memory's book, I find these life engravings.

Florence said to Papa,—"Mama has deeply interested us for a few evenings past, while we were paring apples, telling us some of the incidents in her early life, and now, we propose conjointly, that she resume the story, if you do not object." "My child," answered Papa, "so far from objecting, I heartily concur, and assure you it will afford me great pleasure to listen, and besides, I may add my testimony to the truthfulness of the record." Then laying down his book with a smile of youthful love, looked into Mama's face, and said, "you may proceed at once if you please, for I presume I am quite as anxious to hear as these five girls are, and only regret that I did not have the privilege of listening from the first."

Mama now recommenced by saying—"It was at Mother Hudson's, of whom I was telling you last evening, that I first formed an acquaintance with your Father, and at her residence we were married." Two or three voices chimed in together, saying: "do now tell us all about how Pa looked then, for we remember when Mrs. Bishop Hedding visited us, she said, she knew him before he was married and that he was the handsomest man she ever saw." Minnie, in her quaint way, remarked that she only wondered why the present company of feminines did not inherit some of the paternal beauty. Mama smiled as we laughed heartily, and continued by saying: "He really was very fair to look upon, but this was not the greatest attraction that won my heart.

I was teaching school not far from Mother Hudson's, and made it my home with her where I often met many of the Methodist Ministers, who also found a home at her house. From the moment I was converted, I felt a Missionary spirit glowing in my soul, and a holy ambition to work for God. "In those days" said Papa "Methodist Ministers were emphatically Missionaries,; Wesleys motto was ours, "The world is my Parish. We traveled through the woods and swamps and barren wastes, seeking the lost sheep of the house of Israel, and endured many hardships unknown to Ministers at the present day." "Of this fact" said Mama, "I was fully aware and yet it was the happiest moment of my life to know that God accounted me worthy to unite my destiny with one of these pioneers in so glorious a cause, and with him go forth into the great field so white for harvest, and garner the sheaves for the Master, or even like Ruth to glean after the workmen in the field.

It was a beautiful day in Spring-time, when having obtained permission, I closed my school for a short vacation; few however, knew that I was to be married.—I was not a little surprised when on this very day I saw Mr. F—, the gentleman I had expected to marry before I became a Christian, and who had left me so abruptly for that cause, only, but for whom I had long ceased to entertain the least regard. I saw him approaching the school-room, and he entered a good deal excited, and said "Mary, I wish, and must have a talk with you:" I informed him that I was in haste, and feared I could not grant him his request, when he said, is it true, that you are to marry that young Minister?" I answered calmly, but firmly, I am going to marry him, and the ceremony is to be performed to-day, and for this intent I am closing my school. He turned pale as if in anger and looking chagrined, said: "I have always expected to marry you, Mary, when you got over those wild notions about religion—I am still of the same mind, and now offer you my hand and heart, and gladly I will lay all my wealth at your feet, which you will do well to accept instead of throwing yourself away to that poor Methodist Minister, who will drag you around the world in poverty; be sure you will regret it if you refuse to yield to my entreaties, even at this last hour." I felt an indignant glow crimsoning my cheek as I remembered his principles, and that the cause of his neglect was my love of the precious Jesus, whom I still loved more than all the world beside. I said calmly, yet with a decided tone of voice, I do not wish to controvert this snbject, but will assure you plainly that I infinitely prefer the poor Methodist Minister, as you call him, and live in poverty all my days, to you, with your disregard for my religion, and all your boasted wealth. With these words on my lips, I bade him good day and left him abruptly to his own reflections.

That afternoon we were married at Capt. Hudson's, and now I presume, daughters, you will smile when I tell you how we took our bridal trip. In those days ladies rode on horse back a great deal, I now recall when I was only eight years old, of going all alone several miles to have a tooth extracted, and on my return met an old man, who frightened me, as he shouted out, "Where in the deuce little girl have you been alone on that horse?" I told him, and he added in a kind tone "you are a brave little girl, but be careful and not fall off."

The saddles were made in olden times with pillions and the lady rode behind the gentlemen on the same horse, and thus we took our bridal trip. The good Capt. and mother Hudson pronounced their blessing upon us as we mounted the noble horse and rode off to my aunt's and brother's not far distant, where we spent a week or two. When we returned, I again resumed my school, and your father went out on the extensive circuit that had been assigned him at the last conference. In the early days of methodism if young ministers married before they were ordained they were set back at least a year, but your father did not wish to marry until he had completed the full course and received Elders orders; this had been done at the conference by the laying on of the hands of Bishop Asbury the second time. Unmarried ministers were then allowed according to a rule of our Discipline, only one hundred dollars per year as their salary;—when married they received an additional hundred for the wife, but if married after conference, they were not expected to draw for her support—so I concluded to continue my school until Autumn, and only seeing your father about once in five or six weeks as he came around the circuit. It was nearly Autumn, just before my school closed, I was sent for from a distance to see your father, who had been taken very sick; but when I arrived there found him much better. "I was riding one day," said Papa, "to an appointment, when suddenly I was taken so ill I feared I should fall from my horse. I managed to crawl off and lay down by the way-side; my faithful horse stood by and looked at me as if he understood my situation. I should no doubt have died there had not a good Samaritan passed byt hat way who took me to his home and sent for a physician, who pronounced it the measles and wondered that I did not die of exposure, lying on the damp ground, thus preventing the eruption from making its appearance on the surface of the skin, which produced such fearful symptons; but by skillful medical treatment and careful nursing, I soon recovered and was able to travel, enjoying the charming company of your dear mother, who traveled with me many miles at different places during the remainder of the year."

At the next conference, resumed Mama, we were appointed to Schenectady circuit. During the summer we boarded, or rather made it our home in an old Methodist family in this Dutch city. I accompanied your father to many of his appointments, and therefore did not consider it best to keep house.

The Methodists were very plain in their dress, almost as much so as the Society of Friends, and from the time I was converted I endeavored to arrange my dress in a degree to suit their style, and considefed myself very plain in my attire, at least to what I had been previously. One day we went to visit a good old sister, and I was anticipating much pleasure, having heard of her kindness and love for the Itinerant and his family—as soon as we drove up she came out to greet us, but to my surprise she looked daggers at me, and her first salutation was in tiger tones, saying, "You are a pretty minister's wife, and what kind of an example will you be for others to follow if you dress in that style," Turning to your father, shes said reproachfully, "only look at that breastpin and gold ring;" it was like a thunder clap so sudden and unthought of. I had considered these simple ornaments, but now they appeared, not only weights to drag me down, but a barrier to exclude others. I was not a moment in resolving never to wear them again—when your Pa turned, and with a searching eye scanned my apparel as though he hardly knew what I had on, and remarked rather sternly than otherwise, "Mary those ornaments are rather gay I think;" this added to the abrupt and rough reproof I had received was more than I could endure, and the tears began to fall like an April shower. I had taken off the pin, and had commenced to remove the ring as soon as we reached the house; she saw the tears and turned triumphantly to Pa and said, "See it is like plucking out the eye and cutting off the right hand; but now she may be able to do some good among us." How little she understood my heart or the cause of my tears—by no means the parting with those little jewels which was like the tossing of a feather in the air. It was the barbed words intended for good, but wounding my heart and forcing the tears from my eyes. Her kindness to us afterward inclined me to forgive her, and we were fast friends.

EVANGELINE.

Burn's Grave and house in 1803.

BY MISS WORDSWORTH.

August 18th. Went to the churchyard where Burns is buried. We looked at the grave with melancholy and painful recollections, repeating to each other his own verses:—

"Is there a man, whose judgment clear,
Can others teach the course to steer,
Yet runs himself, life's mad career, as wild as the wave.
Here let him pause, and through a tear, survey this grave.

"The poor inhabitant below
Was quick to learn and wise to know,
And keenly felt the friendly glow, and soften flame;
But thoughtless follies laid him low, and stained his name!"

When our guide had left us, we turned again to Burn's house. Mrs. Burns was not at home, being gone to spend some time at the sea-shore with her children.

We spoke to the servant-maid at the door, who invited us in, and we sat down in the parlor. The walls were washed with a blue wash; on one side of the fire was a mahogany desk, opposite the window, a clock, and over the desk, a print from the "lottairs saturday night," which Burns mentions in one of his letters having received as a present.

The house was cleanly and neat in the inside, the kitchen on the right side of the passage, the parlor on the left. In the room above the parlor, Burns died, and his son after him

The servant told us she had lived five years with Mrs. Burns, who was now in great sorrow for the death of "Wallace."

Silence is the safest response for all the contradiction that arises from impertinence, vulgarity, or envy.

General News.

BOOTH'S DIARY.—WASHINGTON, May 21.—Stanton has furnished a certified copy of Booth's Diary to the President, which has been published, as follows: April 13th and 14th, Friday. The Ides. Until to-day, nothing was thought of sacrificing to our country's wrong. For six months we had worked to capture, but our cause being almost lost, something decisive and great must be done; but its failure was owing to others who did not strike for their country with a heart, I struck boldly and not as the papers say, I walked with a firm step through a thousand of his friends, was stopped but pushed on. A Colonel was at his side, I shouted "sic semper," before I fired. In jumping broke my leg. I passed all his pickets; rode sixty miles that night, with the bone of my leg tearing my flesh at every jump. I can never repent it though we hated to kill.

Our country owed all her troubles to him and God simply made me the instrument of his punishment.

The balance of the diary is somewhat incoherent, and without an allusion to his accomplices in the assassination except a boy who accompanied him.

CHARLESTON, May 21.—Gen. Sickles has issued an order prohibiting the distillation of spirits from grain in the Second Military District, and offenders are declared liable to trial and punishment by military commission.

MOBILE, May 22.—A military order was issued this evening by direction of Major General Pope, deposing the present mayor and chief of police, and appointing Gustavus Horton mayor, and Colonel Denion chief of police.

A menber of one of the Boston churches, who has been laboring among the fallen women of that city, has pursuaded twenty-three to return to their homes, seven of whom have been converted, and five others were furnished homes in christian families. By his efforts one notorious house of ten inmates has been closed.

LONDON, May 23.—Her majesty, the queen, has issued her royal proclamation declaring the union of upper and lower Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick under one government, to be called the Dominion of Canada. Appended to the proclamation is a list of the senators appointed by the queen to the upper house of the new Canadian legislature in accordance with the provisions of the bill of confederation recently passed by the British parliament.

MEDICAL.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,
127 CARONDELET STREET,
Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic, and Acute

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient, that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years, in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient, if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet Street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city

☞ Consultation free—stamps not "forgotten." f feb31

MASON & HAMLIN,
MANUFACTURERS OF
CABINET ORGANS,
ALSO
PORTABLE ORGANS,
ADAPTED TO SECULAR AND SACRED MUSIC, FOR DRAWING-ROOMS, CHURCHES, SUNDAY AND DAY SCHOOLS, LODGES, &C.. &C.

Uniting to a considerable extent the capacity of the Piano Forte with that of the Pipe Organ, and costing much less than either.

They occupy little space; are elegant as furniture; not liable to get out of order, and are securely boxed, so that they can be sent anywhere by ordinary freight routes, all ready for use.

Forty Styles, plain or elegant cases: one to twelve stops; Prices, $75, $90, $110, $125, $130, $1 0, $150, $160, $170, $200, $225, $250, $300, $435, $540, $550, $600, and upwards.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs were introduced four years since, and are a great improvement upon the Melodeon, Harmonium, and other reed organs, greatly excelling them especially in the excellent quality and variety of their tones; in power and quickness of action, and capacity for expression,

THEIR SUCCESS HAS BEEN ENTIRELY BEYOND PRECEDENT,

and proves how greatly such an instrument was needed. Again and again the manufacturers have been compelled to double their manufacturing facilities, until they have been increased six-fold. From the most eminent of the musical profession, the most distinguished pianists, organists, composers, and musical directors, the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs have received an amount and degree of commendation never before bestowed upon any similar musical instrument. More than two hundred and fifty of the most eminent musicians in the country have given written testimonials to the value of the improvements contained in them, and that they excel all other instruments of this class.

FIFTY-TWO GOLD OR SILVER MEDALS, or other highest Premiums have been awarded to Mason & Hamlin for the important improvements effected by them, and for the

SUPERIORITY OF THEIR INSTRUMENTS TO ALL OTHERS.

Constantly exhibiting their instruments in competition with others, they have been awarded the highest premium in every instance, but three or four.

For churches, sunday schools, etc., the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs are the instruments long wanted, of the very best quality, abundant power, not too expensive nor liable to get out of order.

For private use, in drawing-rooms, &c. they are not less desirable, and are finding a place in the musical families of the principal cities.

They are adapted to a wider range of music than the piano, being fitted for all sacred music and for much secular music, while their quickness of action is such that the most lively, rapid music can be played on them. Then their cost is greatly less, as well as their liability to get out of order.

BRIEF EXTRACTS FROM OPINIONS OF DISTINGUISHED MUSICIANS.

I should think they would become very much sought after as parlor instruments as well as for public performance.—Sigismund Thalberg, the world-renowned Pianist. Sure to find its way into every household of taste and refinement which can possibly afford its moderate expenses. Far superior to everything of its class I have seen.—L. M. Gottschalk, the eminent Pianist. Such pure musical tones, promptness and smoothness of action and fine variety of effect, I have not found in any other instrument of the class.—S. B. Mills, the eminent Pianist. Really so excellent that there can hardly be much difference of opinion respecting them.—William Mason, the eminent Pianist. The best instrument of its class with which I am acquainted, and worthy a place in every drawing room. Harry Sanderson, the eminent Pianist. In every respect far superior to everything I have ever seen of the kind, whether in Europe or America.—Geo. Washbourne Morgan the eminent organist, N. Y. I can only reiterate what so many in the musical profession have said, that for equality, promptness and exquisite tone, they are unequalled.—John H. Wilcox, the eminent Organist, Boston. Surpasses everything in this line I have ever seen, whether Cond in America.—Jon Zundel, the eminent Organist, N. Y. The best reed instruments in the world are made in the United States, and your Cabinet Organs are greatly superior, and by far the best made here.—Max Maretzer, Musical Conductor, N. Y. Far surpasses all other similar instruments which have come under my observation.—Carl Zerhan, Musical Conductor, Boston. Exceeds in my estimation every other instrument of this general class. Thos. Hastings, I can recommend them with confidence.—Lowell Mason. As soon as the people become acquainted with the superior merits of your instruments, your only trouble will be to supply the demand.—Wm. B. Bradbury. I have never seen anything of the kind which interested me so much.—Geo. F. Root. Exciting much interest in musical circles, and already becoming the fashion. N. Y. Home Journal. The highest accomplishment of industry in this department. This is not only our opinion, but the unanimous verdict of the organists.—Boston Advertiser. A glorious instrument for the temple service, so readily secured as to be available for any congregation, and effective and beautiful as to meet the desires of the most refined and fastidious.—N. Y. Observer.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs must not be confounded with other reed instruments, from which they vary essentially, their superiority being largely derived from PATENTED IMPROVEMENTS, which cannot be employed by other makers. Among them are,

The AUTOMATIC BELLOWS SWELL, patented, a most important invention, and greatly the best swell ever devised being much more effective and easily used than any other. The variety and beauty of effect of which it is capable, cannot be appreciated except from actual use. The many attempts to imitate or find a substitute for this swell, prove its value. None of them, however, approach it in excellence and simplicity.

IMPROVED SELF-ADJUSTING VALVES patented, secure much more perfect action, durability, and freedom from liability to get out of order.

WOOD'S OCTAVE COUPLET patented, in effect nearly doubles the power of the instrument in which it is used.

NOISELESS SAFETY VALVES patented, prevent the hissing sound often heard.

The IMPROVED COMBINATION REGISTER patented, gives of great facility in drawing stops.

Poetry.

The Bride's Farewell to her Mother.

This is the saddest hour, mother,
That I have ever known,
And yet a spell of untold bliss
Around my heart is thrown:
I'm sad to think that I, mother,
Must go away from thee,
But blest to think so true a heart,
Is plighted unto me.

Thy home's no more my home, mother,
The parting hour is near,
And then I leave its sacred hearth,
Another home to cheer:
Early affection speaks, mother,
And fain would bid me stay:
But stronger is the voice of love
That's calling me away.

I live no more for self, mother,
For holy is the vow,
Ascended from my lips to Heaven,
And binding on me now;
This noble heart must ne'er, mother,
Know aught from me of pain,—
To me he looks for happiness,
Nor shall he look in vain.

But, oh! if I should fail, mother,
There's nothing left for me,
A joyless blank, far worse than death,
Must all my future be.
Oh! many hopes and fears, mother,
Within my bosom swell,
As now I leave my youthful home,
And say to thee, farewell.

One boon before I go, mother,
I fain would ask of thee—
Thy blessing and good will, mother,
I pray bestow on me:
Oft will I think of thee, mother,
When cares oppress my heart,
How patiently thou didst endure
Thy toils for me, in part.

England in India.

BY BISHOP THOMPSON.

Nothing in history is more wonderful than that a clerk in a factory should win one of the largest empires in the world; that a trading corporation should hold and acquire territory as did the East Indiana Company; that, having failed to accomplish its purposes, it was overthrown by one of the bloodiest revolutions the world has ever seen; that such a revolution should be put down by a little island nine thousand miles distant, that it should prove to be the grandest step in India's progress; and that one hundred and eighty millions of Pagans should be easily and safely governed by eighty thousand Christian sabres. This is the Lord's doings, and it is marvelous in our eyes. None the less so because wicked men have accomplished the work, often from bad motives, and by unjustifiable means. God knows how to use bad men, and overrule bad motives and deplorable events, for the welfare of the world. Among angels, progress doubtless is through reason, and by the path of peace; but, owing to the perversity of man, national preservation and progress are by violence. What prevented Asiatic despotism from overspreading Europe? What prevented ancient Rome from becoming Punic? What saved medieval Germany and Gaul from becoming Mohammedan? What prevented the United States from being the great slave empire, and the propagandist of despotism in its worst form? Arms. The elements of our civilization—Greek culture, Roman law, Christian morals, Protestant faith, and political freedom—were all both procured and preserved by steel What wonder, then, if God break down with a rod of iron those despotisms which for three thousand years have doomed the East to superstition, sluggishness, idolatry and corruption, and prepare the people for a baptism of water by a baptism of blood.

Will the ascendancy of the British in India be permanent? Yes. How came they to put down the rebellion? The people were divided. The masses, long oppressed, cared nothing for the issue. Had they simply retired from their villages to the interior, carrying their effects with them, the British army must have starved to death by the roadside. But it was well supplied. Besides this division between the ruler and the ruled, there were others. The Bengali hates the Madrassee, both despise the natives of Bombay, all three look with jealousy upon the hardier race of the northwest provinces, while the Sikhs and Ghoorkas have little respect for any of the rest, or they for them. Then there are religious divisions. Mohammedans and Brahmins can never unite. Though they joined in the mutiny with the watchword "Two faiths in one saddle," the Brahmin soon percieved that the back seat is for him. The Mohammedans themselves are divided into Sunnites, Saiites and Wahabees; and the Hindoos into nearly two hundred castes and eighty-four thousand sects, whose interests are diverse. The intelligent rajahs perceive the advantages of English rule, and shudder at the anarchy and conflicts that would ensue from its overthrow. Meanwhile, while the natives are disarmed, the British have a controlling army and full possession of all the strongholds of the country, and are strengthened by perhaps twenty-five thousand European residents, and a hundred thousand Eurasians.

What will this power effect? Judge what it has already effected. It has reduced anarchy to order, given law, established justice, protected the land from invasion, and prevented it from being ravaged by intestine wars. It has suppressed suttee and dekoittee, forbidden human sacrifices, repressed infanticide, and made slavery illegal. It has woven a network of telegraphs around the empire from Galle to Peshawur, and from Peshawur to Rangoon. It has established a regular system of postage for letters, papers and books, at low charges and uniform rates. It has improved old roads and made new ones; sent steamers up the principal streams; constructed a canal nine hundred miles long, and will probably soon construct others in the valleys of the Mohanuddy, the Kistna, and the Godavery. It has commenced a system of railways embracing about five thousand miles of trunk lines, at a cost of nearly three thousand millions of dollrs, which, when completed, will unite the extremes of the peninsula, open hitherto inaccessible tracts, and bring all parts close to each other and to the civilized world. Already the steamhorse traverses the Gangetic valley from Calcutta to Delhi, crosses the peninsula from Madras to the western shore, and prances from Bombay to Nagpore.

It has steadily increased the trade of the country, which before the days of Clive could be conveyed in a single Venetian frigate, until it now reaches nearly five hundred millions of dollars annually. It has raised the revenues of the government to two hundred and fifteen millions. It has given India the newspaper, that great educator, so that there are twenty-eight newspapers published weekly in Bengal, three of them in English, by the natives—thirty native presses in Madras, and I know not how many in Bombay and Ceylon, and twenty-five presses among the missions alone. It has established schools in all parts of the land, in which those sciences are taught that undermine the prevailing systems of superstition and error. It has made the English language classical in the country, and by this means it is furnishing the native mind with the rich and Christian stores of which that noble tongue is the medium. It has protected missionaries of Christ and their converts.

Look, then, at this great peninsula, linked to the continent and the world by its languages, commerce and religions; source of the false faiths which together ensnare six hundred millions of the human race, and the stronghold of a delusion that blinds a hundred and eighty millions more. This great moral pest-hose, this Babel of devils, God has put into the power of one of the most enlightened Christian nations on earth. There are more Mohammedans under Victoria's sceptre than under any on earth. The Sultan has but twenty-one million; she has twenty-five millions at least. There are more heathen under the same Christian queen than under any sovereign except the emperor of China. And this mass is all through and through, more and more, subjected to Christian influences. The telegraphs are so many ganglia in a great nervous system, diffusing new sensations; the railways are so many iron arteries, pumping Christian blood through the native veins; the newspapers are so many digestive powers, preparing healthful moral food; the schools are so many batteries, thundering at the crumbling battlements of error; the missions are many brains, thinking new and better thoughts.

Knowledge must be diffused through the earth. We know two things more, namely, that our religion can withstand modern science and make it tributary to itself, and that no other religion can; for everyother faith has linked its science with its doctrines, so that they must both fall together. As to take Paris is to take France, and to take Sepastopol is to shake Russia to the Arctic seas, and to take Richmond is to shake out the rebels of the United States from the Potomac to the Rio Grande, so to Christinaize India, owing to its key position in heathendom, is to skake out the idols from the race of the whole earth.

We have entered upon a grand era. The Almighty is shaking the nations preparatory to giving them to his Son. The lines both of prophecy and providence converge at a point which our feet are rapidly approaching. The child is in his cradle who may see a Joshua leading India into her spiritual Canaan. As the thousand years brought the translation of Enoch, and the second the Flood, and the third the reign of David, and the fourth the Messiah, and the fifth the Reformation, so the sixth may bring the Millennium.—Methodist Quarterly Review.

The Heroes of the Locomotive.

BY PRESIDENT TUTTLE OF WABASH COLLEGE.

I confess to a high admiration of a class of men to whom a vast burden of responsibility in the matter of human life is constantly entrusted: I refer to our railroad engineers. The locomotive itself is a marvel of ingenuity and power. Compact, perfect in form and adaption, indispensible to the wants of civilization, it is one of the finest instruments. The man who controls these thirty tons of organized iron which we call a locomotive must secure both self-respect and self-confidence. I have sometimes stood beside the track when a train has come flying along, and have observed with boundless admiration the man on whose vigilance, skill, and pluck the safety of that train so largely depended. His left hand on the lever, his right on the reversing lever—if that be its name—his body bent forward eagerly, and eye scrutinizing the track ahead, lest the tremendous momentum of his train, meeting with some obstacle, should dash itself in an instant into a horrible wreck. How, now, can a man be weighed down with such responsibility and not be a stronger and more self-reliant man?

Some years ago, with a party, it was my fortune to be on the Erie Railway when the engineers engaged in a general strike. I sided with the engineers, believing them to be wronged. At the Susquehanna station we found a large body of engineers, more than I had ever seen together at one time. They were not noisy, nor braggart, nor tipsy; but I then said, what I now believe, that they were the finest body of operatives I ever saw. Intelligent, bold, strong, each the manager of such a wonderful machine, they found at least one ardent admirer that day.

Some of the most remarkable exhibition of courage have been made by men of this class. A few years ago my friend Osborne, who has driven the locomotive for the mail train on the Morris & Essex Railroad for twenty years at least, with faultless faithfulness, was once delayed by snow on the track for several hours, but received explicit orders from the superintendent—not that splendid officer who has lately resigned his office on that road—'to go ahead,' for the road was clear, no other train was on the track. After satisfying himself that he had not misunderstood the order, he left the summit on a steep down grade, and on rounding a sharp curve, came on a train that was ascending the same grade under full head of steam. In an instant he whistled down the brakes and reversed his engine. The noble thing, under such a tremendous strain, as if fully aware of the danger, obeyed, and threw itself back to avert the catastrophe. Meanwhile the other engineer had done the same thing with his locomotive: but it was possible only to modify the shock. Together rushed those two panting and reluctant giants, their joint weight not less than sixty tons, with the gathered momentum of their following trains. They rose like two furious animals in fight, standing on end, and in a trice the two splended machines were a wreck. The cars behind them were also badly crushed. Osborne did not leap from his engine; but never moving his hands from the levers which controlled it, he stood as resolute as a rock at his post until the shock came, and then, quick as thought, adjusted his valves to allow the steam to escape without an explosion. Our war can furnish no clearer proof of the finest courage than that.

At the crossing of the Morris & Essex Railway and the Orange turnpike may be seen a flagman with one leg. The other he lost in the wreck I have just described. Had he had Osborne's nerve to face danger, he would have escaped also unhurt. Poor fellow! the man who issued the presumptuous blunder that day tried to buy him off from prosecuting the company for the sum of one hundred dollars—an offer which poor "Bob's" wife met with this query: "Mr. ——, would you sell one of your legs for a hundred dollars?"

During the war an incident occurred on the Pennsylvania Central, which was related to me by an eye-witness. My informant was with a regiment of soldiers going from Pittsburg to Harrisburg in a special train. Between Johnstown and the summit they were delayed by a freight train off the track, or a part of its cars off. This they learned at one of the stations, and remained there until they should be informed that the track was clear. It was in the night and most of the thousand men on the train were asleep, unconscious of their danger. Four heavy loaded coal-cars belonging to the train ahead, had, by accident, become detached, and began the descent of the heavy grade at a speed which soon became terrible.—The engineer of the special train heard the roar of the descending cars and surmised what was the matter. In an instant he ordered his engine to be detached from the train, and put on steam to meet the runaway cars if possible, to break their force and save his train. His locomotive was a large freight, and he had moved several rods ahead when the coal-cars struck him like a thunderbolt, and crushed his engine back on the train; but his heroic courage had saved many lives. His engine was utterly demolished, and many of his cars were also crushed; but so had he broken the force of the shock that no lives were lost. The man's name was Story, and his grateful beneficiaries presented him some elegant silver plate, with the deed itself and their names engraved on them. When asked why he did not abandon his train, he replied, "Quick as lightning I thought I had better die than to have those runaway cars cut clean through my train, destroying hundreds! It was a heroic answer.

We glorify our heroes of the battle-field and the sea; we stand all agog with amazed admiration if some foolish man or more foolish woman ascends Mt. Blanc just for the name of the feat; we talk about Alexander and Bucephalus, Caesar in the boat in the tempest; why may not my humble pen glorify the heroes of the locomotive engine, who exhibit as noble and praiseworthy a daring as any heroes in other fields? And they do this in the constant service of thousands of families who every hour out of the twenty-four are represented on the railways of the world. All honor to the heroes of the engine, and 'ten thousand times ten thousand,' if they could would respond 'Amen.'

NO. IV.

Despondency—Bound for Arkansas Post—Loyal Citizens—Attack on the "Post"—The Gun Boats—The surrender—Bravado—On our "travels" again.

Though failing to take Vicksburg, we had driven the enemy back into his strongest intrenchments, from which he showed no disposition to emerge and fight us in an open field. But though we re-embarked with little molestation, the fact was deeply impressed upon us all that we were repulsed, and we could not resist a feeling of despondency. However there was one source of great consolation. We knew that the principles of aristocracy and democracy were arrayed against each other in deadly conflict; and we knew God was on the side of the right. He had designed this great country to be the political light of the world, and would he now permit that light to go out in darkness? And was it not a pleasing thought that we, His chosen instruments, had the honor of fighting, not simply for the sake of conquest, but for the good of the whole world? And was it not a grand thought that we were fighting for a principle as broad and deep as the very foundations of civil government?

It must be confessed however, that the soldiers were slightly demoralized, and it was evident that a diversion in their favor was necessary for their own, as well as for the good of the people in general. Arkansas Post presented a fine opportunity for such diversion, and accordingly when Sherman at the mouth of White river turned over his command to McClernand, we started almost immediately for that place. Running up White river for about 15 miles, we entered a cut-off connecting with the Arkansas. While running slowly up the latter river, "feeling our way," we observed a number of horsemen beyond a large field going post haste in the same direction as ourselves. Their object no doubt was to inform their friends at the "Post" that we were coming.

The citizens along the river seemed to be loyal; and for the first time in a secesh county, we were heartily cheered by the men and women along the shores. One old lady almost jumped off of her feet as she waved her handkerchief, saying in a loud voice, "Tear the 'Post' to pieces;" and she looked as though she might have did it easily herself if nothing were necessary but the will. It done our souls good to be thus welcomed, for we believed they were honest and truthful in their expression of joy; the more especially as their humble homes did not warrant a belief that they belonged to the slave aristocracy.

It is a pleasant thought that our government is the poor man's friend.

We reached the vicinity of the "Post" on Friday, the 8th of January, about dusk. Next morning the troops were disembarked and sent off in such a manner as to surround the fortifications of the enemy. Our regiment had to march a good part of the following night through swamps, guided only by the north star, for the purpose of getting in their rear. In the morning we came upon a camp which indicated a hasty departure of the rebels before finishing their breakfast. Everything was now in readiness for the grand attack which was commenced that morning about 10 o'clock. At 1 o'clock the gunboats opened a tremendous fire upon the fort which enabled the infantry to advance close under the fortifications, though exposed to a heavy fire. Taking partial shelter in some ravines they remained till the gunboats had silenced the artillery in the fort, when dashing forward they were soon climbing over the fortifications on the northeast, and the white flag was raised.

The rebel general Churchill pretended to be greatly surprised at the raising of the white flag, and declared his intention of having fought till reinforcements should arrive from Little Rock, or till the last man was dead. This was almost as funny as the report, made at another time by a certain rebel general, that, "in the midst of the engagement he suddenly withdrew his whole force."

The next morning I examined the main fort and fortifications in the rear somewhat minutely. In the fort were two great guns each one enclosed in a defense shaped something like the roof of a house, one of the slopes being toward the river. This defense consisted of several layers of timber firmly bound to-gether and over all a layer of railroad iron. Both of the guns were placed so as to command the river below rather than above so that our gunboats, after "running the blockade," got into position so as to scatter the railroad iron in all directions. A few solid shot through the port holes, and several through the timbers silenced these two guns. There was also a large pivot gun in plain view of our gunboats which our gunners had the yankee meanness to knock into two pieces. Great praise is due, in the taking of Arkansas Post to our gunners in the gunboats. Passing round to the fortifications in the rear I found they consisted of an embankment, a ditch and the usual abatti to prevent the approach of an enemy. After resting a while and levelling the fort we once more started upon our "travels" and again the cry of "on to Vicksburg" was upon our lips.

Facts about the Bible.

The Zion's Herald sums up the statistics of the Bible thus:

The Scriptures have been translated into 148 languages and dialects, of which 121 had, prior to the formation of the British Foreign Bible Society, never appeared. And 25 of these languages existed without an alphabet, in an oral form. Upward of 43,000,000 of those copies of God's word are circulated among not less than 600,000,000 of people.

The first division of the Divine order into chapter and verses, is attributed to Stephen Langton, Archbishop of Canterbury, in the reign of King John, in the latter part of the twelfth century, or the beginning of the thirteenth. Cardinal Hugo, in the middle of the thirteenth century, divided the Old Testament into chapters, as they stand in our translation. In 1661, Athias, a Jew of Amsterdam, divided the section of Hugo into verses,—a french printer had previously (1551) divided the New Testament into verses as they are at present.

The old Testament contains 39 books, 929 chapters, 23,214 verses, 592,439 words, 2,738,100 letters.

The New Testament contains 27 books, 260 chapters, 7,950 verses, 182,253 words, 933,380 letters.

The entire Bible contains 66 books, 1,188 chapters, 31,185 verses, 774,692 words, 3,566,480 letters.

The name of Jehovah or Lord occurs 6,855 times in the Old Testament.

The word "and" occurs in the Old Testament 35,643 times.

The middle book of the Old Testament is Proverbs.

The middle chapter is the 29th of Job.

The middle verse is 2d Chronicles, 20th chapter, 17th verse.

The middle book of the New Testament is 2d Thesselonians.

The middle chapters are Romans 13th and 14th.

The middle verse is Acts xi, 7.

The middle chapter and the least in the Bible is Psalm cxvii.

The middle verse in the Bible is Psalm cxviii, 8.

The middle line in the Bible is 2d Chronicles i, 16.

The least verse in the Bible is John xi, 35.

The 19th chapter of 2d Kings and Isaiah 36th are the same.

In the 21st verse of the 7th chapter of Ezra are all the letters of the alphabet, I and J being considered as one.

The Apocrypha (not inspired, but sometimes bound between the Old Testament and the New) contains 14 books, 183 chapters, 15,081 verses, 152,185 words.

The preceding facts were ascertained by a gentleman in 1718. Also by an Englishman residing at Amsterdam, in 1772, and it is said to have taken each gentleman nearly three years in the investigation.

There is a Bible in the library of the University of Gottingen, written on 5,475 palm leaves.

A day's journey was 33 1-5 miles.

A Sabbath day's journey was about an English mile

Ezekiel's reed was eleven feet, nearly.

A cubit is twenty two inches, nearly.

A hand's breadth is equal to three and five-eights inches.

A finger's breadth is equal to one inch.

A shekel of silver was about fifty cents.

A shekel of gold $8 09.

A talent of silver was $516 32.

A talent of gold was $13 809.

A piece of silver or a penny was thirteen cents.

A farthing was three cents.

A gerah was one cent.

A mite was one and a half cents

A homer contains seventy-five gallons and five pints.

A hin was one gallon and two pints.

A firkin was seven pints.

An omer was six pints.

A cab was three pints.

A dog was one-half pint.

The divisions of the Old Testament are four.

1. The Pentateuch; or the five books of Moses.

2. The historical books, comprising Joshua to Esther, inclusive.

3. Poetical or doctrinal books from Job to Song of Solomon, inclusive.

4. Prophetical books, from Isaiah to Malachi, inclusive.

The New Testament is usually divided into three parts:

1. Historical, containing the four Gospels and Acts.

2. Doctrinal, comprising all the epistles from Romans to Jude.

3. Prophetical, being the book of the Revelations of St. John.

Religion.

There is least of the appearance of religion, in the purest Christian lands, for Jesus teaches: "When thou prayest, enter into thy closet." And in communities or sects, where there is most of the crucifix, there is least of Christ.

Obedience to God is best shown by reverence for his name, regard for his holy Sabbath, and love for his creatures. He has said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it to the least of these, ye have done it unto me."

Loud professions, severe penances, long prayers, costly temples—these do not indicate a christian character or people. The Italian brigand, the Malay pirate, the Hindoo Thug and the fanatic Musselman, are all religious bigots, with a multitude of pious exercises; and those who are most demonstrative among Bible christians, are not the most reliable.

Pure religion is bringing every power we possess, even of mind, into subjection to Christ; and employing them in life of holy usefulness.

HEAVY FLEECE.—The buck lately purchased by our townsman, A. B. Palm, Esq., from Mt. Barbs of Vermont, was sheared the other day and produced a fleece weighing twenty-one pounds two ounces before it was washed—and after washing, eighteen pounds. We have a sample of it before us, equal in quality to any we have ever seen. Every man owning sheep should improve his flock until Texas wool acquires a reputation which will insure it the highest price in the market.—State Gazette, Austin.

A Mississippi paper says there is not enterprise enough in some of the towns of that State to roll a wheelbarrow down hill on a plank road.

Self-Control.

Self with its suffixes is a word of frequent use. How familiar are we with the expressions, self-love, self-will, self-conceit, self-aggrandizement, self-confidence, self-admiration, self-sufficiency, self-righteousness, self-delusion, self-defence, and that meanest of all words—selfishness; and how trite among life's daily expressions are, family-government, church-government, State-government, school-government and prison-government; but how rarely do we hear of self-control and self-government. The polyglotic press and the many tongued-pulpit, are ever proclaiming that to do good to others is the sum of all religion; but the duty and obligations of self-control are seldom the theme of these engines of power which so profoundly affect the opinions and characters of men for good or evil.

The page of story and of song, records the struggles and triumphs of the warrior; his exploits are inscribed upon triumphal arches and commemorated by colossal monuments. To defeat mighty armies and capture strong cities, and build a throne upon human bones, has ever been regarded the acme of human glory. But where is the praise of him who has gained the mastery of himself? What emblems of honor are befitting such a conquest? What historian shall be thought worthy to record his fame or poet to sing his glory? Earth is too poor to rear a monumental pile of grandeur equal to such a triumph. Neither Pompey's Pillar, nor Cleopatra's Needle, nor Vespasian's Coliseum, nor Agrippa's Pantheon, nor Constantine's Arch, nor Trajan's Column, is adequate to commemorate an achievement so grand. God only can be his historian, and the celestial bow, painted in the fadeless beauties of light, is his only fitting triumphal arch.

Self-control is that sovereign power of a man over himself—his mental powers and corporeal appetites, by which he can and does do that which is right, and by which he can and does resist that which is evil. It is the habitual and harmonious controlment of a man's capabilities to virtuous ends. It is the rejection of sinister motives and the abstinence from vicious indulgences; it is the highest development of man; the fulfillment of the noblest purposes of his being; the attainment of the highest excellence. It is superiority to circumstances. Self-control is neither self-destruction nor the annihilation of the annoying passion. All human passions have their origin in the constitution of man and are designed for the happiness of their possessor. It is not the use, but the abuse of these passions which ruins man. Their inordinate gratification is sin. The desire for food is not a vice, but gluttony is. Vice is the excess of virtue. Revenge is the excess of anger; vanity, of self-respect; ambition, of emulation.

Self-knowledge is essential to self-control. "Know thyself" is a maxim as wise as it is ancient. The radical defect in modern education is, it leads a man away from himself. Not that which is within him, but that which is without him is the subject of his thoughts. He who would control himself must know his own temperament; distinguish between nature and habits, principles and prejudices. He should know his weak points no less than his strong points; what should be added and what subtracted. The error of most men is, they are always strengthening their strong points, but neglecting their weak ones. He who would gain this mastery must concede to himself that he is weak and imperfect. When Cyrus was asked for the secret of his success, his reply was, "The fear of failure." No man is so apt to be deceived by himself and duped by others, as he who thinks himself without faults. Conscious weakness is not unfrequently power:—"When I am weak, then am I strong." A measure of self-distrust is a greater element of success than supreme self-reliance.

One should attend to his mental operations. Said David, "I communed with my own heart and my spirit made diligent search." How am I affected under given circumstances? What fires me now? What can I not now withstand? Are the questions to be frequently asked. Ever vigilant, one should aim at self-possession. To be calm amid turbulance, meek in provocation, composed in danger is a high moral achievement. When Demochaus insultingly said to Philip of Macedon, "the greatest service thou canst do us is to hang thyself," it was self-control for Philip to reply, "Go tell your superiors, that those who dare make use of such insolent language, are more haughty and less peaceably inclined than those who can forgive them." So when Antigones said to his soldiers whom he heard reviling him near his tent, "Gentlemen, just remove to a greater distance, for your king hears you." So when it was said of Cranmer, "Do my lord of Canterbury an ill-turn and you make him your friend forever." So with Christ, when he said of his murderers, "Father forgive them, for they know not what they do." But he falls short who trusts solely to philosophy to gain control of himself. Divine strength is necessary to finish the effort and crown the work. Grace calms the spirit, purifies the heart, regulates the passions, tempers the soul. Adam Clark said, "As soon as I feel passion, I go to my Redeemer." Prayer has a soothing power.

Self-control is self-denial, self-humiliation, self-conquest. For lack of it, "How have the mighty fallen!" Clitus was the warm friend of Alexander, and had saved his master's life at the battle of Granicus. But Clitus could not flatter, and in a transport of rage, Alexander slew him at a banquet. Saul, son of Kish, conquered the Amorites on the heights of Jabesh—Gilead and the Philistines on the rocky slopes of Michmash, but failed to conquer his jealousy toward David. One cannot but admire the almost superhuman efforts for brutal conquest. What abstinence, what exercise on the part of the pugilist. Behold Hannibal crossing the Alps! What courage, endurance, and fatigue. Some of the cities of Palestine were besieged eleven years and then fell a prize into the hands of the patient warrior. But "He that ruleth his spirit is better than he who taketh a city."

Republican Party.

The colored men of Louisiana, frequently importune us for counsel in the performance of their political duties. Their instincts are right, but their political intelligence is limited. So many at the present time, are crying "Lo here and Lo there," and are advising them to do this thing and that thing, that they are fairly bewildered. Now we take this opportunity to say to our friends, that there are in fact but two political parties in this country, known respectively as Republicans and Democrats. The latter embrace the copperheads of the North and the secessionists of the South. It is true, there is a sprinkling of good men in the ranks of the Democratic party—men who, by their intelligence, virtue and social position, would do honor to any organization, but they are not numerous enough to "leaven the whole lump." They are associated by party ties with those who, either plotted the downfall of the great Republic, or who opposed the late war for the Union. In a word, the Democratic party has always been pro-slavery, and this is a sufficient reason why the freedmen should not affiliate with it. Freedmen cannot consistently be Democrats.

On the other hand, the Republican party is that grand organization which has saved the nation. Created to oppose the extension of slavery, it culminated in the election of Abraham Lincoln as President of the United States. It was under him that the war for the Union was successfully prosecuted, and he it was who proclaimed the emancipation of four millions of slaves. It was a Republican Congress that abolished slavery in the District of Columbia, and gave the right of franchise to its colored citizens; that passed the Civil Rights Bill, and finally that adopted the Reconstruction Bill, by the provisions of which, rebels are disfranchised and the freedmen of the South are permitted to vote, and are made eligible to civil office. In the choice of parties you need not therefore err. A man's friends are those who befriend him. Freedmen are Republicans by birthright.

In Louisiana there is some confusion growing out of the pre-fixes which party factions have assumed. Some are called Radical Republicans; others, Union Republicans. These terms originated in 1863–4, when the Hon. Thomas J. Durant and the Hon. Michael Hahn were the recognized leaders of the two wings of the Republican party. The term radical was then employed to express universal suffrage, and the term Union to express just so much of suffrage as was consistent with the safety of the dominant faction. But now that suffrage is universal by law, the cause of this distinction has ceased to exist, and the action of Congress has made all Republicans radicals on this point. In view of these facts, we consider the prefixes radical and union as not only superfluous, but exceedingly mischievous. They are distinctions where there are no differences; they keep alive a feud, the hatchet of which should be buried so deep, that it can never have a resurrection; they divide our strength and confuse the freedmen to such a degree that they will either become disgusted with their friends and refuse to vote, or conclude to go over to those where there is more unity and greater harmony. Let us therefore drop all these qualifying, confusing terms and rally under the banner of one great Republican Party. The principles of that party are the equality of all men before the law, and the eligibility of all qualified citizens to hold any office, whether appointive or elective. Who the standard bearers of this party shall be in Louisiana, doth not yet appear. Almost every other man we meet is the people's candidate for office, but we are inclined to think that the ancient saying will come to pass; "Many that are first shall be last; and the last shall be first."

Union Men in the Country Parishes.

We who dwell in this great city, protected by loyal bayonets, can scarcely appreciate the desperate condition of Loyal Men in the country parishes. "Few and far between," they are surrounded by neighbors, whose disloyalty is publicly announced, and whose opposition to the great principles of the Reconstruction Bill are brazenly avowed. Having suffered much during the war, they are still suffering for the cause that is dear to every lover of his country. If they proclaim their sentiments, they are wantonly persecuted; if they attempt to organize a party in sympathy with the pronounced will of Congress, they are driven by violence from the place of public meeting; if they aim to instruct the freedmen how to register, and how to vote, they are denounced as enemies, and their lives and property are threatened with destruction. Although men of unimpeachable character, of high social position, and of sterling integrity as loyal citizens, yet they are made the butt of ridicule and compelled to suffer every indignity. We offer to these scattered, isolated, heroic, well-tried Unionists, our profound sympathy. More would we offer, had we more to give.

We insist upon it, however, that United States troops should be stationed at different points in every parish in the State. This would greatly relieve the anxious minds of these loyal men; it would afford them a sense of security; it would enable them to form a loyal party of the freedmen especially, which by judicious management, would secure for Louisiana a reconstructed government, in every way acceptable to Congress. Without this military protection, the freedmen will either be deterred from registering or controlled in the coming elections to such a degree that the power of the State will again be in the hands of the men who so lately sought its destruction. We therefore call the attention of the General Commanding to this important subject, and earnestly entreat him to send troops to the succor of the Union men in our country parishes.

The Correction of Children.

Childhood training must consist in part of correction. Impelled by exuberance of spirits, quick in resentments, without experience or observation of the tendencies of their actions, children are especially liable to go astray. They fall readily into each new folly, and, being imitative by nature, they copy with wonderful aptitude the vicious examples placed before them. The injunctions, "Train up a child in the way he shouid go," is found to be one of the most difficult to obey. Children are so volatile, so thoughtless, so daring, so quick into the wrong, that it requires incessant watchfullness and unwearied patience to restrain them. Especially is this true in cities and on large plantations where great numbers of children are associated and where each communicates his own discoveries in vice to all his associates.

But however difficult the task, or constant the demand on parental watchfullness, this great duty must not be omitted. There is no escape to you who are parents from the fearful responsibility. There are young immortals committed to your charge whose characters are rapidly moulding into form; there are lines drawn on these undying spirits that will soon be ineffaceable, and the yielding material, now so pliable, will soon assume a rigidity that no future influences can change. Vicious models everywhere abound, and unless you take the work vigorously in hand, your children will grow up with a training that will fit them only for the service of Satan. How many even of the children of christian parents are thus educated into sin.

But how is the evil to be remedied? We ought at least to train aright the children of the church, and we ought in some way to lay our hand upon the children of our country. And religion rightly understood will teach us how to do this. The Jews instructed their children in all the precepts of the law. The command was, "thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and thou shalt talk of them, when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." (Dent. 6. 7.) There was not a law in their entire code more stringent than the requirement that they should make known to their children "the praises of the Lord, and his strenght, and his wonderful works that he hath done. For he established a testimony in Jacob, and appointed a law in Israel, that they should make them known unto their children: that the generation to come might know them, even the children which should be born; who should arise and declare them to their children: that they might set their hope in God and not forget the works of God, but keep his commandments." (Ps. 78. 4: 7.) Nor is this duty less binding on the christian, than it was on the jewish parent. For as Abraham "commanded his children and his household after him," so the christian father is to bring up his children "in the nature and admonition of the Lord."

The first duty in the training of children is thus seen to be instruction, the awakening of the child's better nature, and thus leading it to a willing obedience. He must not forget that childhood at its beginning is involved in total ignorance and needs daily some simple, plain, easy lessons in duty. This should be imparted not in dry, didactic precepts which the young intellect may strive in vain to grasp, but in delightful narrative, charming story, or pleasing picture of fancy. Ever make the good appear inviting; the evil repulsive. Glean from beautiful Bible characters and from modern biography choice examples for the immitation of your children. Hold up before them models of excellence and remove them as far as possible from all vicious associates. And yet after all your care and persuasion, it will sometimes be found necessary to resort to correction. If you cannot win obedience by loving instruction and fervent appeal then you have no alternative, as a christian, but to compel it. This however should ever be the last resort.

It is a terrible mistake, into which many parents and teachers have fallen, that the rod can answer the place of instruction and persuasion. Kindness should first be exhausted and punishment never inflicted unless when there is willful violation of an express command. A child should never be punished in anger, or for accidents, or mistakes, or unavoidable blunders. It should always clearly understand its offense and that it ought to be punished for it. If you seem to exult over its punishment it will understand immediately that it is inflicted through spite or revenge instead of love, and though you may enforce obedience you will destroy most of the advantages of correction. We fear from the observations we have been able to make, that among our colored people there is far more of punishment used in governing children than there is of teaching and persuasion. We would recommend more of kindness, more of paternal tenderness, more of the winning expedients of love. You will thus secure not only obedience, but what is of more inestimable value, the affection of your children. You will have planted the principle of obedience, and in coming years they will rise up and call you blessed.

We omit our own article on General Sheridan, and give place to the following communication.

Major General Sheridan.

To the N. O. Advocate.

Mr. Editor:

The article published in the N. O. Republican of May 28th, headed "General Sheridan," is in our opinion illtimed and grossly unjust to that distinguished officer; and the attempt to commit the Republican party by the denunciations therein contained, is equally unjust to the party who claim to be consulted on a question of so much importance as the wholesale denunciation of one of our most faithful and distinguished public servants, and the man to whom the government has committed the important trust of reconstructing two great States of the Union. Gen. Sheridan's fame as a soldier needs no defence at our hands. His reputation was made by heroic deeds and at a time when other Generals who had been long tried, had failed, and after the people had come to distrust all our commanders. General Sheridan's deeds are before the world, and the fame he so justly earned was written up by the brave soldiers of his army who served their country "in the front, and we now think the writer of the article alluded to, who states that he is "as familiar with the prosaic back ground of the picture as with the more fanciful and imaginative foreground," will fail to dim the lustre of General Sheridan's fame. It was those who served Gen. McDowell in the "back ground," among the mule wagons, who contributed so much to the disaster at Bull Run. If they had seen the "front" with a musket on their shoulder and not in "imagination," our army would have went "on to Richmond," instead of on to Washington, led by the brave "back ground" warriors. It is no part of our purpose to defend any officer, who neglects any public duty; nor will we fail to urge upon the General the enforcement of every law, and the punishment of every crime. The "military bill" was passed by Congress for the express purpose of reconstructing the rebel States, and so far as we are able to judge, General Sheridan has performed his duty in that respect most faithfully. The Republican party of Louisiana certainly have no cause to complain of any act of his, in the great work of reconstruction. Those who are informed, know very well that General Sheridan is subject to the orders of his superiors, and is it not possible that he would be removed after the 3d of July next, and a more conservative man appointed in his place if he carried out the policy demanded by the Republican writer. When rebels are making "pilgrimages" to Washington, besieging the President for Sheridan's removal, Republicans should sustain him, as in his hands the work of reconstruction will go on fairly. It was well known in Washington last winter that Rossean of Kentucky was appointed a Brig. General, and that he would have been appointed to supercede Gen. Sheridan had impeachment not been prosecuted againt the President.

A thousand crimes have been committed in Louisiana and Texas, since the war ended. Is it possible for the Commanding General to cause the arrest and trial of all these; those who have had any experience with military tribunals during the late war know that it is simply impossible. The work of reconstruction and the preservation of the public peace is the great duty imposed on the Commanding General. And while he is faithful to these, we will give him our cordial support. If it is in his power without endangering the work of reconstruction to cause the arrest of the July rioters, and to secure their just punishment, we certainly think it should be done. Gen. Sheridan is responsible to the country who have idolized him for his past services, and no man knows better than he what they will expect at his hands; but the people know that a President stands between General Sheridan and the rioters of last July. Andrew Johnson espoused their cause in his famous campaign last summer, and he will not permit a hair of their heads to be touched if he can avoid it. As no man has yet been punished for participation in the rebellion, which has filled a three hundred thousand graves, and when England hesitates, and dares not hang a Fenian, we will not condemn a faithful public servant for delaying the execution of a few hundred rioters who are supported by the Chief Magistrate of the Nation. We hope the efforts of John T. Monroe and the writer in the New Orleans Republican to secure the removal of Gen. Sheridan, will fail.

The charge that Gen. Sheridan ran off to Texas because he anticipated a riot needs no notice at our hands, the Republican writer was probably not aware that a few stevedores would fall out about a question of labor, and engage in a small fight. The great state of Texas is under Gen. Sheridan's command, and we claim for him the right to visit any portion of his command whenever his public duties call him without imputing to him cowardice, or fear of riot in his absence.

The article in the Republican can only result in injury to the Republican party.

Grand Procession.

Under the auspices of the Central Executive Committee, the Republicans of New Orleans had a grand torch light procession last wednesday night. The Committee rode in carriages, and the Marshals on horseback. Among the latter, we noticed A. J. Noble, Esq., who was not only the finest looking Marshal in the procession, but with his long white beard, reminded us of the renowned John Brown. Thousands filled up the ranks of this grand turnout, and behaved in an orderly manner. The flags and banners were both numerous and beautiful. The transparencies were artistic; the sentiments thereon were lofty; and their national and personal allusions were exceedingly fine.

Mayor Heath has appointed several colored men on our city police.

The recent effort to consolidate the Methodist Protestant church and the M. E. Church, South, has failed. But another effort will probably be made.

The Sunday-school of the First street M. E. Church, held its anniversary last Wednesday night. The house was densely crowded, and the occasion was one of great interest. The children spoke and sang in a most beautiful manner. Father Green is a happy man to be the pastor of such a flock.

New Orleans, May 25, 1867

Editor N. O. Tribune:

Dear Sir—I see in your issue of May 23d, that resolutions condemnatory of the article published in the New Orleans Advocate, relative to the colored population, were passed at a special meeting of the Third War Club and its subordinate clubs, Permit me to state that the meeting was called for the purpose of making arrangements for the grand procession, and for no other purpose. Mr C. Camp undoubtedly wished to present such resolutions, but was told by the President that the meeting was called for no other purpose, and therefore, no such resolutions were offered by Mr. Camp.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

D. H. White,
Secretary Third Ward Republican Club.

New Orleans, May 25, 1867.

Rev. Dr. Newman:

Respected Sir—I noticed an article in your Advocate of the 18th inst., under the head "Who Shall Rule?"—Which meets the approbation of many Freedman asking the same question. Permit me to say that I am of your opinion to the letter. * * * *

I am no office seeker, but am for the Union White Man that has been a friend of the Freedman. The Association to which I belong is about 7000 strong, and each one has one or two friends.

Respectfully yours,

Mayor Heath's Proclamation Approved.

The following is from the New York Tribune of May 21 :

The disturbances in New Orleans have called forth a proclamation from Mr. Heath, the Mayor, in which he insists on the undoubted right of all citizens complying with the requisites of the law, to conduct their business according to their own pleasure, and to admit to their stores and places of business such persons only as they shall see proper. To propound doctrine like this to people long accustomed to freedom regulated by law would be a work of supererogation; but the case is different when dealing with those who, having never enjoyed any rights themselves have no proper conception of what the rights of others mean. Mayor Heath has done well, then, in giving prominence emphatically to this doctrine, for the benefit of the freedmen of New Orleans, in order to guard them against the evil counselors who are instigating them to deeds of violence. Meantime, Gen. Mower of the Freedmen's Bureau in Louisiana has issued an address to the freedmen, warning them against such counselors, and reminding them that though the United States Government will protect them through the military, they will not be protected in wrong-doing.

Who are Voters.

From the lengthy decision of Attorney General Stanbery, as to who are qualified voters according to the act of Congress, we extract the following:

"I must repeat what has been said before, that to avoid disqualifications two elements must concur—first, holding the designated office, State or Federal, accompanied by an official oath to support the Constitution of the United States; and second, engaging in the rebellion against the United States, or giving aid or comfort to its enemies; both of these must not only concur, but they must concur in the order of time mentioned—first, the office and the oath, afterwards engaging in the rebellion, or giving aid or comfort. A person who has held an office within the meaning of the law, and has taken the official oath, and who has not afterwards participated in the rebellion, may very safely take this oath, and so, too, the person who has fully participated in the rebellion, but has not previous thereto held an office and taken official oath, may with equal safety take this oath."

THE UNITY OF MAN'S ORIGIN.—Dr. Newman preached on Sunday in Wesley chapel, on Liberty street, to a very large congregation of colored people, an able and effective sermon from the text, "And God hath made of one blood all nations of men for dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation."—Acts, Seventeenth chapter and twenty-sixth verse.

Dr. Newman chose his subject from St. Paul's celebrated defence of himself before the Athenian judges on Mars hill, where he attacked the idolatry of the Greeks, and at the same time took occasion to rebuke their traditional theory that the Greeks alone were the chosen people of their gods, and that all the surrounding nations were barbarians. The doctor demonstrated that the human race is so near alike in all essentials of creation, whether physical or moral, in formation as well as in virtues and vices, as to irresistably suggest a common origin. That the arguments in support of this doctrine outweighed the negative, while the theory seemed conclusively to establish it. But when we come to add to the other weight of evidence the positive declarations of inspiration, he who longer doubted must of necessity be an infidel. A beautiful tribute was paid by the preacher to the descendants of Ham in the earliest ages, the founders of Tyre and Sidon, the founders of Egypt, the discoverers of the pillars of Hercules and of the British isles, the founders of religion, commerce, and letters. Cadmus, a descendant of Ham, gave the first alphabet to the ancient world, and from his invention sprang Greek literature, and from thence all the literature of the world. If his hearers descended from Ham and the Phœnicians, then they could boast a highly distinguished origin. His discourse, though lengthy, was listened to with the most profound attention, and elicited the most decided looks of satisfaction from an intelligent audience.—N. O. Republican.

Local and Southern News.

MORTUARY REPORT—Eighty-five deaths occurred in the city last week, about equally divided both as to sex and color. Forty two were under ten years of age. Three of the number died of small-pox.

MAD DOG KILLED.—A dog showing undoubted symptoms of hydrophobia, running through the streets on Sunday, was killed at the corner of Claiborne and Common streets.

GARROTTING—A gentleman named Thomas was garotted a night or two ago on Esplanade street near Rampart, by several ruffians, who seized him from behind, and, after choking him to prevent his crying out, held a vial of chloroform to his nostrils until he became insensible, when they relieved him of a valuable gold watch (a family relic) and of his pocket book containing important papers, and twenty dollars in greenbacks. The villains escaped.

REPORTED LOSS OF THE STEAMER NANNIE. A man who reported himself a deck hand belonging to the steamer Nannie, Captain Whitaker, running across the lake, arrived at the mouth of the new Canal on Sunday morning, 26th inst., and reported that the Nannie was lost during the gale on Saturday evening, 25th inst., and that Capt. Whitaker, the pilot, engineer, three deck hands and four passengers, were lost by the small boat capsizing.

We also learn that there were other disasters during the storm, but have not been able as yet to obtain the particulars.

RELIEF.—The Southern Relief Committee of San Francisco remitted, on the 14th, by telegraph, $16,800 to the New York Commission, for the benefit of the destitute in the Southern States.

PERSONAL.—Rev. A. Beckwith, of Trinity church announced to his congregation on Sunday, greatly to their satisfaction, that he had concluded to decline the high office of bishop of Georgia, to which he was recently elected, and that he would remain in his present position.

ACCIDENTS.—A melancholy accident occurred on Saturday, at the corner of Columbus and Villere streets in the residence of Mr. Jacquet. He was in the kitchen playing with his child, and his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Clementine Jacquet, was talking to a neighbor, when a gust of wind slammed a door, on which was hanging Mr. Jacquet's coat. In the coat there happened to be a revolver, and as the weapon struck the floor, one barrel exploded and the ball passed through the stomach of Mrs. Jacquet, causing her death next day. She was a native of France and but twenty-five years of age. An inquest was held by the coroner, yesterday, and a verdict of accidental death returned.

A boy named Frank Costellion, eight years of age, took dinner to his father, at noon yesterday, who was engaged in discharging the British steamship Fire Queen, at the head of Montegut street, and, while the father was eating, the child moving about, happening to be under a crate of crockery being put out, which fell upon him and crushed him to death. In this case also a coroner's inquest was held and a verdict of accidental death given.

ASSISTANT TREASURER—John S. Walton, we are pleased to learn, has been appointed assistant treasurer of the United States at this city, vice William R. Whitaker. Mr. Walton is and old and well-known citizen of New Orleans, a gentleman of great integrity and financial ability. He was treasurer of this city under military Governor Shepley, and was retained under Governor Hahn's administration, and gave universel satisfaction to our business and tax-paying citizens. His management of our city finances for accuracy, impartiality, and strict attention to business was the most honorable and successful ever known in this city. It gives us sincere pleasure to record the appointment of men of such moral worth as Mr. Walton is universally admitted to possess, to positions of honor and trust under the government.—Republican.

Mr Walton is just the man for the position, so say men of all parties.

We learn that the new steam saw and grist mill, the property of Samuel McCutcheon, Esq., on Wolf river, about four or five miles back of Pass Christian was burned Saturday evening last. The building had just been completed, and cost $25,000. The fire is supposed to be the work of an incendiary.

IMPORTANT DECISIONS.—We give place this morning to the opinion of the supreme court of Louisiana, as prepared by Mr. Justice Taliaferro, in the great case involving the binding force of notes given in consideration of slaves purchased before the operation of the emancipation laws. The decision, it will be seen, is averse to the validity of such notes.

From Texas.

ACQUITTED.—Dennis Manning, for shooting Jno. Henry, a negro, in the back, for stealing on the Central wharf the other night, had an examination yesterday before Justice Seawell and was acquitted of the charge.—Galveston News.

The Lagrange New Era of the 17th says:

We think that on the whole a greater quantity of land is put in cultivation than at this time last year—we were at first of a contrary opinion. As far as we can learn the growing crops look well, and although our weather prognosticators are predicting a drought we are not suffering so far. Both cotton and tobacco have been planted in abundance.

The McKiney Enquirer says:

Immigrants are beginning to arrive here from the States. Within the last week, we have noticed many wagons, loaded with people who have come to live with us and help in the work of building up our country

A negro was committed to our jail for an attempt to commit a rape on a young lady. He failed in his diabolical purpose, through the agency of a younger sister. After arrest he attempted to escape, when he was shot, from the effects of which it is thought he will die. —Tyler Index, 11th.

GALVESTON, May 26.—A dispatch via Brazos, the 21st to Maj. Gen. Griffin, gives the following :

"Have just received official information from Beriozabal and United States Consul in Matamoras, that Queretaro was captured by Liberals on the 15th inst. Maximilian, Mejia and Castillo prisoners.

The Burial Place of Booth.

Gen. L. C. Baker has published a diary in which he details his connection with the "secret service" of the War Department during the war. He makes the following statement in regard to the disposition made of the body of John Wilkes Booth.

In order to establish the identity of the body of the Assassin beyond all question, the Secretary of War directed me to summon a number of witnesses residing in the city of Washington, who had previously known the murderer. Some two years previous to the assassination of the President, Booth had a tumor or carbuncle cut from his neck by a surgeon. On inquiry, I ascertained that Dr. May, a well known and very skillful surgeon, of twenty-five year's practice in Washington had performed the operation. Accordingly, I called on Dr. May, who, before seeing the body, minutely described the exact locality of the tumor, the nature and date of the operation, etc. After being sworn, he pointed to the scar in the neck, which was plainly visible. Five other witnesses were examined, all of whom had known the assassin intimately for years. The various newspaper accounts, referring to the mutilation of Booth's body, are equally absurd. General Barnes, Surgeon General United States Army, was on board the gunboat where the post mortem examination was held with his assistants. Gen. Barnes cut from Booth's neck about two inches of the spinal column through which the ball had passed; this piece of bone, which is now on exhibition in the Government Medical Museum in Washington, is the only relic of the assassin's body above ground, and this is the only mutillation of the remains that ever occurred. Immediately after the conclusion of the examination, the Secretary of War gave orders as to the disposition of the body which had become very offensive, owing to the condition in which it had remained after death: the leg, broken in jumping from the box to the stage, was much discolored and swollen, the blood from the wound having saturated the underclothing. With the assistance of Lieut. L. B. Baker, I took the body from the gunboat direct to the old Penitentiary, adjoining the old arsenal grounds. The building had not been used as a prison for some years previously. The Ordinance Department had filled the ground floor, cells with fixed ammunition—one of the largest of these cells was selected as the burial place of Booth—the ammunition was removed, a large flat stone lifted from its place, and a rude grave dug; the body was dropped in, the grave filled up, the stone replaced, and there rests to this hour all that remained of John Wilkes Booth.

Remarkable Conversion

The following remarkable statement is authorized by D'Aubigne M. de Pressense :

A regiment of French soldiers on their march to the Crimea, halted for some days at Toulon, in the South of France. While there a colporteur came among them. A young soldier, pretending to be much moved by the good man's exhortations, asked for a Bible, which was, of course, given to him. The soldier and his companions roared with laughter, telling the colporteur that it was all a joke ; but the soldier refused to return the book saying, "It would do to light his pipe with." The colporteur replied, "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God!"

Fifteen months afterward the same colporteur stopped for a night at an inn more than three hundred miles from Toulon. The landlady was in great distress, having just lost her son, of whom she spoke in terms of the most tender affection. He conversed with her for a few moments, when she withdrew, but soon returned, bearing a little book, which her deceased son had left to her as his precious legacy.

It was much mutilated, many pages having been torn out; but on the inside of the cover, written in large letters, was the following inscription: "Received at Toulon, on the——, 1855. Despised at first and badly used; but afterward read, believed, and made the instrument of my salvation J. L, fusileer of the fourth company of the—— regiment of the line."

From the condition of the little volume, it was plain that the young soldier had made use of the missing leaves to light his pipe, as he had boasted he should. But, as he had related to his mother, this work of destruction was stopped on the evening before the battle, in which his regiment was to occupy the perilous post of the advance guard. He stated that at this juncture serious thoughts came into his mind, in a very strange manner, and all of a sudden the words of the man whom he had tricked out of the book came to his recollection like a thunder-clap, "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of living God!" "And if I should fall into his hands!" This thought haunted him, he said, without intermission, the whole of the night; and, in consequence, as soon as it became light in the morning, he took from his knapsack the book which appeared to have become his accuser. The verses which he had read in the dim gray light of the morning had been brought home to his heart by the Holy Spirit. In the battle which ensued he was severely wounded. Old things had passed away, and he now realized the truth of the faithful saying, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on Him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life."

After removing from one hospital to another, he was brought back to his home about six weeks before the visit of the colporteur. The mutilated Testament was scarcely ever out of his hand during waking moments. It was the only one he ever possessed; perhaps the only one in his native village. His mouth was full of tender entreaties that his dear mother and friends might embrace Christ and his salvation. To his very last breath he ceased not to exnort them all to accept God's offered mercy in Jesus, and not to run the risk of falling in an unconverted state "into the hands of the living God."

One Grain of Truth.

REGENERATION IS EFFECTED BY THE WORD OF GOD.

Truth, like gold-dust, is precious—worth seeking for, and hard to find; but when found, should be highly esteemed, valiantly defended, and earnestly proclaimed.

What the Bible teaches on the subject of the new birth is simply this: "We are born again not of corruptible seed, but of uncorruptible by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever." 1 Pet. 1-23. The 25th verse, tells us that the "word of God," means the gospel—that is, the blessed message contained in the Bible, and to be found in all its pages with more or less distinctness from Genesis to Revelation.

In James 1-18, we find that God the Father, from whom comes every good and perfect gift, makes use of his own word, here called the word of truth, in effecting the great work of regeneration. Thus through the influence of the truth, understood and applied, God works in the soul.

In 1 Cor., 4-15, St. Paul tells the Corinthians, that their conversion was to be ascribed solely, to the word of God, made known to them by his preaching—saying: "For though ye have ten thousand instructors in Christ, yet have ye not many fathers; for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel." Paul, then, was the spiritual father of the believers among the Corinthians. But in the 1st ch., 14th v. of the same epistle, he says: "I thank God that I baptized none of you save Crispus and Gaius." Strange! He baptised not, and was still a spiritual father. Their regeneration then, as he thus expressly tells them, was not effected by baptism. On comparing the 17th v. of this chapter with the 15th of the 14th ch., it will be clearly seen that the word of God, the preached gospel, was the means whereby that great mercy was conveyed. "For Christ sent him not to baptize, but to preach the gospel," and, through the gospel it was that they were begotten.

In Acts, 18-8, also we are told, that their faith was the effect of hearing the preaching of St. Paul, and that this faith preceded baptism. Surely, regeneration consists in the exercise of repentance and faith.

In Rom., 10-17, we find that faith is produced by hearing the word of God, (not that all who hear believe,) some hear in vain. Again in Acts, 15-7, hearing the gospel and faith are connected as cause and effect; hearing the gospel is thus shown to be the instrumental cause of believing, and that, he that believes has eternal life, is taught in 1 Jo., 5-13, inference—he that believes is born again, for without a new birth no one can be saved.

In John's gospel, 1-12, 13, we see that the privilege of becoming the Sons of God, is confined to those who believe.

If the enjoyment of this privilege depended on baptism, the will of man could not be said to have nothing to do with it, as it might be in the power of man in that case, to prevent the reception of the blessing by withholding baptism.

In 2 Cor., 12-12, Paul says: "Truly, the signs of an apostle were wrought among you;" but as we have already seen, he told them, that he was glad he had baptised none of them. Baptism, then, was not one of the signs of an apostle! Extraordinary, this—if it be indeed the appointed means of regeneration.

Paul says expressly, that he was not sent to baptize. For what was he sent? See Acts 26-15 to 20. In the 18th v., conversion—regeneration—is described; yet Paul was not sent to baptize, but to preach. The inference, then, is very obvious. The preaching of the gospel, is the divinely appointed means of regeneration.

A Rusty Christian

A key unused becomes rusty. A harp unpracticed gets out of tune. A heart which does not draw up daily and hourly its kind emotions, a benevolence which does not seek its opportunities for exercise, a machine which lays by unused, however admirably it may be adapted to its end, however beautifully it may work, and with however little friction—each, all will, by neglect, inattention, want of use, become rusty, dry, hard to start—sometimes impossible without a great deal of work and labor, and use of all such material as will put it in motion. The engine may need the hammer, the file, the chisel, with oil, and sometimes the repeating and working over again or replacing of some part of the machinery, and then it will not work as at first; the rust eats in and sometimes so corrodes as to require another piece to be substituted.

Impatience, or irritability, or indolence, or indifference may say it is not worth the trouble; ignorance may say it cannot be done; despondency may give it over; but patience, forbearance will put it in motion—fit it to its place, get it in tune, draw up the waters of consolation—so on, and effect the work.

The pump gets dry from want of use, and however much water may be in the well, however excellent the pump, the stiffness and dryness must be attended to; to moisten it, until it keeps up the water.

A man who has a bible and neglects to read it, a throne of grace and seldom comes to it; a family altar, and only Sabbath evening gets his family around it—who knows the way of life, but just keeps so near that it may be hoped for him he is in it; yet is so in all his movements that you stand in doubt; is like a man who can write, yet seldom takes hold of a pen.

The want of use, application, perseverance in anything which we should follow, makes us stiff in our movements, dry, lifeles, rusty—the very motion makes a gritting, shrieking—but sometimes the rust eats it so that the whole thing is useless.

A rusty Christian—he may be on the outward appearance from circumtances—for want of the means of grace, society of Christians, and, when brought under proper treatment, may be startled—but the safe, sure, and comfortable way is to continue on the way and use the means—constancy in prayer, studying the Bible, keeping up household worship, brivate prayer, with devotion to every Christian duty. This may seem laborious, confining, but it will go easy, and the burden will be light. It is only a rusty Christian that can't be moved to Gospel duty; while it is a burden to him—it is in great danger of destorying him.

Are you in this condition? Get the file, the hammer, the oil. Rest not until you find it easy to take hold of the Bible and read—until you find the throne of grace the place where you must go, to which you will go with a ready mind and will; the work and service of God—that in which you find your heart and hand ever ready.

When you go into the family of a professed Christian, and the family look surprised at your asking for a blessing, or the head of the house apologizes for not thinking to ask you until you have hinted at it—or when, on your suggesting family worship, the members are so scattered that they cannot be found, or come in and look as if they did not know what was going to be done, it is a tolerably safe inference that they are not in the habit of these things. They are certainly very rusty.

If I were to adopt a name after the days of Oliver Cromwell and his noble Christian ministers, I would sign myself—Standard.

Sleep.

BY M. ANNESLEY.

"The rest of the laboring man is sweet.

God puts his seal upon us every night, and shuts up all our powers of mind and body, and there we lie, all unconscious in silence and peace. True, we sometimes find ourselves in dreamland, but we never move a foot from our bed. So comfortably we travel without expense, or risque of life, or limb, or enjoy the society of the noted and the good, and never feel abashed by our own deficiency.

The seal of God is upon us nevertheless, for we are the happy prisoners of sleep.

Those dreary visions of our sleep are rarely the continuation of the activities of the day, but we occupy altogether a different field, so that we have a change of scene, which sometimes sheds a halo of imaginative pleasure around the common duties of the next day. Then again when his mercy sees our need of deep sleep, the unbroken seal he lays upon every power, and we sleep, and sleep, and know nothing at all—we take no journey, see no company, but are shut up in the confidence of quiet rest. Such a sweet untroubled sleep, we like to see a dear invalid enjoy, and we think of the words of Jesus, "If he sleep he shall do well." Or when a friend in great trouble is permitted to sleep, and forget all his sorrows, even dream that the lost in sin is found again in purity, or that the separation was not reality, but only a think so.

Any way, sleep is a great blessi g; in sickness, or health, joy or sorrow, we need its precious renewing virtue upon the body, and the mind; and we should gratefully lift our hearts to God as he shuts our eyes, composes our thoughts, snatches away our cares, eases our weary limbs, and lays over us the mantle of his love in quietness and rest.—"So He giveth his beloved sleep."

"A holy thing from heaven;
A gracious dewy cloud,
A covering mantle given,
The weary to enshroud."

MARRIED.

By the Rev. Eugene Royal, Parish of St. Charles, La., Mr. Robert Butler of Baltimore to Altay Mathew of North Carolina, May 19th 1867,

By the same, May 13th, 1867, John Parham. of Virginia, to Miss Polly Ann Malcome, Ala.

Also by the same, May 15th, William T Jones to Miss Harriet Parker, both of this city

CIRCULAR.

The Officers of the First Louisiana Baptist Association, beg leave to inform the citizens of the State, that they have recently organized a Bureau of Industry, or Intelligence Office, in this city to be known as the

LOUISIANA WORKMEN'S BUREAU;

the same having been established by the wish, and in accordance with the instructions of Major General Howard, of F. B.

By means of this Institution they hope to be able to furnish a sufficient supply of

and every description of skilled and unskilled labor throughout the State.

The Louisiana Workmen's Bureau will bring to bear a great influence in promoting the rigid observances of contracts, on the part of employers by due payment of the stipulated compensation. Some evil disposed persons may, perhaps, attempt to discourage the laborers, because they were not consulted, or because they are not in the lead; but all such persons shall be reported at once to the Freedmen's Bureau,

Among other important matters, the Association, well knowing the favorable influence of religion upon industry, will endeavor to send a preacher of the Gospel and other influential godly men into every neighborhood.

Workmen, remember the BEE HIVE, take pattern by its inhabitants; so let us unite and place Louisiana high among the the States for cultivating Virtue, Morality and Religion.

Further information may be obtained by addressing Rev. Dr. S. W. Rogers, Corresponding Secretary for both Associations, corner of Canal and Basin Streets, New Orleans, who holds such recommendations from both white and colored, in the city as well as in the country, as render him the proper person to fill those offices, and to carry out the spirit of industry.

Application may also be made to either of the following offices:

Rev. George W. Steptoe, Rev. H. Davis, Branch Wilkinson, 2d Baptist Church.
Rev. Thomas Miles, R Stoveall, H. Elliott, 5th Baptist Church.
Rev. William Moody, William Langen, Henry Washington, 6th Baptist Church.
Rev. S. W. Rogers, John Howard, Henry Miller 7th Baptist Church.

MEDICAL.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,

127 CARONDELET STREET,

Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic, and Acute

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient, that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years, in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient, if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet Street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city ☞ Consultation free—stamps not "forgotten." Feb31

It is the Solemn Verdict of the Medical Profession, verified by popular experience, that in cases of Consumption, scrofula, and bronchitis, a pure medicine al Cod Liver Oil, like that manufactured by John C. Baker & Co., No. 718 Market street, Philpdelphia, for the last thirteen years, affords the only hope of cure. MASON & HAMLIN,

MANUFACTURERS OF

CABINET ORGANS,

ALSO

PORTABLE ORGANS,

ADAPTED TO SECULAR AND SACRED MUSIC, FOR DRAWING-ROOMS, CHURCHES, SUNDAY AND DAY SCHOOLS, LODGES, &C., &C.

Uniting to a considerable extent the capacity of the Piano Forte with that of the Pipe-Organ, and costing much less than either.

They occupy little space; are elegant as furniture; not liable to get out of order, and are securely boxed, so that they can be sent anywhere by ordinary freight routes, all ready for use.

Forty Styles, plain or elegant cases; one to twelve stops; Prices, $75, $90, $110, $125, $130, $1 0, $150, $160, $170, $200, $225, $250, $300, $450, $540, $550, $600, and upwards.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs were introduced four years since, and are a great improvement upon the Melodeon, Harmonium, and other reed organs, greatly excelling them especially in the excellent quality and variety of their tones; in power and quickness of action, and capacity for expression.

THEIR SUCCESS HAS BEEN ENTIRELY BEYOND PRECEDENT,

and proves how greatly such an instrument was needed. Again and again the manufacturers have been compelled to double their manufacturing facilities, until they have been increased six-fold. From the most eminent of the musical profession, the most distinguished pianists, organists, composers, and musical directors, the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs have received an amount and degree of commendation never before bestowed upon any similar musical instrument. More than two hundred and fifty of the most eminent musicians in the country have given written testimonials to the value of the improvements contained in them, and that they excel all other instruments of this class.

FIFTY-TWO GOLD OR SILVER MEDALS, or other highest Premiums have been awarded to Mason & Hamlin for the important improvements effected by them, and for the

SUPERIORITY OF THEIR INSTRUMENTS TO ALL OTHERS.

Constantly exhibiting their instruments in competition with others, they have been awarded the highest premium in every instance, but three or four.

For churches, sunday schools, etc., the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs are the instruments long wanted, of the very best quality, abundant power, not too expensive, nor liable to get out of order.

For private use, in drawing-rooms, &c., they are not less desirable, and are finding a place in the musical families of the principal cities.

They are adapted to a wider range of music than the piano, being fitted for all sacred music and for much secular music, while their quickness of action is such that the most lively, rapid music can be played on them. Then their cost is greatly less, as well as their liability to get out of order.

BRIEF EXTRACTS FROM OPINIONS OF DISTINGUISHED MUSICIANS.

I should think they would become very much sought after as parlor instruments as well as for public performance.—Sigismond Thalberg, the world-renowned Pianist. Sure to find its way into every household of taste and refinement which can possibly afford its moderate expenses. Far superior to everything of its class I have seen.—L. M. Gottschalk, the eminent Pianist. Such pure musical tones, promptness and smoothness of action and fine variety of effect, I have not found in any other instrument of the class.—S. B. Mills, the eminent Pianist. Really so excellent that there can hardly be much difference of opinion respecting them.—William Mason, the eminent Pianist. The best instrument of its class with which I am acquainted, and worthy a place in every drawing room. Harry Sanderson, the eminent Pianist. In every respect far superior to everything I have ever seen of the kind, whether in Europe or America.—Geo. Washbourne Morgan the eminent organist, N. Y. I can only reiterate what so many in the musical profession have said, that for equality, promptness and exquisite tone, they are unequalled.—John H. Wilcox, the eminent Organist, Boston. Surpasses everything in this line I have ever seen, whether French or American.—Jon Zundel, the eminent Organist, N. Y. The best reed instruments in the world are made in the United States, and your Cabinet Organs are greatly superior, and by far the best made here.—Max Maretzer, Musical Conductor, N. Y. Far surpasses all other similar instruments which have come under my observation.—Carl Zerhan, Musical Conductor, Boston. Exceeds in my estimation every other instrument of this general class. Thos. Hastings. I can recommend them with confidence.—Lowell Mason. As soon as the people become acquainted with the superior merits of your instruments, your only trouble will be to supply the demand.—Wm. B. Bradbury. I have never seen anything of the kind which interested me so much.—Geo. F. Root. Exciting much interest in musical circles, and already becoming the fashion. N. Y. Home Journal. The highest accomplishment of industry in the department. This is not only our opinion, but the unanimous verdict of the organists.—Boston Advertiser. A glorious instrument for the temple service, so readily secured as to be available for any congregation, and effective and beautiful as to meet the desires of the most refined and fastidious.—N. Y. Observer.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs must not be confounded with other reed instruments, from which they vary essentially, their superiority veing largely derived from PATENTED IMPROVEMENTS, which cannot be employed by other makers. Among them are,

The AUTOMATIC BELLOWS SWELL, patented, a most important invention, and greatly the best swell ever devised being much more effective and easily used than any other. The variety and beauty of effect of which it is capable, can not be appreciated except from actual use. The many attempts to imitate or find a substitute for this swell, prove its value. None of them, however, approach it in excellence and simplicity.

IMPROVED SELF-ADJUSTING VALVES patented, secure much more perfect action, durability, and freedom from liability to get out of order.

WOOD'S OCTAVE COUPLET patented, in effect nearly doubles the power of the instrument in which it is used.

NOISELESS SAFETY VALVES patented, prevent the hissing sound often heard.

The IMPROVED COMBINATION REGISTER patented, gives of great facility in drawing stops.

"Searching for God."

BY LU BILLINGS SPALDING

O sky, with thy bosom beguilded with light,
O sky, with thy bosom bejeweled at night;
While cradling the stars with glittering beams,
O, tell me, if ever thy Maker thou'st seen?

O sun! with thy zone of dazzling fire,
High sweeping thy way through the sweet, blue air;
O tell me, I pray, on thy wide circling round,
If ever the Maker of all you have found?

And tell me, O storm! on thy black wings driven,
While raging supreme from earth to heaven;
Pray tell me, if ever, wild, sobbing and wet,
The great and the wonderful God, thou hast met?

O moon! like a silver globe circled with jet,
Supreme in thy reign 'mid timid stars set;
O, hast thou encountered, while shining on high,
That power that for mortals did suffer and die?

I stood in the wild wood, the green boughs above,
On bramble and leaflet the birds sang of love;
The wild flowers in clusters of rose and of snow,
Bejeweled the moses that glistened below.

When softly and sweetly, a little voice said,
Twas the voice of a violet drooping its head:
"I am meek, I am lowly, and small is my part,
But the secret you're seeking I hold in my heart."

"Go look on the earth; the ocean, the sky;
Go look on the least of his works, such as I;
He lives in the grass-blade, breaths on the air,
And look where you may, He is there! He is there."

I turned from the spot, more wise from that hour,
And pausing, I gazed on the sweet, little flower,
As bowing so meekly towards the green sod,
Yet held in its petals the infinite God.

Reconstruction in Mississippi as it appeared to a Yankee on the Wing.

MY DEAR DR. NEWMAN—

As you know, I am on the wing, on a rapid tour through the great State of Mississippi. And so miscellaneous is my business, that very frequently I have to cross, and re-cross my own pathway, and march and counter-march, along the same line of travel. And hence, my eyes and ears open, I can but learn much that "is going on" among the "common people," who of old, heard the Savior gladly, as well as among those who claim to be, although self-constituted, the great Sanhedrim, who would be considered the great lights and leaders of the people in politics and religion

And the impartial looker on can but come to the conclusion, that now, as in the days of secession, the few babbling, leading politicians, are the instruments of all the troubles and fatal blunders of the State. These first led the people into secession and rebellion; and now, finding themselves among the proscribed or the disfranchised, for their sins, they are throwing obstacles in the way of reconstruction, under the late acts of Congress. They are loud in their declamations about "honor, chivalry, self-respect," and what these all require of the Southern people. If the people could only see it as it is, they would see that all this talk about their "honor" and "chivalry," being at stake, is a reflection upon them; and that these disfranchised, but would-be leaders, insinuate that there are not brains, and political wisdom, enough among the people to reconstruct and rule the State, and fill the offices, without them. Whereas, the people might well retort, and say, "we tried you once as our leaders, rulers and office holders, and we cant see that you did much for us. But, on the contrary, you led us over the precipice, into the gulf of ruin; involved us in war and bloodshed, which has left our State comparatively a desolation. Why, then, should we consider your services as essentially necessary in our reconstruction." Why not say, as pilots at the helm, you wrecked the ship of State once, and now it is nothing but right that we should change pilots, chivalry or no chivalry, and see if the plain honest, thoughtfnl yeomanry of the conutry, cant repair the old ship and bring her into port under the old flag. We will take you all on board, give you shelter and protection, but cannot at present trust you at the wheel. We tried you, you changed the flag, and wrecked the vessel, and now, our own safety requires that we turn you off as pilots, until you learn the channel at least.

But among the masses of the people, there are two classes. One class, who are described by St. Paul, as "rude fellows of the baser sort," who think to magnify their own importance, by cursing the "yankees," never mentioning the word "yankee," without an adjective, offensive to ears polite. And thrown among these people, as I frequently am, they lead me to infer, that in their hearts, they say, of all in whose views flows the blood of the Puritans, let them be "Anathema, Maran-atha." This class think to acquire position, by echoing, and re-echoing all that is said by the old, defunct Sanhedrim, about "honor, chivalry, and self-respect"; and the superior claims of the true Southern bloods.

The other class, however, of the great masses, are all right, and are honestly devoted to the work of reconstruction. Not merely submitting to the law of Congress, but doing so willingly. Their hearts are in it. They intend to register as voters, and encourage the freedmen to do so—vote for a convention, and seek to man the State with loyal office holders, and select men to represent them in Congress, who can take the "test oath," and will hail with gladness, the day when their State shall assume its proper place in the Union, among its sister States, under the starry flag of an indisoluble Federal Union.

Such, in my deliberate judgment, is the true state of things, in Mississippi.

By the way the New Orleans Advocate is winning golden opinions in all this country, especially of late. True, its principal circulation, so far as I can observe, is among the freedmen. Yet, one of your late numbers, is being handed around, quite extensively, among the white people. I have seen one or two numbers that give evidence of having been extensively handled—and all for one article—an editorial under the head of "Who Shall Rule." It seems to me, you have, by this article, gained laurels very suddenly, and with but little labor No end to the enconiums, of which you are the recipient. And many who heretofore have regarded you and your paper, as dangerously radical, for this latitude, now say, we are willing to follow the lead of any man, who fathers the article "Who Shall Rule?" And the very men who once cursed your paper, now are ready to encourage its circulation; and strange to say, it is popular with the freedmen, also, as they regard it as teaching the true doctrine.

Now, as you have won such fame by writing it, may I uot hope to share that fame with you, by an unqualified endorsement of the article, and asking you to follow it up, with "a few more of the same sort."

So far as I can observe, your churches among the freedmen in Mississippi, are more than prosperous, and are fast overcoming the prejudices that formerly existed. The Sunday schools connected with them, are working wonders, and are laying the foundations deep and strong, for vigorous, self-sustaining churches, in a very few years. So, be of goood cheer. "Sow thy seed in the morning, and in the evening withhold not thy hand," resting well assured that a glorious harvest awaits you

In haste, more anum,
Gulielmus.

Gerritt Smith and Horace Greely.

Mr. Editor—Having been born in the South, it was a part of my education to hate the names of the two distinguished men placed at the head of this article. I was told they were Abolitionists, but what this awful portentous word implied, was a great mystery to my youthful imagination; but I believed they were among the very worst of men, and they became associated in my mind with the images of such men as Murel and Phelps, the great land pirates. I concluded they were scarcely men of human form divine, but were the living incarnations of some fiendish monsters, some Cyclops who with glaring eye and gigantic proportions, occasionally sallied forth from some sea girded lair to flay and destroy poor innocent wayfaring Southerners.

There was no more terrifying word here in our vocabulary than abolitionist It was considered the ne plus ultra of all meanness; the living impersonation of gigantic knavry. We were taught to believe that these foul people were continually engaged in stiring up sedition among us, inciting the slaves to insurrection and violence, and that the inauguration of John Brown's raid, was their continual and most pleasing employment. I remember well how pleased I was when I ascertained that the main object of the Abolitionists was merely the extermination of slavery. As I grew older, I began to watch the course of these two distinguished men, and I accidentally fell upon some of their addresses, and I was more profoundly surprised to learn that so far from their being creatures like the tiger and hyena, thirsting for human blood, that they were men in reality, courteous and intelligent gentlemen. Popular prejudice was nevertheless very high against them, and the South would indeed at any time have been a most in. salubrious climate for them to dwell in. Not long after the termination of hostilities, I met with a long address from the Hon. Gerritt Smith, and to my surprise it was filled entirely with messages of Christian love and moderation. Instead of confiscation, banishment and imprisonment, being recommended towards the late rebels, his heart was full of Christian sympathy and forgiveness. And the man whom we had so long defamed, unchristianized, and anathematized, was found rising above all mere personal resentments, and was industriously pouring in oil and wine into our wounds and recommending us to the clemency of the government.

Not long since, a great State prisoner, one whom the South had elevated and honored, one who stood as her representative man at the judgment bar of his country, was brought into the United States Court, at Richmond. Every eye throughout this broad land, was turned towards that court, and expectant throngs of eager listeners hung breathless with expectation upon the ipse dixit of Judge Underwood The blood in the Southern heart almost ceased its circulation, and was stilled along its passage, in waiting for a mandamus of that court.

Here were arrayed on one side, the stern officers of justice, and on the other, the great prisoner against whom we were told the most unwonted legal barbarities would be exercised. When lo! this so-called infuriated Jeffries, this bloody minded Haynau of the press South, mildly informs the listening multitude that bail will be accepted, and fixes the amount of the bond at the identical figure paid by the government for the arrest of the prisoner. When the sureties were called for, who was among the very first to come to the relief of the prisoner? Horace Greely, the man whom the South had defamed and villified, the man on whom the entire vocabulary of insulting epithets had been bestowed, was the first man to place his worthy and honored name upon the list of sureties. He had left his home and business in a far distant city and had come like Gerritt Smith, to lend his great influence in obtaining the release of him who had ben elevated to power upon the principle of undying hatred to the persons and opinions of these two distinguished men. All honor and praise to the names of those mysterious men, who raised their souls above all personal feeling, and prompted by the noble impulses of religion alone, came to bind up the broken hearted and to set the prisoner free. Since the day when he of Calvary exclaimed "Father forgive them they know not what they do," was ever remorseless and inexorable hate repaid by a deed of so much love?

But among those of the sureties stands another shining name that should not be passed unnoticed in this connection. It is that of John Minor Botts, a gentleman of the "Old Dominion." He is one of a class whom prorebel presses are never tired of abusing. A "Southern Loyalist." Time was when it was an honor to be loyal, and when no man felt it a disgrace to turn his eyes to his country's banner with feelings of delight.

But "Loyalty" has much degenerated, and a Southern man who will not tear down and trample under foot the proud banner of his fathers', is termed a "low flung scoundrel," too ignobly born to be of service to his country. It is reported that when the name of Mr. Botts was read out from the list of sureties that it was hissed by some of the rebel factionists. This is by no means surprising. It is indeed a little remarkable they did not manifest their appreciation of the kindness by hissing also at the names of Gerritt Smith and Horace Greely.

LOYALIST.

Rev. Bishop Campbell.

While the N. O. Republican is lauding Rev. Bishop Campbell and publishing his speeches in pamphlet form, we give to our readers the other side of the Bishop, from an editorial in the Vicksburg Republican of May 25 :

We were treated on last Thursday evening at the Court House in this city, to what was to us, a novel spectacle, nothing less than an occular view of a colored man, the Rt. Rev. J. P. Campbell a black Bishop in the rostrum, retailing to a mixed audience, all the cut and dried rebel hash which we have been accustomed to receive as "self-evident truths" from the "so-called" of this section; besides a variety of other matter which he had committed to memory. The Reverend speaker was introduced to the assembled audience by the "Rev". T. W. Stringer, a colored drone of rebel proclivities, who has been working for some time past with the loyal men of this city, and making occasional visits to the country, to assist the rebels in breaking down a cause, which liberated his countrymen, and which he, while among his friends in Vicksburg professes to love. The fact is, he is neither loyal or rebel, but a mongrel cross between the two, and has heretofore duped his congregation by wearing the livery of Heaven to serve the devil.

Mr. Campbell opened his discourse by a complimentary notice of himself, and a secondary allusion to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which he is Head Centre, and then in a labored talk of an hour's duration, he attempted to show that he was not egotistical but simply giving the "devil his due."

The next hour was consumed in declaiming a speech made some three weeks ago, by Beverly Nash, a colored copperhead in the Carolinas, and which is supposed to have been written by Gen. Wade Hampton. This portion of Mr. Campbell's "address" was received with great satisfaction by the friends of Gen. Wade Hampton, and the "lost cause" who probably recognized the authorship. His allusions to the "meddlesome Yankees who come down here from the granite hills of New Hampshire and the barren wastes of Massachusetts, and poke their noses in other people's affairs" was heartily applauded by the unreconstructed, who evidently regarded it as a blow on New England, from which she would never recover. At this point the Reverend gentleman observed that his remarks about the Northern men, were not received with that approbation and hearty assent, which he expected from his colored friends, and with admirable tact, he flew the rebel, Beverly Nash track, and by way of variety, gave his hearers a specimen of the style of the oratory indulged in by missionary ministers. who wish to raise the religious enthusiasm of their congregation to the donating point. We have read this portion of his "discourse" many years ago, but cannot at this time refer our readers to the work. It can be found in the published sermons of some of our missionaries.

The third and last hour indulged in by this Reverend plagiarist, was taken up in reciting a speech delivered before we were born, by the Hon. J. Story, on the destiny of America. This was thought to be original by a few, and he was frequently applauded; particularly that portion when the great orator alluded to Greece and Rome.

The admirable manner in which the Bishop dove-tailed the peroration of Judge Story's into the last paragraph of the missionary sermon, elicited the warmest encomiums from his appreciative audience. and we think deservedly too, for he is certainly entitled to great credit, for his ingenious application of other people's productions. The physical as well as mental exertions necessary to get off this last piece in effective style, proved too much for Mr. Campbell's weak constitution, and he quietly subsided. Mr. Stringer, the apostate, then arose, without being asked or called for, and after a few unintelligible words, he too, flickered out and took his seat. It was a noticeable fact, that on the conclusion of the last performance, that the colored people had dispersed quietly to their homes, the faithful to the "lost cause," all pressed forward to the spot where the Rev. Divine stood, and after shaking hands with him in a brotherly and affectionate manner, they facetiously congratulated him on his "speech," and themselves on the fact that they had at last found a colored man unscrupulous enough to espouse their cause. This farce ended, the Bishop and his friends adjourned in excellent spirits, each evidently well pleased with the other. We were glad to see that our loyal friends listened to the speech throughout without manifesting any signs of disapproval, as we believe that it is best to give a respectful hearing to every speaker, in order that we may ascertain his views; and that we may know our real enemies, and knowing them, endeavor to shun their evil counsels.

KEEN.—An exchange says an old negro woman was at the postoffice late Saturday afternoon. Two or three little boys asked her if she knew the Yankee soldiers were coming. Old woman looked at them a moment, then said: "Dat's of a heap more intrest to you dan to me."

Intelligence from our Mission Rooms.

OUR MISSION TREASURY.

When the General Missionary Committee met in November, 1865, they were surprised and delighted to find a surplus in the treasury of about four hundred and fifty thousand dollars, ($450,000,) arising from the great liberality of the Church and the wise and careful administration of the affairs of the Missionary Society. Coincident with this condition of the treasury, the committee found its field of labor suddenly and very greatly enlarged by the opening of the whole South in consequence of the cessation of the war. The accumulation of the large surplus and the opening of the South seemed to the committee to be a providential coincidence which called upon the Missionary Society to give quick and earnest heed to what was manifestly the will of God, namely, that we should reoccupy the South, and restore to the white and black populations irrespectively the ministry and pastoral care of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as they existed there many years ago. The committee could not doubt but that it was the wish of the Church, that the Missionary Society should extend its work into the South. The consequence was that the appropriations made in November, 1865, for the support of the work in 1866, were one million of dollars. Upon the announcement of this large appropriation there came back from the Church to the Mission Rooms loud and earnest notes of approbation. It was declared to be a grand step forward. One third of this million was for missons in the South. The committee expected to realize about seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($750,000) from the Church in 1866, and to take the remainder of the million out of the surplus on hand. But the contributions of the Church in 1866 did not exceed six hundred and fifty thousand dollars, ($650,000.) The balance, to meet the appropriations for 1866, was supplied from the surplus in hand.

When the General Committee met in November, 1866, they found our foreign missions, and our ordinary missions at home, in good condition, and well in hand ; and that the missions in the South had greatly expanded, and were generally organized into conferences and districts. Upon a careful survey of our missionary work the committee judged it to be necessary to appropriate the sum of one million and thirty thousand dollars ($1,030,000) for carrying on our missions in 1867. Of this amount there was only about $200,000 in the treasury, leaving $850,000 to be raised in 1867. This amount was apportioned among the several conferences according to their supposed ability; and the presiding elders apportioned it to the circuits and stations according to their supposed ability severally.

With these arrangements for carrying on our vast missionary work we entered upon 1867 with high hope, and unwavering confidence in the ability and the devotion of the Church. We did not forget that the Missionary Society had, necessarily, been held in abeyance during 1866 and the first part of 1867, chiefly by the Centenary movement, by the Freedmen's Aid Society of our Church, and by the coming into the its proper place and relations to the Church, of the Church Extension Society, and by some temporary causes, such as the Irish fund. All these pressed upon the attention of the Church at the same time. But we judged that the pressure of these forces would have passed away with the commencement of 1867, and that the Missionary Society would have resumed its former activity. Judge our surprise and alarm when we began to realize, by the returns of missionary collections from the spring conferences, that the missionary coatributions for this year were falling twenty per cent below the contributions of the same conferences last year; when, in order to save us from very serious embarrassment by a heavy debt at the close of this year, they should have advanced thirty per cent. over last year. If the conferences yet to be held this year shall fall off in the same ratio as those already held, the deficit this year, as compared with the contributions last year, will be at least $125,000. Deduct this sum from $650,000, contributed last year, and we have as the probable aggregate contributions this year, $525,000; to this add the balance in hand at the beginning of the year, $200,000, and we have the sum of $725,000 toward meeting the drafts authorized to be drawn for our home and foreign work in 1867, amounting to $1,030,000. Should drafts to this amount be drawn, then the debt of the treasury at the close of the year would be $305,000. But it is hoped and believed that a considerable amount of the very large appropriations can be saved and left undrawn; and if the Churches yet to take up their collections this year shall advance upon their contributions last year, and this advance be added to the undrawn appropriations, and the same deducted from the estimated deficiency of $305,000, then we would have the real debt of the treasury at the close of the year. It is not possible to say what the actual debt of the treasury will be at the close of the year; but one thing is certain, and that is, that it will be too great to be carried long.

It is natural to inquire, What is advisable to be done? Our answer is:

1. The administration must observe the strictest economy, and curtail at every point where it is possible without positive injury to our missionary work now in hand at home and abroad.

2. The Missionary Society must be restored to its pre-eminence among the religous and benevolent organizations of the Church.

3. The Sunday-Schools must be organized into active Juvenile Missionary Societies.

If the bishops, the board, the pastors, the Sunday-schools, and the people will accept these conditions of relief and safety, our glorious missionary work can go on triumphantly. But if all do not take warning in time, the inevitable consequences will be a heavy debt on our treasury, and an abandonment of some of our missionary work. For this, we believe, neither preachers nor people are prepared, and they only require the due notice of danger to our great missionary work to impel them to prompt and liberal action toward off such results.

BABIES.—Sometime ago there was a dancing party given up northwest; most of the ladies present had little babies, whose noisy perversity required too much attention to permit the mothers to enjoy the dance. A number of gallant young men volunteered to watch the young ones while the parents indulged in a "break down." No sooner had the mothers left the babies in charge of the mischievous devils, than they stripped the infants, changed their clothing, giving the apparel of one to another. The dance over, it was time to go home, and the mothers hurriedly took each a baby in the dress of her own, and started, some to their homes ten or fifteen miles off, and were far on their way before daylight. But the day following there was a tremendous row in the settlement; mothers discovered that a single night had changed the sex of babies—observation disclosed the physical phenomenon, and then commenced some of the tallest pedestrianism; living miles apart, it required two days to unmix the babies, and as many months to restore the women to their natural sweet dispositions. To this day it is unsafe for baby mixers to venture into the territory.

Mrs. Mary Clemmer Ames was recently allowed to peep into the Government money vaults, Washington City, she says:

They look as light and airy as china-closets. Sealed packages line their shelves to the ceiling, and full of money. I held a small package in my hand of crisp stamped paper, tied with common twine, and received the information very coolly when the keeper of these coffers told me that the string tied a hundred millions of dollars. It did'nt seem much! On the shelf of a cosy closet are piled some little white bags, which have done a deal of traveling. They hold the gold captured from Jeff. Davis's fleeing trains taken from the banks of Richmond. The banks of Richmond are very anxious to get their money back, and have sent numerous messengers after it. But there is a small obstacle, in the shape of a fact, between them and the object of their desire. This gold was rifled from the mint in New Orleans; and before it belonged to the banks of Richmond it belonged to the Treasury of the United States.

CIRCULATION OF THE BIBLE.—The British and Foreign Bible Society circulated 2,383,380 copies of the Bible and portions of the Bible during last year. From the commencement of the Society 52,000,000 copies have been distributed and 40,000,000 other copies have been distributed by kindred societies which have sprung from it, or have been aided by it. These have been printed in 170 languages, and in 213 different versions

Major General Sheridan.

That the Commanding General of the Fifth Military District, has the delegated power to remove from office any municipal or State officer in his department, whom he may regard as an impediment to the faithful and efficient execution of the Military Bill, must be apparent to every candid reader of the law of Congress under which he acts. It will be remembered, that this delegated power was made the chief objection to the bill by President Johnson, when said bill was before him for his signature. Indeed, we do not hesitate to assert, that the proper execution of that law demands just so much power. In the present state of society in the South, and in view of the duties and responsibilities imposed upon a District Commander, less authority would be tantamount to weakness and failure. As American citizens, we may deprecate the necessity to clothe any individual with such vast powers, yet the justification is found in the abnormal condition of society created by the late rebellion.

It is however, to the credit of General Sheridan, that he has exercised his all but absolute power, with so much discretion. In this regard, he has not gone so far as Sickles, or Pope, or Schofield. It was the expressed wish of some and the expectation of many, that in a single order, he would remove every office-holder in Louisiana, but unwilling to make so general and so sudden a change, he wisely determined to reserve his power for emergencies as they might arise. He has been pleased to impose upon himself the rule, not to remove any man from office without cause, and it cannot be doubted that in every instance of removal he has acted upon this rule.

A careful review of Gen. Sheridan's administration, since his appointment as District Commander, will show that he has done what he had a right to do, and that in every instance he has acted in the interest of loyalty and in accordance with the spirit and letter of the reconstruction bill, Convinced that the removal of Monroe, Herron and Abel was essential to the efficient discharge of his great duty, he removed them at the proper time for which he has received the thanks of the loyal people of this city. And the men whom he has appointed to fill the vacant offices, are universally recognized as Republicans of the most pronounced type. It is a singular fact, that the New Orleans Republican and the New Orleans Tribune, together with their friends, have denounced the general because he did not make other removals. No district commander has been so violently and maliciously assailed for not exercising his delegated power as Gen. Sheridan. It is the extremest folly therefore to condemn him for that which even the Republicans declare he has not done. If censurable at all, we judge him censurable for not exercising his authority to a larger degree.

The removal of Governor Wells, has opened the vials of wrath upon the General's head. Rumors come of the "immediate removal of Sheridan and the reinstatement of Messrs. Monroe, Herron, Abel and Wells." But it is a singular fact, that the same persons who now clamor for the General's removal because he deposed Gov. Wells, signed a memorial to the President to remove him because he had not removed the chief of police and others; in other words, for exercising the power in one case which he has not seen fit to exercise in another. Where is the consistency? We may regret the semblance of personal feeling in Sheridan's order removing Mr. Wells, and also, the publication of the General's reply to Mr Stanton as to the levee commissioners in connection with the order of removal. It had been better had the two been published seperately, as their joint publication has created a false impression. The difficulty is not between them as men but as officers—it is purely official—not personal. Nor was the Governor's removal a sudden, passionate decision, but a determination reached months ago. Just as the removal of some other men is pre-determined. The causes justifying Mr. Well's removal, are sufficient in General Sheridan's mind and we are bound as good citizens to accept the same as a fact. The impartiality displayed in the removals which have been made, is the best assurance the nation can have that the Commanding General of this district is not a political partizan. He removed Monroe—a wicked, unwashed rebel, and he removed Wells—a loyal governor. Sheridan was convinced that these gentlemen impeded reconstruction and they were removed. He is the judge. We are content. We must stand by the gallant officer who knows no party, no faction, but who performs his duty according to his best judgment.

The sensation rumors that the President will remove Sheridan is a reflection on Mr. Johnson's good sense. The President knows too well, that to disgrace an officer who has no less distinguished himself as a wise, impartial administrator of the laws of Congress, than as a soldier on so many fields of battle, will awaken a public indignation throughout the nation, which Mr. Johnson himself cannot withstand. Sheridan's removal would be Johnson's impeachment. Let us therefore be heedless of such rumors. Under General Sheridan the work of reconstruction is advancing rapidly and magnificently in Louisiana, and time will justify the wisdom of his administration.

The New Street Commissioner.

The good people of New Orleans will not fail to appreciate the recent change in the Street Commissioner's department of this city. Every effort had been made, both by Gen. Sheridan and his Hon. the Mayor to induce Mr. Belanger, the late incumbent, to place the streets of New Orleans in a clean and healthy condition; but these repeated efforts failed to accomplish the desired results. There was no lack of men or money on the part of Mr. Belanger, and he stands before this community, guilty of having criminally neglected to discharge a duty which he owed to the health and lives of our citizens. Our larger thoroughfares and more magnificent streets, were neglected to such a degree, that they were covered with mud when it rained, and filled with dust in clear weather. But the neglect was most apparent in the narrow streets and in the more densely populated portions of the town. Here the filth was allowed to accumulate in heaps, breeding disease and death to the inhabitants residing there. Our sewers and drains stank in the public nostrils, and their deadly contents were offensive to the sight and smell of our citizens. No attention was paid to the condition of the yards of tenant's houses, each one of which was filthy enough to surcharge the atmosphere with a sickening malaria. In a climate like this, and in a city with such water facilties, our street-gutters should constantly flow with clean water, especially in the hot season; but this wise precaution was also neglected.

It was under these circumstances that General Sheridan interfered and removed the criminally neglegent incumbent, and the community thank him for his interposition in behalf of the health of the city. Nor are they less grateful to him fot the appointment of Mr. William Baker. This gentleman is in every way competent for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office. Intelligent, energetic, he has the will and power to rescue our city from the evils with which it was threatened. A gentleman of more than ordinary executive ability, and from his long residence here, familiar with the wants of the hour, he will not disappoint the expectations which his appointment has excited. If necessary, we hope Mr. Baker will employ five hundred men at once, and every appliance necessary for the efficient discharge of the important trust committed to him. After Mr. Baker has given the city a general cleaning, we hope he will cause our main streets to be swept and washed at night, which will greatly relieve our citizens and add to their comfort.

Progress.

In the creation of the world, God had an eye tothe future development of those vast resources, with which it abounds either hidden in its bosom or spread broad cast on its surface. The mind of man was created in a state of infancy, perfect in kind, but not in proficiency. It must obey the laws of progress and apply itself to its appropriate task of studying the laws, purposes and relative utility of all created things. By so doing, it enlarges its own capacity, and and in its daily march, brings to its aid new arts and sciences, by which important wants are supplied, and many comforts and luxuries secured. The world is beautified, and God honored, and his purposes carried out by human progress.

The same economy obtains in the moral government of God in regard to our fallen race. A single hint was given to our first parents concerning a Redeemer, which sufficed however to give suitable direction to their primitive devotions; for where little was given, little was required. This break of day, on the dark night of lost humanity gradually unfolded through the patriarchal and Mosaical dispensations until the Sun of righteousness arose in the divinity and doctrines of Jesus Christ, to dispense his genial rays to improving humanity and to develop in man a growth of higher moral and religious attainments.

Political government is properly a part of Gods' moral government. Nationalities are ordained by him, he puteth down one, and seteth up another He is the sole origin of the true principles of all government, and anything contrary thereto is false and injurious.

Man by experience must learn to apply these principles in the government of society throughout its various relations so that the individual and aggregate interest of the community, will be best conserved.

This is called the science of government.

This science is progressive and must continue to be, so long as man learns by experience or precept.

A legislative enactment may be right at one period of the world and wrong at another. Such was the case under the immediate Divine administration. Such as a plurality of wives, the stoning of disobedient children, and much more of the political ecclesiastical economy which was abrogated by an advanced christian civilization.

But notwithstanding the ample evidence, the world has had of the progress of science we find many people that would bring science to a halt, and declare further development an unjust innovation Such is the case now in the science of modern civil-government, and is often dignified with the name of conservatism. When that term applied to government means equal justice to all, whether as individual or corporate bodies, we accept it, as an important element in the body politic; but when it is interpreted to mean an adherance to laws, or customs, on the plea of antiquity. or based on prejudice, or self-interest, it is equally dangerous and unjust. These may be sufficient for a Chinaman to satisfy himself of the superiority of a Chinese civilization; but never ought to be used by an American when reasoning on American politics, and yet it has been, and is still used to sustain theories and practices, that ought long since to have been buried with the past. The advocates of modern slavery, proved that there had been a time when it was right; this is the main argument by which the Mormons prove the divine right to a plurality of wives. The same logic would re-establish the whole Mosaic ritual.

Such is the logic used by a large class of Modern politicians. Though slavery is dead in our now free country, many ex-slaveholders cling to its memory with an affectionate tenacity, worthy of a better object, "their self-interest is wounded in the loss of their so-called property, and they refuse to be comforted they are deaf to the divine precept "do unto others as you would have them unto you." There is but one argument that will prove to their satisfaction that Slavery is a curse and the Freedom of all mankind a blessing; and that is a good round price for the lost objects of their financial love, and present future political power.

The war for slavery is ended, but the battle for power still rages, the so-called stand-still conservatives, are exerting all their power to check the waves of progressive truth, on which the republican ship of state, so proudly rides to a higher destiny.

But vain will be the effort, if Republicans are true to their principles. The contest is a glorious one; it is freedom against intolerance, mercy against modern cruelty. The so-called reconstruction party regard equal rights as a great innovation in Southern politics, and so it is. They raise both hands in holy horror and cry out radicalism, and it is even so, blessed radicalism. The egotistic intolerant Jew did the same thing, when the Saviour of the world opened the eyes of the blind, made the lame leap for joy, instructed the ignorant, bound up the broken hearted, and unfolded a progressive Christianity.

So was Paganism stricken with astonishment, at the innovations proposed by the humble fishermen of Galilee. Both Jew and Gentile cried out radicalism. They were radical, for Christianity is radical in its operation and requirements. God requires a complete renouncement of every sin; there can be no successful compromise. No sin can enter heaven, where the battle must be fought and the victory won. In the regeneration of the sinner the change is radical.

It means an uprooting of evil of any kind. A complete transformation from wrong to right. If the principles of right Government are Divine, radical changes are proper in politics when from bad to good.

Slavery has been torn up by its roots; let political inequality and a great portion of our present school system together with all other evils share the same fate.

Our New Governor.

Mr. Thomas J. Durant having declined, the Hon. Benj. F. Flanders has been appointed provisional Governor of Louisiana. This is a magnificent appointment.

We are happy to announce that the charge of embezzlement against Judge Warmoth in Texas, has been dismissed by the Court.

It is said that the principal debtors of the First National Bank, which so recently failed, are:

Gen. Beauregard, by note $40,000, and overdrafts amounting to $72,000; General Dick Taylor, $37,500; General Harry Hays, $20,000; General F. J. Herron, United States Marshal, directly and indirectly, over $200,000; Colonel J. O. Nixon, of the New Orleans Crescent $80,000; General Wade Hampton, Cuthbert Bullit, J. B. Walton & Deslonde, and others. These have generally indorsed for each other. Over $200,000 of the funds of the United States court were in this bank.

Should not rebels have faith in our National Banks?

The Common Council of New Orleans, appropriated $,3000, for our Orphan's Home. Thanks to the Council.

Dr. Pemberton's Ink.—Dr. Pemberton, at No. 158 Poydras street, New Orleans proposes to furnish the South with a superior quality of writing ink. The article can be had in small or large bottles and all orders will be promptly attended to. We have tried this ink and because of its superior quality, we shall use no other so long as we can get this. We invite our friends, and especially the merchants and our private and public schools, to give the doctor a call or send in their orders, No. 158 Poydras street.

Married, at the home of the bride, on May 21st, by Bishop Clarke, J. W. Wiley, D. D., of Mt. Washington, Hamilton county, editor of the Ladies' Repository, to Miss Ann E. Seegar, eldest and only daughter of Dr. J. Seegar, of Cincinnati.

The Olive Branch Tendered.—For several weeks past the St. Louis Christian Advocate, the organ of the church South. in Missouri, has been lavish of harsh words against the M. E. Church. In response to these, Dr. Crary of the Central, has felt compelled to denounce the conduct of the Southern officials holding them up to the inspection and condemnation of the Christian public. In last week's Central, however an editorial paragraph contains the following peace proposition:

We again offer the olive branch to our Southern friends. We would be glad to see a meeting of ministers and laymen in this city to talk over, and pray over our differences. We invite Rev. Dr. M'Anally to call at our office. He was here before we were, and courtesy, would require that he should make the first call. The war ought to be over. We propose now to the St. Louis Advocate that it shall cease to publish, editorially, anything against the Methodist Episcopal Church, its bishops and ministers, and we promise in return to maintain silence, while both parties shall work to do good everywhere. Will it accept of this offer? or will it charge us again with "whining."

The Queen of Belgium proposes to have a crown for the first time, and the jeweler is making it of forty pearls, forty large brilliants and 5,000 small ones, all set in gold, to resemble a coronal of flames, and to weigh less than half a pound.

From Mandeville.

Friday, May 24th, we left New Orleans for this place to attend the second quarterly meeting for the Mandeville circuit. Leaving the cars we took passage, with twenty others, on the nice little steamer Ella May. It was raining hard, a high wind prevailed, and the lake was rough. Our little bark rode the waves gracefully as any sea-foul, and gave us a very practicle illustration of the "ups and downs" of life on lake Pontchartrain. Before we reached Mandeville the cabin of the Ella presented in miniature a vivid scene in "life on the ocean wave" during a storm. There were to be seen all varieties of "expressive countenance"—long, languid, pale, thoughtful, restless, rosy, rigid, rueful, imploring, &c. There were sundry groanings in spirit, also, some of them more vigorous than evengelical. And Neptune must have been pleased with the spirit of some of the voyagers, for they paid him tribute like loyal subjects,

Others there were who cared for none of these things, but enjoyed the rude swaying of the boat as gleefully as did ever a child its swing, and we think they laughed just a little at the calamities of their more nervous and qualmish fellow-passengers. We arrived at Mandeville safely at 3 P. M.

Saturday morning at 11 o'clock, we preached. The little house of worship dedicated at our last visit had been enlarged nearly one-half, and yet was well filled. At noon we held a quarterly conference. The pastor's report showed the work to be prosperous, there being an increase of 23 members, and the congregation more than doubled. At 3 P. M., we preached again, and was to have preached at night also, but a hurricane arose which continued after the hour for meeting, and the people could not assemble. We had prayer meeting at a private house.

Sunday morning we attended sunrise prayer meeting; at 9 o'clock the Sunday school; at 11 o'clock preached and administered baptism; at 3 P. M., preached and administered Lord's Supper, and preached again at night, when 19 persons came to the altar for prayers, and five joined the church. A large booth had been erected for the accommodation of the crowds expected on Sabbath, but the huricane carried it away, and the storm of Saturday night continuing throught part of Sunday, hundreds were kept from coming, and we were obliged to keep to the horse which was far too small to accommodate the people at the P. M. and night services. None came from Madisonville, Covington or Bayou LaCombe, and but few from the Brick Yard. But for the storms there would have been an immence concourse of people. Quarterly meeting is a new institution in these ends of the earth. and excites much curiosity among the people; some of whom have been told by their "best friends" that it was a dangerous "political organization," and warned to keep away from it—the very thing to make them attend.

For years past the freedmen in this and the adjacent region have been left to themselves, their only religious instructors being self-styled "Shepherds," "Shepherdesses," totally ignorant men, and women, mostly of the Baptist persuasion, who, without any proper organization or authority, have been preaching, baptizing, and marrying the people, and attending the funerals, and have thus acquired great influence over them These "Shepherds" have hitherto stoutly withstood our work, have taught the people that baptism was a soul-saving ordinance—that to go under the water was to make sure of heaven, no matter how they lived afterward; that nothing but immersion was baptism; that no one but Baptists have any right to immerse. And in some instances in which I have immersed people, members of our church, these "Shepherds" have claimed them by virtue of their immersion. But the eyes of the people are being opened, and these "blind guides" are losing their influence. I obtained eleven subscribers to the N. O. Advocate, which is equal to sending out eleven missionaries to scatter the true light. Each paper will have many readers, that is many who will hear it read.

At Quarterly conference we licensed Israel Jones as a local preacher. He is 67 years old, read and writes remarkably well, and will be a power for good among the people. He recently came here from Brashear City, and will assist brother Levi Johnson, the preacher in charge.

Yesterday morning, (Monday,) there floated ashore here, the body of a murdered white man. He had been both shot and stabbed in a shocking manner No one could identify him and he was buried without recognition. It is supposed he had been killed on some vessel crossing the lake and his body thrown overboard.

The lake was so rough yesterday that no boat could land here, and we have been obliged to spend another day in Mandeville. Last night I preached again, and eight persons joined the church—making in all, thirteen accessions for this quarterly meeting.

Great damage was done on the lake by the gale on Saturday night. One steamer, (Marine) was totally wrecked with the loss of nine lives among whom was the Captain, M. Whitaker, and his brother. The extent of the damage on the water is not yet known. On land, fences, trees, and houses were blown down. though we have not yet heard of any lives lost thereby. To-day, if the boat comes, we return to the city, grateful to God for His providential care, and for the prosperity He gives the work.

Opelousas District.

RELIGIOUS COMFORT—HOLINESS OUR POWER—CITY INFLUENCE.

In the country, information had reached me, of the timely visit, made to New Orleans by those dear friends of Jesus, Dr. and Mrs Palmer; and its influence with precious memories of the N. Y. Rivington Street meetings, gave me much comfort and increase of faith. Thus may the wayfarers, from time to time, gather heavenly manna, while toiling through the wilderness. I had only fifty-six hours to spend in the city; they were busy hours, but of more than ordinary value; for now the spirit of Holiness seemed to shed a perfume abroad, among the disciples of the Savior, as of old "in the house of Simon." A very interesting meeting at Judge Howels, was to me a time of refreshing. Young converts told of the joys of salvation and older christians of the sweetness of perfect love. God is preparing the church for her great work in this land, and nothing can give us victory over the enemies of Jesus, but the old fashioned methodism of our Fathers, purity of hearts and life must be our motto. Lord revive thy work! Let our city churches take the lead in this matter, and the whole cenference will follow. The influence of a great city is always powerful both for good and evil, and Opelousas District will have reason to bless God, for the Holiness meetings held in New Orleans.

COLORED SCHOOL—SKIFF RIDE—WOODLAWN—OFFICIAL BOARD.

A most interesting feature of our Donaldsonville work, is the large day school in our new church. Brother Kennedy and the friends there, have labored hard to get it into operation, and now 137 children are in attendance, under two young colored men, besides a night school for adults; amongst the scholars are many whose poverty, prevents any charge being made for their tuition. I have been unable to obtain any aid for this School, but the young teachers, with scanty support, toil on faithfully. Our preacher and his wife had gone on to the Quarterly meeting; and with some members of the Conference, I prepared to follow, but how? No conveyance was at hand. The brethren obtained a skiff from a friend, and thus we glided rapidly and comfortably down the Lafourche. The Bayou was high, current swift, and before dark we reached Napoleonville and made arrangements for the meeting. The same evening I attended a meeting of the official board at Woodlawn. These brethren are well organized, and conduct their church business in a very creditable manner, every thing is done decently and in order. They have six classes, one local preacher, three stewards, eighty five members. They are earnest, reliable people. One of the members is somewhat engaged in the liquor traffic, but his brethren are faithfully and kindly laboring with him, and we hope soon to see this church in all respects a model.

DONALDSONVILLE QUARTERLY CONFERENCE—CIRCUIT REPORTS FOR SECOND QUARTER, 1867.

The love feast was held on Saturday afternoon, in the old Napoleonville school house, we had good attendance. It was a novel scene, and was greatly enjoyed. Many years ago the Methodists held such meetings here, but never did the "Love that worketh no ill to his neighbor" form the feast. The old meeting house has crumbled piece by piece, until no remnant remains, so may the old spirit of caste and oppression pass into eternal oblivion! The Conference meeting was held at 4 o'clock, nine members were present. Twenty six absent, distance, bad roads and scarcity of conveyance kept the brethren from conference, They are in most cases, poor farm laborers and can seldom leave their work. Four preachers and one exhorter were present, six members were present, six members were reported to a committee for examination of complaints, while others showed considerable improvement. This circuit has eight local preachers, all doing good service, one has been 60 years preaching. Six appointments were reported. Donaldsonville, Turnois, Ashland, Napoleon, Woodlawn, St. James, and 450 members, 11 conversions, 11 children baptized, 2 adults, five sunday schools, seven teachers, 178 children, 1 day school, 137 scholars, 2 deaths, 43 Advocates taken, 42 sermons by the Pastor, 1 orphan sent to the asylum, 27 marriages solemnized. Woodlawn has paid $170 50 for 3 acres of land, and expenses for a church and cemetery. Donaldsonville reports progress in finishing the church, Brother Isaac Hayward at Kenners is doing good service and the whole circuit is prosperous.

SABBATH SERVICES—NAPOLEONVILLE LOOKING UP—SLEEPY FERRYMAN—STORM AND FLOOD.

Our Sunday school meeting was excellent. The children were happy and showed quite an aptness in learning the Scripture lessons and hymns. 40 scholars are reported, but a much larger number should be gathered as it is the only Sunday school in Napoleonville. At 11 o'clock the house was crowded for the preaching. In the afternoon the Lord's supper was administered to 70 communicants, we had a congregation of about 200. Several porsons were taken into full membership, eight came forward for prayers and joined the class. At night brother Kennedy preached with much effect. This meeting has done much good, and greatly encouraged our people. They now have plans on foot for a lot and church, which it is hoped will be successful. With difficulty the sleepy ferryman was induced to put us over the Bayou. It was late dark, rainy, but after some coaxing and threatening we were put across, and a hard ride in the rain brought us to the the hospitable dwelling of brother Johnson. Next day the storm increased and the roads were almost impassable, but engagements made it necessary to travel. I owe many thanks to the kind brethren at Woodlawn, who would not let me be at any expense, and sent me on horseback to the cars; it was a hard ride, through the storm and mud at a gallop for sixteen miles. The people of Lafourche have a sad prospect; the Bayou is bank-full, and the water coming in upon them behind, on both sides.

6. Many complaints have been made by every class of society in this city of the danger anticipated from yellow fever and cholera, on account of the uncleanly condition of the streets, the major general commanding, in company with the medical director of this military district, made a thorough inspection of the streets on the 29th ultimo, with the following results:

The main streets of the city were found in a fair condition of cleanliness, but the back streets—the thickly settled portion of the city were found with an atmosphere poisonous and appaling, from neglect on part of the street commissioner to perform his duty; and efforts having been made heretofore by repeated communications from these headquarters to the city officials to remedy this evil without avail, the present street commissioner, A. Belanger, is hereby removed from office, and Mr. William Baker appointed in his place.

His honor the mayor is hereby directed to compel the people to keep their yards and premises in a cleanly condition, by the enforcement of the city ordinance through the instrumentality of the police. By command of Major Gen. P. H. SHERIDAN.

GEO. L. HARTSUFF,
Assistant Adjutant Generel.

GEN. SHERIDANS'S REPLY.

[Telegram.]

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH MILITARY DISTRICT,
New Orleans, La., June 3, 1867.

The Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

Sir—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your telegram of this date in reference to the levee commissioners in this State. The following were my reasons for abolishing the two former boards, although I intended that my order should be sufficiently explanatory:

Previous to the adjournment of the legislature last winter, it passed an act continuing the old levee board in office, so that the ($4,000,000) four millions of dollars in bonds appropriated by the legislature might be disbursed by a board of rebel antecedents. After its adjournment the governor of the State appointed a board of his own in violation of this act, and made the acknowledgment to me in person that his object was to dispurse this money in the interest of his own party, by securing for it the vote of the employees at the time of election.

The board continued in office by the legislature refused to turn over to the governor's board, and each side appealed to me to sustain it, which I would not do.

The question must then have gone to the courts, which, according to the governor's judgment, when he was appealing to me to be sustained, would require one year for decision.

Meantime the State was overflowed; the levee boards tied up by political chicanery, and nothing done to relieve the poor people now fed by the charity of the government and charitable associations in the North.

To obviate this trouble, and to secure to the overflowed districts of the State the immediate relief which the honest disbursement of the ($4,000,000) four millions would give, my order dissolving both boards was issued.

I say now, unequivocally, that Governor Wells is a political trickster and a dishonest man. I have seen him myself when I first came to this command, turn out all the Union men who had supported the government, and put in their stead rebel soldiers who had not yet doffed their gray uniform.

I have seen him again during the July riot, of 1866, skulk away where I could not find him to give him a guard, instead of coming out as a manly representative of the State and joining those who were preserving the peace I have watched him since, and his conduct as been as sinnuous as the mark left in the dust by the movement of a snake.

I say again that he is dishonest, and that dishonesty is more than must be expected of me.

Letter from General Longstreet.

HE UNITES WITH THE REPUBLICAN PARTY IN THE GREAT WORK OF RECONSTRUCTION—IS IN FAVOR OF NEGRO SUFFRAGE NORTH AND SOUTH—THE PRINCIPLES OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY DIED WITH THE SURRENDER OF GENERAL LEE—REPUBLICAN PRINCIPLES THE LAW OF THE LAND.

NEW ORLEANS, La., June 3, 1867.

J. M. G. Parker, Esq:

My dear Sir—Your esteemed favor of the 15th ult, was duly receieved. I was much pleased to have the opportunity to hear Senator Wilson, and was agreeably surprised to meet such fairness and frankness in a politician whom I have been taught to believe uncompromisingly opposod to the white people of the Sonth.

I have maturely considered your suggestion to "wisely unite in efforts to restore Louisiana to her former position in the Union, through the party now in power." My letter of the 6th of April, to which you refer, clearly indicates a desire for practical reconstruction and reconciliation. Practical men can surely distinguish between practical reconstruction and reconstruction as an abstract question. I will endeavor, however, with renewed energy, to meet your wishes in the matter. The serious difficulty that I apprehend is the want of that wisdom which is necessary for the great work. I shall be happy to work in any harness that promises relief to our distressed people and harmony to the nation. It matters not whether I bear the mantle of Mr. Davis or the mantle of Mr. Sumner, so that I may help to bring the glory of "peace and good-will toward men."

I shall set out by assuming a proposition, that I hold to be self-evident, viz: The highest of human laws is the law that is established by appeal to arms.

The great principles that divided political parties prior to the war were thoroughly discussed by our wisest statemen. When argument was exhausted resort was had to compromise. When compromise was unavailing, discussion was renewed, and expedients were sought, but none could be found to suit the emergency. Appeal was finally made to the sword, to determine which of the claims was the true construction of constitutional law. The sword has decided in favor of the North, and what they claimed as principles cease to be principles, and are become law. It is therefore our duty to abandon ideas that are obsolete and conform to the requirements of law.

The military bill, and amendments, are peace offerings. We should accept them as such, and place ourselves upon them as the starting point from which to meet future political issues as they arise.

Like other Southern men, I naturally sought alliance with the Democratc party, merely because it was opposed to the Republican party. But as far as I can judge, there is nothing trangible about it, except the issues that were staked upon the war and there lost. Finding nothing to take hold of except prejudice, which cannot be worked into good for any one, it is proper and right that I should seek some standpoint from which good may be done.

If I appreciate the principles of the Democratic party, its prominent features oppose the enfranchisement of the colored man, and deny the right to legislate upon the subject of suffrage, except by the States, individually. These two features have a tendency to exclude Southern men from that party; for the colored man is already enfranchised here, and we cannot seek alliance with a party that would restrict his rights. The exclusive right of the States to legislate upon suffrage will make the enfranchisement of the blacks, whether for better or for worse, a fixture amongst us. It appears, therefore, that those who cry loudest against this new order of things as a public calamity are those whose principles would fix it upon us without a remedy. Hence it becomes us to insist that suffrage should be extended in all of the States, and fully tested. The people of the North should adopt what they have forced upon us; and if it be proved to be a mistake, they should remove it by the remedy under Republican principles of uniform laws upon suffrage.

If every man in the country will meet the crisis with a proper appeeciation of our condition, and come fairly to his responsibilities, on to-morrow the sun will smile upon a happy people, our fields will again begin to yield their increase, our railroads and rivers will teem with abundant commerce, our towns and cities will resound with the tumult of trade, and we shall be invigorated by the blessings of Almighty God.

I am, sir, very respectfullly,
Your most obedient servant,
JAMES LONGSTREET.

Foreign News.

LONDON, June 2.—A dispatch from Wolf's news agency reports that Prussia and Russia have come to an understanding in regard to the eastern question. The policy of each hereafter will be identical.

PARIS, June 2.—Extraordinary preparations are made by the government and municipal authorities for the reception of expected royal visitors to the exposition.

NIGHT.—The Czar of Russia has arrived. He will visit London.

GALVESTON, June 3.—Registration commenced here to-day. About 25 registered so far, principally negroes. Orders are expected from Gen. Griffin to morrow to regulate the system.

We have additional news from Mexico, via Galveston, in a letter without date from Queretaro. It confirms the reported surrender of Maximilian and his army but mentions the execution of only one chief of the Imperial forces—Maximo Campos, who was reported to have been shot on the 16th. Maximilian had recovered from a severe illness, and was expected to arrive in San Luis Potosi, en route for Austria, through the United States.

MOBILE, June 4.—The following order was read by Mayor Horton to the boards of Aldermen and common council, this morning at 11 o'clock:

HEADQUARTERS THIRD MILITARY DISTRICT,
Atlanta. May 31.

Special order No. 36.

In pursuance of the recommendation of Major General Swayne, commanding the district of Alabama, touching the recent disturbances in Mobile for reasons therein stated the offices of city tax collector, city treasurer, the boards of Aldermen and common council of the city of Mobile are hereby vacated by the removal of the present incumbents.

The new appointees were inaugurated immediately after the promulgation of this order.

RALEIGH, N C., June 5.—Chief Justice Chase arrived this evening, and was welcomed at the depot by a large concourse of white and colored citizens. On his arrival at the hotel, the mayor extented him a cordial greeting, with appropriate remarks, to which Chase responded, thanking him for the hospitality, and saying he was glad the time had come when all stood equal in the light of the law, irrespective of color or their previous condition. His speech was received with enthusiastic applause.

RALEIGH, N. C., June 4.—The ceremonies at the city cemetery commenced at noon in connection with the dedication of the monument erected to the father of the president. It is a simple shaft of red limestone ten feet high, with an ornamental cap. The inscription is: "In memory of Jacob Johnson, an honest man, beloved and respected by all who knew him. Born—. Died January 1812, from a disease contracted by an over effort in saving the life of his friend."

The president and party accompanied by Governor Worth, General Sickles and others, having reached the cemetery, in carriages, were conducted to a platform near the monument. A very large number of spectators were present, all apparently deeply interested in the ceremonies. After preliminary religious exercises, Hon. D. L. Swain, LL. D., president of the State university, delivered an address in which he traced the history of Raleigh, and in this connection, alluded to Jacob Johnson, who, by a deed of noble daring, saved the lives, from drowning of Henderson and Cullum at the ultimate cost of his own, passing away eventually, a martyr to humanity.

The orator, among other things, alluded to the fact that three natives of the State—Jackson, Polk, and Johnson, have passed from obscurity and poverty in North Carolina to comparative opulence and eminence in Tenessee, and thence to the highest point of honor in the Union and the world.

NUMBER XIV.

It was early evening time when we all clustered around the hearth-stone to again listen to Mama's story. Every word of the previous evening's narrative had left its impression on our mind and we could hardly wait to have it continued; yet some of us could not exactly understand how Mama could be a friend to that Methodist sister who gave her such an uncouth lecture on wearing just two little articles of jewelry. One of our number declared positively that she would never have stepped into her house again, but Mama, now gave us such a sweet little dissertation on Charity that we were almost inclined ourselves to love the "old thing" as we had called her.

"If I remember correctly" said Mama, I was telling you that we were boarding in the old dutch city of S——but as Autumn approached, we concluded to go to house-keeping, and so we removed to a town away off on the mountains. We were happy in this our first home, although another family occupied a part of the house, making our apartments quite limited. In December of that year, Miriam was born, shedding a new ray of sunlight into our little home.

These were years of spiritual prosperity and many, all over this extensive circuit were added to the Church, and not until the hour of parting came, did we realized how closely christian ties had linked our hearts to this people.

There was some care and no little anxiety connected with packing up and moving to our next circuit, but during our sojourn, I think there was nothing very special that I now recall, every thing having passed off pleasantly.—From Montgomery Circuit, we removed to old Saratoga Circuit, which extended down, I think to Waterford, and reaching nearly up to Canada. We lived nearly in the centre of the charge, and in this home, dear Edith was born. This second "well spring of pleasure," of course added to my cares, and yet I was able to attend the prayer meetings and visit among the sick and dying during the long interval of your Pa's absence, on his extensive circuit. I remember once in his absence, being sent for in the night in great haste to visit Squire W— who was a leading man in the community, but far from being a christian. The messenger stated, that his master was in great distress, and bade him tell the minister to come immediately, but if he was not at home, to ask the minister's wife to come without delay. A few weeks previous to this, your father had awakened me from sleep to relate what he had just dreamed. Here Mama turned to Papa and said "please tell daughters this dream yourself," Papa replied, It will give me pleasure to grant your request for it is as fresh in my mind as if I had dreamed it last night. It appeared to me I was standing on the bank of a river fishing, yet had caught nothing. For many mortal hours I lingered until weary and worn. I became discouraged and said to myself, there is no use of my remaining here, I will leave. I was drawing my line reluctantly from the water, when a voice, I had heard before saying, "Woe is me if I preach not the Gospel." The voice said, try once more, drop the line a little to the right, and linger a moment longer, I did so, and at once brought up an immense fish, but it was so heavy I could not draw it to shore, and turned to see if there was any one to assist me, when to my joy, I saw your mother coming towards me and with her help we drew it to land. I then had only to drop the line to catch a great many fish, but none quite as large as the first one. My joy was unbounded at my success, so that I could not refrain from shouting out aloud, which awoke me. I felt very sure that dream was an omen for good and thus I awoke your ma, to relate it to her, saying, with the gospel hook we shall catch men; we will labor on and not be discouraged, for God will surely crown our work with success this year. Now your ma, will give you the sequel."

Agnes said, "do hasten mama, and tell us if you dared to go alone and in the night to visit that man?" "Why yes, my child, I went without the least fear, leaving my two little ones asleep in care of a faithful girl. On reaching the house, his wife who was a good woman, assured me that it was his mind and not his body as the servant had supposed which caused this great distress. Not unlike a little child he begged us to pray for him and for hours we did not cease to besiege the throne of grace in his behalf, while he continued to groan and weep; and just as daylight was breaking in the East, it became morning to his soul. The next day your father came and when I related to him the event of the previous night, he clapped his hands in holy ecstacy saying—"the set time has come to favor Zion; and I imagine Squire W— represents the big fish in my dream. God has seen to fit to send home the truth of my preaching to his heart, and while I was absent you have pointed him to the Lamb of God, to whom be all the glory." That evening there was meeting held in his house and the people flocked in by hundreds so that we adjourned to the Church near by, and the result was one of those powerful revivals that seemed to revolutionize the whole community. Many were the tears shed by both Pastor and people when the hour of parting came as the two years ended.

Our next charge was Ashgrove, Cambridge, Circuit, which has since so beautifully embellished the pages in the history of American Methodism. On arriving there, tired and hungry, we learned there was no Parsonage, but after a brief delay, a good brother let us occupy one small room until, as he said, we could do better. Ten years previous to this, brother A—, an Irishman by birth, and a Christian nobleman, had left at his death to the Methodist society a legacy of five acres of land for a Parsonage; but as yet no one had undertaken the task of building thereon. To his adopted son was committed the trust until accepted by the society. The membership was not large and their means limited, still they were of a ready mind to work, and your father succeeded in getting several men to volunteer to go with him into the forest, where they cut the timber for the frame of the house. He then took up subscriptions to purchase the materials to build, and it was not long before a small but convenient house was ready to occupy. And as I now reflect, it appears like magic, the rapidity with which the work was completed.

And now, daughters, if you choose, you can exercise your skill in mental picture making. Imagine this little cottage, as the sun reflected on the new boards for the thought never came to our mind to adorn it with paint, this would at that time have been the height of extravagance; not a tree or shrub surrounded it, the grounds all uncultivated; but look into the interior; there is one front room with a recess and small bed room attached, and in the rear is another room, used as a living room, kitchen, &c—then imagine your father and mother, little Miriam and Edith, after having gathered up all their earthly effects from the one little room they had occupied, enter this little cottage which seems like a palace to them. Parsonages were not furnished in those days as now, but this Father in Israel had not only given the land, but had left in his will that the large handirons used in every fire-place in olden times, together with some other pieces of heavy furniture should be furnished for the Parsonage when built. And last, but by no means least where there are two little children; a cow was also mentioned in the will. A small barn was added, and good brother A—, the adopted son, instead of sending us such a cow as he saw fit, told your father to go into his yard where there were no less than a dozen and select the best. This was exceedingly generous. With all these comforts added to a new house, it may not be too much to say, I was as happy as a queen.

I think the picture dear mama complete, uttered many voices; "but how is it," said Florence, "that you always make us look on the bright side of it—was there no dark side to the picture in your experience?" O, yes, but I no not care to recall the shaddows, I like the sunshine better. I am just reminded of an incident that may not appear so bright to you. While living in this very house, your father being absent, myself and the children were alone, except a girl, nearly a young lady, a relative of mine. There was no house near us. The church stood on an elevation not far distant. It had been dark awhile and everything was quiet within, when we became satisfied that some one was trying to get into the house through one of the cellar windows. The girl and children were very much frightened, while I at least tried to assume an air of bravery, and stepped to one of the windows and looking down saw plainly a man apparently trying to get into the cellar. I spoke in a loud voice, saying, who is there and what do you want? If you wish to come in why don't you come at the door? not supposing he would do so however, but he did and rattled away for a while, but finding it bolted, returned again to the cellar window, thinking no doubt, I was not very consistant, to ask him why he did not come at the door and then bolt him out. We continued to hear him around the house until the clock struck for midnight. We then began to think that he would not get in, and I said to the girl, we will now read a chapter in the Bible and pray, and may be, he will leave and cease to annoy us. I handed her the Bible and said, read from the first place you open at, and then I will pray; she opened to the ninety-first psalm and read it, which could not fail to inspire us with trust in God, for you remember it commences thus, "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shaddow of the Almighty." We then knelt in prayer, and when we arose we no longer feared, but retired as calmly as if no one had annoyed us, for we heard no more of him.

In the morning when the neighbors heard of it, some thought it must have been a crazy man prowling around—others that some one had heard that your father had been collecting money for the church and had come to rob the house—but whoever it was or whatever his intent, our heavenly Father had given his angels charge over us to keep us.

EVANGELINE.

"And he was transfigured before Them."

MARK: 9. 2.

Before whom? Before Peter, James and John, who could, after that, say: "We beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." "We were eye-witnesses of his majesty." By the real Christian—one whose heart has been touched by the grace of God, and whose mind has been enlightened by the spirit of God—this glory is seen, and he realizes that, "unto them which believe, Christ is precious." In his heart, "the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, shines," dissipating the darkness by which it was previously filled. When the glory, the grace, the truth, the majesty, the preciousness of Christ, thus, shines within, Christ is transfigured before us, and the whole soul responds: "My beloved is mine, and I am his!" "He is chiefest among ten thousand!" "He is altogether lovely." Then is felt jealousy for the honor of his name, a desire to promote his glory, and to find our loved ones and to say to them: "We have found Him of whom Moses, in the law, and the prophets did write"—"Come and see' 'his glory,' "come and taste" of his goodness, of his grace; come and partake of our joy, our peace, our hope.

This world's joys we have tasted, and declare them "husks." This world's cup we have sipped, and have thirsted again. In vain do you seek for happiness in that which has not power to satisfy your immortal souls; in vain do you cleave to that which cannot fill the infinite capacity with which God has endowed you. Come with us, and enjoy the light of God's countenance, and a peace that passeth understanding, joys that cannot fade, hopes that will not disappoint. Come with us, and partake of the bread of life, of the living waters, of the wine ever new. Come with us and see the glory of Christ; and then you will say, with David: "Thou hast put gladness in my heart more than in the time that their corn and their wine increased," May Christ be now transfigured before you, so that when he appears again in his glory, you also may appear with him.

MEDICAL.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,

127 CARONDELET STREET,

Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of dis ease, Chronic, and Acute

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient, that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years, in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient, if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the inepident cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet Street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city

MASON & HAMLIN,

MANUFACTURERS OF

CABINET ORGANS,

ALSO

PORTABLE ORGANS,

ADAPTED TO SECULAR AND SACRED MUSIC, FOR DRAWING-ROOMS, CHURCHES, SUNDAY AND DAY SCHOOLS, LODGES, &C., &C.

Uniting to a considerable extent the capacity of the Piano-Forte with that of the Pipe-Organ, and costing much less than either.

They occupy little space; are elegant as furniture; not liable to get out of order, and are securely boxed, so that they can be sent anywhere by ordinary freight routes, all ready for use.

Forty Styles, plain or elegant cases; one to twelve stops; Prices, $75, $90, $110, $125, $130, $1 0, $150, $160 $170, $200, $225, $250, $300, $435, $540, $550, $600, and upwards.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs were introduced four years since, and are a great improvement upon the Melodeon, Harmonium, and other reed organs, greatly excelling them especially in the excellent quality and variety of their tones; in power and quickness of action, and capacity for expression,

THEIR SUCCESS HAS BEEN ENTIRELY BEYOND PRECEDENT,

and proves how greatly such an instrument was needed. Again and again the manufacturers have been compelled to double their manufacturing facilities, until they have been increased six-fold. From the most eminent of the musical profession, the most distinguished pianists, organists, composers, and musical directors, the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs have received an amount and degree of commendation never before bestowed upon any similar musical instrument. More than two hundred and fifty of the most eminent musicians in the country have given written testimonials to the value of the improvements contained in them, and that they excel all other instruments of this class.

FIFTY-TWO GOLD OR SILVER MEDALS, or other highest Premiums have been awarded to Mason & Hamlin for the important improvements effected by them, and for the

SUPERIORITY OF THEIR INSTRUMENTS TO ALL OTHERS.

Constantly exhibiting their instruments in competition with others, they have been awarded the highest premium in every instance, but three or four.

For churches, sunday schools, etc., the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs are the instruments long wanted, of the very best quality, abundant power, not too expensive, nor liable to get out of order.

For private use, in drawing-rooms, &c., they are not less desirable, and are finding a place in the musical families of the principal cities.

They are adapted to a wider range of music than the piano, being fitted for all sacred music and for much secular music, while their quickness of action is such that the most lively, rapid music can be played on them. Then their cost is greatly less, as well as their liability to get out of order.

BRIEF EXTRACTS FROM OPINIONS OF DISTINGUISHED MUSICIANS.

I should think they would become very much sought after as parlor instruments as well as for public performance.—Sigismond Thalberg, the world-renowned Pianist. Sure to find its way into every household of taste and refinement which can possibly afford its moderate expenses. Far superior to everything of its class I have seen.—L. M. Gottschalk, the eminent Pianist. Such pure musical tones, promptness and smoothness of action and fine variety of effect, I have not found in any other instrument of the class.—S. B. Mills, the eminent Pianist. Really so excellent that there can hardly be much difference of opinion respecting them.—William Mason, the eminent Pianist. The best instrument of its class with which I am acquainted, and worthy a place in every drawing room.—Harry Sanderson, the eminent Pianist. In every respect far superior to everything I have ever seen of the kind, whether in Europe or America.—Geo. Washbourne Morgan the eminent organist, N. Y. I can only reiterate what so many in the musical profession have said, that for equality, promptness and exquisite tone, they are unequalled.—John H. Wilcox, the eminent Organist, Boston. Surpasses everything in this line I have ever seen, whether French or American.—Jon Zundel, the eminent Organist, N. Y. The best reed instruments in the world are made in the United States, and your Cabinet Organs are greatly superior, and by far the best made here.—Max Maretzer, Musical Conductor, N. Y. Far surpasses all other similar instruments, which have come under my observation.—Carl Zerhan, Musical Conductor, Boston. Exceeds in my estimation every other instrument of this general class.—Thos. Hastings. I can recommend them with confidence.—Lowell Mason. As soon as the people become acquainted with the superior merits of your instruments, your only trouble will be to supply the demand.—Wm. B. Bradbury. I have never seen anything of the kind which interested me so much.—Geo. F. Root. Exciting much interest in musical circles, and already becoming the fashion.—N. Y. Musical Journal. The highest accomplishment of industry in this department. This is not only our opinion, but the unanimous verdict of the organists.—Boston Advertiser. A glorious instrument for the temple service, so readily secured as to be available for any congregation, and effective and beautiful as to meet the desires of the most refined and fastidious.—N. Y. Observer.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs must not be confounded with other reed instruments, from which they vary essentially, their superiority being largely derived from PATENTED IMPROVEMENTS, which cannot be employed by other makers. Among them are

The AUTOMATIC BELLOWS SWELL, patented, a most important invention, and greatly the best swell ever devised being much more effective and easily used than any other. The variety and beauty of effect of which it is capable, cannot be appreciated except from actual use. The many attempts to imitate or find a substitute for this swell, prove its value. None of them, however, approach it in excellence and simplicity.

IMPROVED SELF-ADJUSTING VALVES patented, secure much more perfect action, durability, and freedom from liability to get out of order.

WOOD'S OCTAVE COUPLET patented, in effect nearly doubles the power of the instrument in which it is used.

NOISELESS SAFETY VALVES patented, prevent the hissing sound often heard.

The IMPROVED COMBINATION REGISTER patented, gives great facility in drawing stops.

Whom God Hath Joined.

BY PHŒBE CARY.

Love is strong as death. . . . Many waters cannot quench love, neither can the floods drown it."—SOLOMON.

Fair youth, too timid to lift your eyes
To the maiden with downcast look,
As you mingle the gold and brown of your curls
Together over a book;
A fluit ring hope that she dare not name
Her trembling bosom heaves,
And your heart is thrilled when your fingers meet,
As you softly turn the leaves.

Perchance you two will walk alone
Next year at some sweet day's close,
And your voice will fall to a tenderer tone
As you liken her cheek to a rose;
And then her face will flush and glow
With a hopeful, happy red,
Outblushing all the flowers that grow
Anear in the garden-bed.

If you plead for hope, she may bashful drop
Her head on your shoulder low,
And you will be lovers and sweethearts then,
As youths and maidens go;
Lovers and sweethearts, dreaming dreams,
And seeing visions that please,
With never a thought that life is made
Of great realities!

That the cords of love must be strong as death,
If they hold and keep a heart;
Not daisy-chains, that snap in the breeze;
Or break with their weight apart!
For the pretty colors of youth's sweet morn
Fade out from the moonday-sky;
And blushing loves in the roses born,
Alas! with the roses die!

But the faith that when our morn is past,
Tender and true survives,
Is the faith we need to lean upon
In the crises of our lives:—
The love that shines in the eye grown dim,
In the voice that trembles speaks,
And sees the roses that years ago
Withered and died in our cheeks!

That sheds its halo round us still
Of soft immortal light,
When we change youth's golden coronal
For a crown of silver white,
A love for sickness, and for health,
For rapture and for tear-;
That will live for us, and bear with us,
Through all our mortal years.

And such there is:—there are lovers here,
On the brink of the grave that stand,
Who shall cross the hills beyond, and walk
Forever hand in hand.
Pray, youth and maid, that your fate be theirs
Who are joined no more to part;
For death comes not to the living soul,
Nor age to the loving heart!

Sermon on Baptism.

BY REV. HENRY GREEN.

Colored.

Delivered in the First Street M. E. Church, June 9th, 1867.

I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance; but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear; He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and fire. Matt. 3-11.

This discourse went out into the world because it was scripture, and the people keep it in the world because it is a church word. John the Baptist told the people that God had sent him to gather up the people to tell them about Jesus who was to come. And reasoning thus with the people as they were before him on repentance, they followed him about. The plain question is, the old church had withered away and he was sent to lift it up, and tell them of one who would baptize the soul.

Now, this matter of water baptism is a very bothersome question. Every now and then the word runs out that every man and woman must consider that baptism is a piece of work that must be done. Well, this may be true, but they forget that John says, "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." And in another place he says, "whose fan is in his hand." I suppose that was a very strange doctrine in those days; but the farmers understood it, just as the farmers of old Virginia, where I lived a slave, understood it. Chaff is the thing, whether of oats, wheat or corn, that runs through the fan, and is to be burnt up. John told them that Jesus would gather the wheat into his own garner, but the chaff into the furnace. Now I intend to strike it home to the sinner and tell him that he is like chaff and has no weight in him, and the wind will blow him away. A minister like a man of thunder and lightening, must tell the sinner, that Jesus will burn him in unquenchonable fire. And you can't put that fire out, (cries of no, no.) This is pretty hard for such a nice looking people, but if a little coal of fire was thrown on you, you would jump out of the way. Now, what have you been doing to make you so much afraid? Why, you have not got the grace of God; you aint pure wheat.

Now the great question is, did Jesus, when John baptized him, go down into the water? If he didn't, how did he do? In the 16th verse of this chapter it is said, that when "he was baptised, he went straightway out of the water" Now it don't say that he went down into the water, only that he came straightway out of the water. Many of the colored people say, "go down into the water." Some say that sprinkling baptism is of no account, because we don't go down into the water. But this old Bible don't say that Jesus went down into the water, only that he went straightway out of the water, when the heavens opened and a voice cried, "This is my beloved son, hear ye him." But this is a most bothersome question in the church, "Went down into the water," they say; that's what you say, but why don't John say so? Now I say, that if I stand here and you pour water on my head, and I move, I would go straightway up out of the water. So with Jesus. But they say the Methodists am proud, and don't like to go down into the water, this is not true. The fact is, there is mighty little pure water in Louisiana. The old Mississippi and the bayous are not clear. We must have pure water for baptism, and you can get it out of the cisterns, for there aint enough of that kind. But you must not say that Henry Green is opposed to immersion. He aint, he only says, you must have pure water, and if you can't get that, then immersion is not the only mood.

In my long life of 46 years, I have seen a great many curious things about this immersion. Some stay in the church for ten years, and all at once start up and say, "I must go down into the water." They bother the preacher and they bother the brethren, and they keep the church in excitement about going down into the water. But what they want is the Holy Ghost baptism. Now you may say, that I have mistrusted the word. Well, if you are made better by going down into the water, tell me, I will go also. But for 46 years I have been watching the lives of those who go down into the water and those who don't go, and I declare to you that I dont see any difference; if there is any, I think those that don't go, are a little the best.

But this is a bothersome question in the church. I once heard it discussed by 60 ministers at once. Some said, "cross here" and some said, "cross yonder;" some said, "immersion fulfills all righteousness, but I thought, if it did'nt do more than that, they were a chaffy crowd, and the wind would blow them away. John preached unto repentance, and this is the great end of baptism. Don't depend on a little more water, for Jesus is coming with his fan; he will sift you and burn the chaff. Now some of the Baptists say, that there is no Methodists in heaven, others say, there are a few there, but they stand with their little coats on, behind the door, ashamed to come out, because they have not been immersed. But see here, neighbor, this is making game of Jesus and his people, for I declare unto you, that there are no names in heaven, and up there the Methodists will have as white a robe, and as large a robe, and will stand out as boldly as any body else.

But is it not best to put some under the water to content their souls; well it may be, but they would'nt be contented then. Don't think that I won't put you under the water. I will, if I must, and I will put you so deep that you will know it when you come up. I am not opposed to immersion, but don't set it too high and cheat Jesus out of his office of mediator. Never shall I forget, that when I was a child and got converted, the Baptists said, "you have'nt religion yet, cause you are not immersed." It was like flinging me head foremost into a cold bath. But I survived. Had the love of Jesus and that contented my heart. I don't like these Baptists who come prowling about for my young converts, to get them away from their fathers and mothers who dandled them on their knees. It is a shame. No Christian will do it. But the Baptists have'nt gained much by their course, for the Methodists are like an ant's nest, the more you beat it down, the more ants will come up. The difference between the Baptists and the Methodists is, they belong to a water—company and we, belong to a fire-coming; they go in for a baptism of water, but we for the baptism of the Holy Ghost and of fire.

There are some people here, who say, God reveals this and that to them, and that the Lord told me, "go into the water." Well, I don't like to hear this, because I don't believe in it. We have the Bible, and that is God's voice to us. He don't speak to the people as he did when they had no Bibles. We must now read and live by faith. Seek for the baptism of fire; get your souls purified, and the first good chance you get slip off to heaven.

Business Prospects.

The facts that railroad trains are running light and that trade is said to be dull are regarded by many with gloomy forebodings. We construe them differently. Many of those who used to crowd the cars are now at home at work, where they should be, instead of gadding about on borrowed money and making trade brisk by buying goods that they will never pay for. It is a great pity that a good many more of our city and village population had not been started out upon the prairies and into the woods, there to hew out farms which would very soon be adding largely to the annual product, therefore to the wealth and trade, of the country—of course swelling the business of railroads.

There has been much senseless complaint of the decline of ship-building—a complaint by no means confined to this country. But more ships are not built, simply because more ships are not needed. Seven years ago, we grew Five Millions of bales (1,000,000) tuns of cleaned Cotton; last year, we grew Two Millions of Bales only; while our product of Sugar and Rice has fallen off in at least equal proportion. Consequently, we want fewer ships than we did; hence, we build fewer, as we ought. When we have more to ship, we shall build the requisite vessels; and we ought not to do it before.

In 1865, our crops were light, mainly because we began that year with more than One Million men in arms, and at least Two Millions employed, in one way or another, in playing the destructive game of War. We mustered out the Rebels in April and May, and the Unionists along through the Summer and Fall; but few of them did much to swell the harvest of that year, which was shortened at the South by the lack of implements and draft-animals. The anarchy existing in the relations of Labor to Capital further contributed to stint the harvest In 1866, we worked better; but this proved a very unfruitful season. The important Wheat crop was a general failure; we think not more than five bushels were harvested to one sown; whereas, there are usually ten to twelve. The positive loss to the country from the failure of this single product cannot have been less than $100,000,000. Indian Corn failed pretty generally throughout the South, and was badly shortened by frost in the North-West; and, as a full crop would be about One Thousand Million bushels, we estimate the loss at about Two Hundred Million bushels, worth, where it should have grown, at least $100,000,000 more. Cotton was cut short by floods, drought, the army worm, etc. About One Million bales, worth $100,000,000 more; but the higher price realized abroad partially compensated for the deficient quantity. Yet it is clear that on the whole, the country is at least $200,000,000 poorer to-day than it would have been with fair average crops last year, to say nothing of those of 1865.

Yet in the face of this "aching void," we went on buying silks and satins, laces and gewgaws as though we were in the full tide of general prosperity; our importations for 1866 having exceeded in value those of any former year. Is it a wonder that our trade is slack and our railroad receipts light in the early part of 1867? How could they be otherwise, when our agricultural districts have little to sell, and our grain growing regions are short of bread?

"This sickness is not unto death." Quite the contrary. The great body of our people are fencing, ploughing, planting seeding, weeding, feeding, as they should be. Others are mining Iron, Copper, Lead, Gold, Silver, &c. &c. In other words, we are producing wealth instead of swapping it about, and are thus laying the basis of a genuine prosperity, a beneficent commercial activity True, the spring is generally cold and backward; but it has thus far been wet, as our most important Grass crop requires that it should be. Wheat also is generally looking well, having been largely sown last Fall. And, while the backwardness of Spring, the wetness of the ground, has probably restricted the area sown to Spring Wheat, Oats, Barley, &c., there is yet ample time for Corn, provided the requisite labor can be obtained to plant and till it. Grass implies Butter, Cheese, and Beef; Corn makes Pork, and serves to increase the supply of Butter and Beef; and there is labor enough to be had by those who have the means of paying for it, and immigrants arriving at our ports at the rate of over one thousand per day.

We see nothing, therefore, that should incite despondency or justify gloomy apprehensions. There are rotten banks that must explode: there are still too many would be clerks, brokers, and other non-producers, who have yet to be driven to productive labor; there are far too many goods coming in, too few furnaces in blast, too few spindles whirling and shuttles flying; but we shall try to have the the tariff so amended as to better this next Winter. On the whole, we judge that next fall may witness a substantial improvement in business, and a decided recovery in the receipts of our railroads.—N. Y. Tribune.

Death of a Scotch Philanthropist.

The Glasgow Herald reports the death of Mr. John Henderson, of Park, whose wide-spread benevolence and sustenance of religious schemes are almost, if not altogether, without precedent. The event took place on Wednesday morning, at the family residence, Park parish of Inchinnan, Renfrewshire, and was immediately caused by an attack of influenza. He had been a very successful merchant. For the last forty years, and especially during the latter 20, Mr. Henderson has spent a large portion of his great income in promoting evangelical Christianity. We understand that for many years back he has contributed to religious and benevolent schemes—the former principally—at the rate of from £30,000 to £40,000 a year. He was very strict, even austere, in his views of religious duty, and was particularly interested in maintaining inviolate the character of the Scottish Sabbath as a day of strict cessation from labor. The furtherance of missions in India and on the continent of Europe he regarded in an equally strong light; and while he was not wanting in assistance, and that of the most generous kind, to other schemes, missions and the Sabbath question especially engrossed his efforts. His giving was of the most systematic kind, and latterly may be said to have been the object of his life. Rooms in his counting-house were fitted up as a department for receiving applications for aid and determining on the amount to be given, and a secretary was kept whose duties were wholly confined to managing, under Mr. Henderson himself, the division of the large sum of money annually expended. No pecuniary sacrifice was considered too great where a good end could be accomplished by it. He maintained several religious newspapers for the defusion of what he held to be right views of life, and on one occasion spent £4000 in sending a copy of a publication to all the railway servants in the kingdom, with the view of convincing them of their duty being to abstain from Sabbath labor. With the same end in view he purchased to a large extent the stock of the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway, and divided it among friends whom he knew would oppose the running of trains on the Sabbath. By this and other exertions on his part, and on that of others, Sunday trains between Glasgow and Edinburgh were prevented from running until the amalgamation with the North British Company placed Mr. Henderson and his supporters in a minority. He gave an annual prize to to the University of Glasgow for the best essay on the Decalogue, and was at much expense in conbating recently expressed views on the binding nature of the Fourth Commandment. Mr. Henderson bought and maintained a number of mission churches in Glasgow. He was connected with the United Presbyterian body, and for upwards of 60 years was a member of the congregation of Greyfriars'; but although his own sect received, as a matter of course, the principal share of his liberality, he did not hesitate to extend a helping hand to any religious movement that commended itself to hisrespect He has contributed largely to the extension of the United Presbyterian body in London. He was far from being sectarian, and indeed it was mainly through his instrumentality that there was estabilised the Evangelical Alliance, an association having for its chief object the smoothing down of differences between religious denominations. It is the characteristic of the man that when he spent the Sabbath at his seat at Park he preferred worshipping in the Free Church of Inchinnan, which he erected at his own cost, to the necessity of driving to the nearest United Presbyterian Church. The Religious Institution Rooms in St. George's place, and the mission premises for the United Presbyterian Church, in Virginia street, were built at his expense, and many religious edifices in this city and the surrounding district owe their erection in no small degree to the same source.

Talkers and Talking.

BY ONE SIMON.

Originality shines with peculiar brilliancy in conversation. It alone may atone for other faults. The common every day sayings which generally form the chief part of social intercourse, fail to attract when the originality of genius is present. We may listen to much that is said by some, yet how few new ideas we get. Here and there probably some original idea is thrown in the borrowed mess of conversational hash, to give the dish a pristine flavor, and probably seasoned with a little original language, to suit the taste of the hearer, but the real meat is stolen from some one else's storehouse; and you leave after such a meager repast with the cravings of your mental appetite for something not stale, as strong as before The cause of this evil in most cases seems to be a lack of energy, but perhaps in some it may be a lack af mental power. Be yourself: and don't make yourself a slave to any example, or code of conventionalities. Talk original, and if you do once in a while say something that startles the prosy and decorous owls of society, it is far better, if natural, than to repeat the worn ideas of common parlance continually. Then be original from caput to corns. However, in your efforts to be original, do not think that you must assume odd and eccentric ways of speaking and acting. Some persons get terribly original. They neither talk, dress, nor act like other persons. This is capriciousness, not originality. To be original is simply to be natural. To follow no set example, but to do as the occasion and common sense would have us do.

One of the great accomplishments for a talker is to gain the faculty of suiting his discourse to the tastes and habits of those with whom he is conversing. By this, it is not meant that when among the ignorant, you should lower yourself to their language and manners, nor when among the learned you should assume to be better informed than what you are. But you can conduct your part of the conversation in such a way, and on subjects with which they are familiar, so as to gain the attention and interest of almost all classes of persons. If you are with a farmer you will generally find that he is more interested in the crops, weather, best time for planting, etc, and you will engage his attention on such subjects quicker than on any other. Look at the disposition and circumstances of the person, and then talk accordingly. It would not be advisable to talk to a hod-carrier on some question of theology, nor to ask a minister how to play euchre—at least most of them. Neither would it be advisable to ask a young miss concerning a point of law, nor to explain to a doctor of divinity the latest style of waterfalls. Persons are apt to be engrossed in the limits of their own occupation or interests. They view the world from their peculiar stand-points. To the doctor the world seems a vast hospital, where the patients are constantly physicked by adversity, and the stern old physician, Time, deals out the doses, and pockets the fees. The lawyer looks at it from a forensical point of view. While it appears to the theological pisator to be a "wide fish-pond where all from the little minnows to the whales, are nibbling and biting at the gilded baits which the Devil throws in." The blackleg fancies it to be a game: and the merchant looks at it as a great bazaar. The pedagogue views it as a school-house, where all are taught by the grim old teacher, Experience. Each looks on the rest of mankind in his own peculiar way, and as connected with his sphere of action, and when you wish to approach him in conversation you must do it in such a manner as to awaken some connection between himself and the subject of the talk. Whoever you converse with, if you would succeed in gaining their interest, you must study their capacity and disposition, then talk accordingly.

Some persons live in most blissful ignorance of a practical knowledge of this rule. They are forever forgetting the circumstances and conditions of those around them, and will talk on topics that are disagreeable to the hearers. They would see no impropriety of cracking a joke at a funeral, and will read a lecture on the moral law at a dinner table. Dr. Johnson once said that "nice persons frequently have nasty ideas." They perhaps are not immoral nor indecent in their conversation, but they have the fault of introducing and talking on disagreeable subjects. They will entertain a circle of friends by describing the symptoms attending their last attack of the dyspepsia. They discuss with great gusto on political economy to a bevy of young misses; and give a detailed account of "babies' attack of the croup" at any time and to almost any person. There is nothing so easy as to prove that it is necessary to talk on such subjects at times, but it is certain that refined people instinctively avoid a grievance or personal detail, and experience no inconvenience from so doing, and make themselves far more agreeable in society.

Queen Victoria.

A London correspond of the Boston Journal tells some curious stories of the manner in which Queen Victoria has conducted herself since the death of Prince Albert. She will not live in the palace at London. On her husband's death, she had Buckingham Palace dismantled, and so it remains to this day, all except the private rooms. The Queen will not drive through the royal gateway of the palace, nor has she since her husband died. She will not ride through the royal entrance to the House of Lords, but goes in through the Peer's entrance. She will not wear the royal robes, and when she opens Parliament in person, the robes are thrown over the back of the throne, which is a gilded chair, surmounted with a gilt crown, and sits on them. She comes to London when duty calls, seldom passes a night in her capital, and has passed less than a dozen in four years. She remains in quiet at Windsor or Osborne. She has no company but what her official position imposes on her. The state apartments at Windsor are all dismantled. The room in which the Prince Consort breathed his last, is kept with scrupulous care just as the Prince left it. The ladies say that each night the dressing gown and slippers are put in their accustomed place. The Queen's confidential attendant is a Highlander by the name of Brown. He takes all the orders from the Queen—and barelegged messengers come from the "Queen's Apartments" at Windsor when her Majesty is to be served. This Brown has been the occasion of a world of talk. He is about fifty—tall and spare—with great assurance, and attends the Queen to and from London. Great attempts have been made to dislodge him, but all in vain. The Queen has a will of her own. Brown was the Prince Consort's Highland servant, and was held by him in all honor. While Victoria rules England, Brown will rule the royal household.

Refusing to play the Queen her Majesty has never forgot to play the woman. Her visit to Balmoral and Osborne is a benediction to the poor. She will allow no unseemly honors. She drives her pony wagon.—Daily she goes her round with her carriage filled with little gifts for the sick, the infirm, the poor. These she distributes with her own hand. By the bedside of the aged and neglected, the Queen kneels and prays to the Sovereign of all. To one she daily reads, to another she presents some needed comfort; and she is especially tender to little ones who are in sorrow or want. All through the highlands she is regarded as an angel of mercy.

A NEW IDEA.—Chaplain McCabe says: I was a member of a little circle recently, which had the privilege of listening to Bishop Thomson, while giving a little fireside sketch of his experience among Southern conferences. Among many other incidents, he told us of a sermon which he heard from the lips of a colored preacher. The subject was "Benevolence;" the text, "It is more blessed to give than to receive;" one of the propositions, "that many Churches have very little spiritual life and power, because they do not give as much as they ought to give." In the course of his remarks upon this proposition, the preacher said: "I'se knowed many a Church to die cause it dident give enough, but I nebber knowed a Church to die cause it gave too much. Dey don't die dat way. Bredren, has any of you knowed a Church dat died cause it give too much? If ye do, jest let me know, and I'll make a pilgrimage to dat Church, and I'll climb by de soft light of de moon to its moss-covered roof, and I'll stand dar and lift up my hands to hebben, and say: "Blessed are de dead dat die in de Lord."

Home.

Home is where man's real character is displayed. The best of men, when in the world, are conscious of restraint They measure their words, guard their actions, watch their spirit. Without intentional hypocrisy, they do not always act out themselves. The proud assume an air of humility; the ambitious appear contented, the passionate seem calm, the stern yielding, the selfish liberal. And there are reasons for this restraint. There is an inspiration which springs from society and there is a desire for the good opinion of others. But at home, the real man is seen. There the motive for disguise has ceased to act, and the good are good, and the bad are bad. There the polished man of society is the uncouth husband and the gruff father; the sweet and elegant lady of fashion, is the brawling wife and scolding mother; the amiable brother and gentle sister in the world, are when at home petulent and unkind.

Yet there are those who appear to best advantage at home. The man of few words in society, is the most companionable when in the bosom of his family, and the woman of solemn face when abroad, has reserved all her smiles for the loved ones at home. In all the world, there is no judgment-seat like unto that at home. It is most like the impartial tribunal of God. There man acts out himself just as he thinks and feels and is judged accordingly.

Home is the scene of our deepest sorrows and sweetest joys. It is the scene of wedded love, of parental affection, of filial veneration: and there is felt most severely the blow of scandal, of ruined fortune, and of death. And what a school is home. It is the place of our birth; there we learn to feel, to think, to speak, and there are set before us, our first examples, models for imitation. Most of what is fundamental is there learned, and our after-life is but the outgrowth of home influences.

We should therefore, display the best traits of character at home. Men should not reverse the ordinary custom and be angels at home and devils abroad; but they should be angels in the family and and not devils in society. Some men choose home to spit out their spleen. Tormented by the vexations of life a'l day long in the world, they uncork the bottle of their wrath upon the devoted ones at home. The outer-world is the place to uncork the bottle, where no one cares about your wrath. Storm away outside, but remember, there is one at home who can be made to suffer as no one else in this wide-world. If you have but one smile give that to your wife.

Home should be the most attractive, cheerful place on earth. Thither the feet should ever turn with gladness and the heart in blissful anticipation. What a sham life that must be, where home is nightly abandoned for threaters and the society of others. How low must be the estimate of wedded life, when home is merely a convenient place in which to eat, and drink and sleep; when its joys of married love and of the sweet music of prattling children are rejected for the society of strangers. Home should be man's chief delight. Around it he should throw every attraction; it should be his paradise in prosperity; his sanctuary in distress. Man dies at home. Should he not therefore make it the centre of his affections and his joys?

And here is woman's true sphere of influence. She is mightier here than on thrones, or in legislative halls. If the sweetness of her life and character does not attract, then husbands and brothers will be allured to other scenes. Love, gentleness, gladness, devotion, music, books, flowers, are the mild, and mighty ministers of her power. The house in order, the meal prepared, the slippers and gown in readiness and she herself at home, are sweet and gentle attractions for her "liege lord." What is a home without woman? No task is so hard for Americans, as to learn to stay at home.

Home, home, sweet, sweet home,
Be it ever so homely, there's no place like home.

But home is hallowed and made a place of pure enjoyment by family religion. "Show piety at home," is an apostolic injunction. Its refining, sustaining, cheering influence, cannot be substituted by philosophy, or good breeding, or mere earthly affections. Jesus must be known, loved and worshiped in the family as the inspiration of every action and the spring of every joy. Home should be a little church, the father, the priest, the mother, the priestess and the children, the worshipers of the Lord. Here the Bible each day should spread its banquet of wisdom and love; the voice of prayer should bear on high the wants and woes of each, and the song of praise should wrapt to heaven the greatfnl music of the soul. Our earthly should be the type of our heavenly home.

Real Estate in Louisiana.

Men of large business experience, freely express the opinion, that quite one-half of the real estate in Louisiana will change hands within a year. This may be an over estimate, nevertheless, it is true, that there never has been so much real estate property in market as there is at the present time. This financial condition of our State is attributable to causes at once remote and immediate. Doubtless, the disastrous results of the late war, hastened the long expected crisis. Those in sympathy with the rebellion, had pledged their ample fortunes to support the now "lost cause," and thus was squandered much of their active capital. As a general thing, the largest and best of our plantations, were seriously injured by neglect and violence during the war, and the loss of their slaves, completed the financial embarrassment of their owners. Against the threatened ruin they have since manfully struggled, but the failure of the crops, for three consecutive years, extinguished the last hope of recovery, and to-day, they are without the means to cultivate their lands; and it is impossible for them to negotiate loans for that purpose.

But there are out-lying, remote causes, which have worked out this logical and ruinous result. Social life in the South, has been marked with an extravagance of living, which was sufficient to bankrupt any people under heaven, no matter what their prosperity or the resources of their climate. In the days of their wealth and power, the people of the South were the most elegant, luxurious and extravagant portion of our national population. Although they monopolized those great staple-crops—cotton and sugar—and although four millions of unpaid slaves toiled for their support, yet their income was never equal to their annual expenditures. But rather than abandon their extravagant mode of living, they borrowed to such an alarming extent, that it may be said, they now own nothing. It is the opinion of competent judges, that nine-tenths of the plantations in this State are hopelessly mortgaged. In the Teche country, the most beautiful and fertile section of our State, there are not more than four plantations, in a section of over forty miles, that are not heavily mortgaged. Embarrassed from lack of means to cultivate their lands, the planters were accustomed to mortgage their plantations to commission merchants, by giving their paper, secured by mortgage; the merchants raised the money by obtaining discounts from the banks, and pledging the planters' paper as collaterals; and the stocks of the banks, are principally owned by European and Northern capitalists. And now in the day of final settlement, without the power to command the unrequited labor of slaves, without the means to work their lands, and without the funds to cancel the mortgages now due, most of the planters in Louisiana, must soon see their plantations pass into other hands.

Others again, who are heavily embarrassed, whether from the above named causes or from others, will avail themselves of the provisions of the bankrupt law, and their real estate will be thrown upon the market. Disgusted with yankee rule, and having no faith in the success of free labor, some persons, both in the city and in the country parishes, are offering their property for sale at exceedingly low figures. They are determined to leave the country and seek a home in some foreign land.

Under these circumstances we deem it a most favorable time for those who have funds to invest, to come South and purchase real estate. We know of magnificent plantations which are offered for one-fourth their estimated value prior to the war. Within eight miles of this city a plantation of three thousand acres, adapted to sugar, cotton and rice crops, and which before the war was valued at $100,000, can now be purchased for $25,000, and a friend of ours has just negotiated the purchase of a plantation near Franklin, equally valuable, for $20,000. Real estate in New Orleans, is much lower than it was three months ago, and is rapidly decling.

What the South wants is capital. The opportunities for investment here are more inviting than they ever were in the West. Under ordinary circumstances, property will double in value within five years. Young, intelligent, prudent, enterprising men, with capital, should turn their faces Southward and here in Louisiana, especially, they will find rare opportunities for investment. This is the most simple and practical way to reconstruct the South. We need Men and Money.

General James Longstreet

Last week, we published a letter written by General Longstreet, to the N. O. Republican, which we have no doubt was read with universal satisfaction by all the readers of the Advocate. The N. O. Times referred to this letter in such a way as to call forth another letter from General Longstreet, addressed to the editor of that paper, in which we find this paragraph:

"I am well satisfied that order cannot be organized out of confusion so long as the conflicting interests of two parties are to be subserved. The war was made upon Republican issues, and it seems to me fair and just that the settlement should be made accordingly.

* * * *

If I understand the object of politics, it is to relieve the distress of the people, and to provide for their future comfort. The course that I advise will be seen to meet this view, and do justice to all."

General Longstreet announces a fact which is sustained by the history of the war. It was the election of Abraham Lincoln, and the accession to power of a Republican administration that precipitated the people of the South into rebellion, and the war waged by them, was against the principles of the Republican party, as much as the Constitution and government of the United States. When the war was begun the Republican party proclaimed it no part of their purpose to interfere with the institutions of the various States; and had the people of the South given no provocation they would have maintained that position; but the original intention of the government was departed from, and the Republican party advanced to new principles, from time to time as the military necessities required, to meet the policy of the leaders of the rebellion, who early proclained confiscation, and issued letters of marque to piratical vessels to pray upon the commerce of our country. The life of the nation being at stake, the Republican party advanced to the broad doctrine of universal liberty, and equal-rights, and under this banner the great leaders of the confederacy were forced to surrender their swords to the lawful authority of the government of the United States. The principles of the Republican party triumphed, and "what had before been principles had now become law." It is well known to every candid mind, that the administration, and the whole policy of the government was opposed by the Northern Democracy with most bitter hatred, and that that party placed every obsticle in the way of a successful prosecution of the war; in their national Convention they proclaimed the war a failure, after four years desperate fighting, and demanded a cessation of hostilities. The Republican party opposed this policy which would have dissolved the Union, proclaimed anew their principles, and went before the people in the Presidential election of 1864, and were overwhelmingly sustained by the Northern States. The result of that election was the death knell of the rebellion, and when the confederate armies surrendered, they recognized that the principles of the Republican party had triumphed. This doctrine was not controverted for several months after the war closed, and every other doctrine was an after thought, for we find the Southern States accepting the constitutional amendment abolishing slavery, which was one of the great principles of the Republican party.

When Andrew Johnson assumed the authority to reconstruct the Southern States without the aid of Congress, the people of the South for the first time after the surrender, thought to evade the laws of the government and the demands of the party that had triumphed in the war, and set to work to form an alliance with the Northern Democracy who were as much chagrined at the failure of the rebellion as were the veterans of Lee; and if that party could receive justice, they would be treated as one wing of the confederate cause, and be compelled to suffer whatever disabilities it may be necessary to impose on the people of the South. General Longstreet was one of the most distinguished leaders of the "lost cause," and no man knows better than he for what he was fighting, or against whom he fought; and when he surrendered, he did not demand, as one of the conditions, that the great Republican party that had maintained the integrity and unity of the nation, should yield up the offices of the government, and surrender them into the hands of the Copperhead party of the North, who were enenies to the war, and unfaithful allies to the confederate cause.

Those who desire to break the force of General Longstreet's letter, knowing that his position is unanswerable, inform us that he is a brave soldier, but is too young a politician to give advice to the people. We do not imagine that General Longstreet assumes to be wiser than many others who were associated with him in arms, but that he is more honest and sincere in living up to the obligations imposed on him by the surrender, no one can deny. And we are confident that in five years he will be able to look back and see those who now differ with him struggling to overtake him, but he will be far in advance, and will have gained a position of usefulness to his friends and his country. We admire General Longstreet's manly course, and cordially welcome him into full fellowship of the Republican party. He comes out in favor of the broad principles of universal suffrage, not only in the South, but in the North; this is consistent. He does not tell the colored man "he is his best friend" and then unite with a party whose whole lives have been devoted to divising means to perpetuate and extend the institution of slavery, and who are now divising plans to overthrow the principles of the Republican party, but he unites with a party who are pledged to universal liberty and universal suffrage. We call upon every Southern man to follow his example, lay aside prejudice and carefully study how best he can serve himself and his country, and to unite with the only party in this country, which can serve the State, and make the people once more prosperous and happy. General Longstreet surrendered his sword to this party, and believes by giving its principles a fair trial the distress now suffered by the people of the South will be relieved. That his example will be followed by hosts of his followers in the late war is already apparent. We say to all, come, our doors are wide open, unite with us, and let us dwell together in unity.

Republican Convention.

The Republicans of Louisiana, met in Convention in this City on the 10th inst. Hon. Charles Smith was chosen chairman, and Mr. Vigers, Secretary. On the 12th inst., the Convention adopted the following sensible resolution:

Resolved, That the Radical Republican party of Louisiana, will always discountenance any attempt on the part of any race or class of people to assume political control in any branch of government to the exclusion of any other race or class.

A series of resolutions were also adopted, calling upon Congress to provide for universal suffrage in the Northern States. General Sypher introduced the following very important resolutions which were adopted.

Whereas, the proper education of the rising generation is a matter of vital importance the want of which has been severely felt and dearly paid for by the South, and

Whereas, The public schools of the city of New Orleans are at present under the same influences that educated the men of the present generation up to the point of rebellion; and that everything like a patriotic expression of sentiment on the part of either teachers or pupils is rigidly prohibited by the present directors: therefore be it

Resolved, That Major General Sheridan and Mayor Heath he earnestly requested to take such measures as to them may seem proper to remove the present board of directors, and appoint those to such positions who are distinguished for their attachment to the principles of liberty and Union, and such as will make it a pleasure as well as a duty to teach the youth of this city to love the flag of their country and respect the rights of their fellow men of all races.

Resolved, That the two hundred and fifty thousand dollars annually paid by the city of New Orleans for the support of the public schools should be disbursed in the interests of loyalty, and not appropriated, as at present, to fostering a feeling of antagonism thereto.

We congratulate the Convention upon its harmony and moderation, which promise great good to the Republican party in this state.

Gov. Benj. F. Flanders.

The following able biographical sketch of our new governor is from the New Orleans Republican of the 7th inst.

Mr. Flanders was born in Bristol, New Hampshire, on the 26th day of January, 1816; he graduated at Dartmouth college in 1842. He devoted a short time subsequently to the study of law, and came to this city about the year 1843. About that time the system of public schools was initiated in this city, and Mr. Flanders took an active part in the first organization. He accepted the position of principal of the Conti street school, which, however, he resigned some months afterward to go into the publication of the Tropic newspaper, in which he was associated with Colonel T. B. Thorpe. He soon sold out his interest in the paper and resumed the business of teaching. While engaged in the schools he was elected a member of the board of Aldermen of the third municipality, comprising that part of the city known as the third district.

In 1853 the people of New Orleans began to turn their attention to the project of building railroads. Mr. Flanders took an active part in promoting this class of improvements, and was elected by the board of directors secretary and treasurer of the New Orleans Opelousas and Great Western railroad. He discharged the duties of the position until 1861; when he was obliged to leave the State on account of his well-known attachment to the Union and his opposition to secession. He passed with some difficulty through the rebel country, then under command of the Reverend Bishop Polk, who had the direction of military affairs in Tennessee.

He had interviews with General Butler in New York and in Washington some months before the latter came to this department. His intimate acquaintance with the topography and personel of New Orleans enabled him to give the general many valuable suggestions in regard to the field upon which he was soon to become famous. As soon as Mr. Flanders learned that General Butler was here, he returned, and was shortly afterwards appointed city treasurer, in place of Adam Giffen, removed by the commanding general. In July or August, he organized the system of free markets, by which some sixteen or seventeen thousand poor people were fed daily from General Butler's commissary stores.

In November, 1863, Mr. Flanders was a candidate for Congress from the first district of this State, in which he was opposed by J. E. Bouligny, who had represented the district in the previous Congress. Mr. Flanders was elected by an immense majority. He then resigned his office of city treasurer, in which he was succeded by Mr. John S. Walton.

Upon the expiration of his congressional term in 1863, he was appointed supervising special agent of the treasury by Secretary Chase. In the latter part of the same year he assisted in organizing the First National Bank of New Orleans, and was elected the first president of that institution. Finding, however, that the duties of his office, and those required of him as president of the bank were too arduous, he resigned the latter, and devoted his time exclusively to his federal office.

During the canvass of 1864, Mr. Flanders was one of the three candidates for governor, and received a large vote. With this exception he has devoted the last three years of his time to the duties of his office of special agent; and although most of them have been terminated by law, he has had a large work to perform in closing up the affairs of his department.

We have known Mr. Flanders intimately for many years, and have ever found him to be a man of invincible honor and integrity. He is a man who will follow out the line of his duty, or at least what he conceives to be such at the risk of making himself "unpopular." His appointment as provisional governor is one of the most judicious of General Sheridan's official acts. His intimate acquaintance with the affairs of the City and State, his long residence, and his high personal character combine in him the desirable elements of a chief magistrate. Under this rule we have no doubt some mode will be devised to to rid the State, and especially the country parishes of the many dishonest and traitorous civil officers who are now using their power and influence to oppress Union men and protect ex-rebel outlaws. If some of the sheriffs do not hear something interesting to them from the executive office within a month, we are mistaken in the man whom General Sheridan has selected for our governor.

Baptism.

Rev. Emperor Williams of the Jefferson city M. E. Church, immersed twenty four persons, last Sabbath morning at 9 o'clock and baptized two by pouring. An immense crowd of people stood on the banks of the river, and the interest on the occasion was more than usual. At eleven o'clock there was preaching on the subject of baptism and at 3 P. M. on the history of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He also received into the Church eight persons, and took up a collection of $30.00. Brother Williams is doing a noble work for God and His Church in Jefferson City and Carrolton

Old Jacob Barker's bank is a complete wreck. He declares himself too old to resume his business, and that his 800 depositors must look out for themselves. This is hard on many who had entrusted their hard earnings with the "old banker," but in this we are not disappointed. "Old Jacob's" god is gold.

Macon, Miss.

We have had an interview with Rev. M. Jones, (colored) late preacher in charge at Macon, Miss., but who is now a fugitive from that place, his life having been threatened if he did not leave. He makes the following statement of facts: Brother Jone's appearance in Macon, and the organization by him of the M. E. Church there, gave great offense to the M. E. Church South, and its friends, also to the colored people of the Baptist Church, all of whom, he says combined to throw obstacles in his way.

Macon is a hard place for colored people as the writer knows from personal observation last year. Within the last four months, two colored men have been murdered in Macon and two shot and stabbed, and nothing whatever has been done with the assassins.

The wreek brother Jones was driven out, a colored man from Columbus, Robert Glade, the leading man of the Baptist Church in Columbus, came to Macon and was paid by the rebels for making a speech to the colored people in which he took side with the rebels and warned the people (freedmen) against "yankee politicians, yankee preachers and yankee niggers!" Brother Jones and some others unwilling to listen to such a speech from such a man went away. Their leaving produced some excitement. This was Saturday night. Sunday morning Mr. Glade went into brother Jones' Sunday School, and without leave began a speech in which he repeated the offensive language of the previous night. Brother Jones told Glade that neither himself (Jones) or people desired to hear such talk, especially on Sunday, that he (Glade) must desist. Glade replied that he was a free man, and had the right of free speech, and would say just what he pleased, when and where he pleased and that if Jones and his people did not like to hear him they could leave. They all left and the Sunday School was broken up. That forenoon the Baptist people occupied the school house. Brother Jones was to hove held service at 3 o'clock P. M. but put it off till night. Violence was threatened if he undertook it. He was firm and told them they might take his life, but that he should try and do his duty. Just before meeting, his official brethren came to him and told him he not only must not hold the meeting, but that it was not safe for him to remain in town that night—that they knew the men who had threatened to kill him, they had done the like before, and would do it again. And so under cover of night, he fled the place.

And now a word as to this Robert Glade; we know him personally and are surprised that he has sold himself to the rebels. He was a man of some property, was free before the war, and has considerable ability as a speaker. He was the foremost man to defend friend Wilson and his teachers during all their troubles last year, and we are loth to believe that Robert Glade is a Judas. But the teachers are all gone, the schools closed, and he has high Episcopal sanction for turning against Northern men and ministers and courting favor with rebels. And it may be that Robert Glade is a traitor to his race and country. We hope not. If he is, we warn our people against him and all like him.

The other day we heard a free man of color asked, "for whom will you vote!" He replied: "For the man who pays me the most money!" Such men and such measures will ruin the prospects of the freedmen.

Enterprise Miss.

In a letter to brother Brakeman, date of May 30th, Rev. Moses Adams, preacher in charge at Meridian, Miss., gives account of a protracted meeting he has held in Enterprise, of twelve days duration, and which greatly added to our strength in that city. Fifteen personswere received into full connection, 30 joined upon probation, 15 children and 13 adults were baptized. There were many conversions most of them among people of middle age. He also organized a Sunday School of 150 scholars and teachers. We hope that Enterprise will have an appropriation for a new Church, by the Missionary Board.

MEETING FRIENDS—CART-RIDE TO CONFERENCE—DISAGREEABLES.

The 2d Quarterly Conference of Thibodeaux circuit, was appointed at Houma, April 13th, a short ride by Railroad to Terrebonne station, and a walk of four miles, piloted by a friendly freedman brought me to the hospitable dwelling of our friends Gaidry and Marie. They are showing their interest in our cause by taking the Advocate and aiding our church building. Thence by the kindness of brother O'Hare to Beatys, where brother Wm. Jones is in charge of our church, and engaged extensively in planting. The little class and Sunday school are prospering, and he seems satisfied that his cotton crop will turn out well. He is a worthy man, and was sadly cheated last year by men that he trusted. At night the people gathered for preaching, the little cabin was well filled. The Day and Sunday schools are kept up faithfully by brother O'Hare, who gets but a meager support, owing to the poverty of the people. Next morning a mule cart load of Methodists left the place and after a slow but safe journey, reached Houma. Our school mistress was away and school suspended. Builder absent and has been in dispute with the church. A feverish,unquiet conviction of all classes, partly on political accounts, will make things unpleasant, but some noble brethren and sisters had determined that our meeting should be held in the new church; so strong arms, and strong faith united, and it was done.

CONFERENCE BUSINESS—DIFFICULTIES—VALUE OF THE CHURCH.

The attendance was good, but the condition of the board not encouraging, two members dropped and four were referred to a committee for examination of complaints. Twelve brethren were found to have been faithful in their duties. Four appointments were reported. No increase of membership, last report 373. Four Sunday-schools,two added, 160 scholars; nine baptisms; one death; one marriage. Nothing has been raised for preacher's rent, no report on students, Asylums or Schools. Milton Young was made chairman of board of Stewards, the board was instructed to take charge of the work of finishing the church, and care of the property, which is suffering injury. A resolution was passed pledging the brethren to assist brother Murril in obtaining a horse. Here is abundant material and territory for a circuit, and no great prosperity can be expected until a good man is put in charge. The distance from Thibodeaux, bad roads, expense of travelling, make it difficult for one preacher to supply both Parishes. A vigorous effort is now to be made to raise the funds needed for completing the church. Every man in the parish should help in this work, as all will be benefitted by it. And the time is not distant when those who have nobly given their aid,will be proud of their deeds.

SABBATH SERVICES—ZION'S VICTORY—PRAYER FOR HOUMA.

It was worth a journey to see the Sunday school gathering, Sabbath morning. The school from Beattys, 5 or 6 miles distant, was on hand at at an early hour. The Houma school also, but small in number, partly owing to their teachers' absence. A floor was laid of loose planks, rude seats of the same were prepared, one side only of the roof was on, but our hearts were glad for we were at least in the new church, many had wagged their heads mockingly. False prophets had prophesied,but now we were worshipping our Father,God in our own beautiful temple. The children sang sweetly and recited their lessons well. We had a full house at love feast, while speaking our heavenly Father showered his rain from the clouds upon us, but no one said retreat, all stood it bravely, for the same God also sent down from above the clouds, showers of Divine grace. It was a happy time, a feast to be long remembered. In the afternoon we had preaching and the Lord's supper,six persons joined class, two infants were baptized, several subscribed towards the building; may this be the beginning of better days to our church in Houma, where we have many adversaries.

ITINERANT.

The Governorship.

New Orleans Times, says:

We give the closing act of the interesting political drama, a description of which was begun in our previous edition.

Quietude reigned in and around the State House on Friday afternoon, subsequent to the departure of Mr. Wells and friends, until the shades of evening began to fall, when a slight commotion was created by the stoppage in front of the building, of a carriage containing a military officer in uniform. It was Gen. J. W. Forsyth, of Gen. Sheridan's staff, with a formidable looking envelope, addressed to the ex-Governor. Of course it could not be presented, as the individual sought had made another of his "misterious disappearances."

Early yesterday morning, however, Gen. Forsyth was on hand, and ere long Mr Wells "turned up," looking about as usual. The General courteously presented his little document, which was very seriously received and perused, and responded to rather bombastically, as follows: "I submit to the argument of the sword!" and then somewhat pettishly: "There are too many shoulder-strap gentleman flying about here—we'll have to get rid of some of them." Mr. Wells then surrendered the office key, and left in company with Mr. Stille Judge Ryan and members of his own family.

The document presented to Mr. Wells was issued in consequence of the following letter written by Mr. Flanders, and the protest of Gov. Wells already published:

NEW ORLEANS, June 7, 1867.

Maj. Gen. P. H. Sheridan, Com. Fifth Military District:

Sir—Having filed my oath of office as Governor in the office of the Secretary of State, I this day proceeded to the Governor's office and presented your special order No. 62 to James Madison Wells, Esq, with the request that he would comply therewith. And he refused to comply, stating that the order was not addressed to him.

I am, General, your obe't servant,

BENJ. F. FLANDERS,
Gov. of Louisiana.

The General makes a very neat point upon Mr. Wells, for it is well known that the latter has urged the removal of nearly all the Sheriffs in the State, as well as other officers whom he did not like, or whose positions he wanted for his own friends.

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH MILITARY DISTRICT,
New Orleans, La., June 7, 1867.

Mr. J. Madison Wells, Ex-Governor Louisiana, New Orleans, La.

Sir—Gov. Flanders has just informed me that he made an official demand on you for the records of the office which you have heretofore held as Governor of Louisiana, and that you have declined to turn them over to him, disputing the right to remove him from office by me, which right you have acknowledged and urged on me up to the time of your own removal.

I, therefore send Brevet Brig. Gen. James W. Forsyth, of my staff, to notify you that he is sent by me to eject you from the Governor's room forcibly, unless you consider this notification as equivalent to ejection.

P. H. SHERIDAN, Maj. Gen. U. S. A.
Com'dg 5th Mil. Dist.

Gen. Forsyth retired when the enemy capitulated, and he had been placed in command of the citadel, but shortly afterward returned, escorting Governor Flanders. The new Executive had purposely refrained from notifying his friends at what hour he should enter upon the duties of his office, desiring to avoid anything like display or ceremony. With his usual, quiet and dignified bearing he took the Gubernatorial chair, and declared himself ready for business.

His Excellency expressed, in conversation with those present, the intention of at once thoroughly investigating all matters concerning the financial affairs of the State, in order that he might take such steps as are best calculated to promote the general welfare. The State finances, charitable asylums and public institutions, with other kindred subjects, will receive his earliest and closest attention; but all who are cognizant of the Governor's careful and methodical business habits, will feel confident that no branch of his newly assumed duties will be in any manner neglected.

And this is the present situation. We are sure that at the moment "order reigns," but Mr. Wells's confidential supporters look knowingly, whisper mysteriously, and it is stoutly asserted that one of them was actually overheard chaunting the cabalistic refrain:

"It'll nebber do to gub it up, Mr. Brown.
It'll nebber do to gub it up so."

General Longstreet's Letter.

To Mr. John M. G. Parker's efforts, we are indebted for General Longstreet's able letter which we published last week. The following is Mr. Parker's letter to which the General's was a reply:

NEW ORLEANS, May 16, 1867.

Gen. James Longstreet:

General—In your admirable letter of the 6th ultimo, you remark that "our efforts at reconstruction will be vain and useless unless we embark in the enterprise with the sincerity of purpose which will command success."

The spirit which inspired the above paragraph, together with the fact that thousands of soldiers are still ready to follow their leader wherever he may see fit to call them, has emboldened me to extend to you an invitation to attend a mass meeting in Lafayette square to morrow evening, at which the Hon. Henry Wilson, a distinguished leader in the Repbublican party, will address the citizens of New Orleans.

As soldiers, we were opposed to each other during the late war; but as citizens may we not wisely unite in efforts to restore Louisiana to her former position in the Union through the party now in power, and which in all probability will retain power for many years to come? If you accept, I shall be glad to hear your views on the condition of public affairs.

Respectfully yours, etc.,

JOHN M. G. PARKER.

First National Bank.

STATEMENT OF RECEIVER CASE—A BAD STATE OF AFFAIRS.

The following is of almost universal interest:

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF NEW ORLEANS,
NEW ORLEANS, June 8, 1867.

To the Editor of the N.O. Advocate—Sir: The controller of the currency has directed me to make for the New Orleans press a statement of the condition in this bank on the day when it passed into my charge as receiver (May 27th) with the best opinion which can be given in advance of the value of the assets.

In compliance with this order I hand you the accompanying general statement. It is scarcely possible that time will precisely verify the present classification of good, bad and doubtful assets. They are classified upon the best information I could obtain without neglecting other pressing official duties. My hope is that the assets may prove better than at present estimated.

The liability of directors as makers and indorsers of bills and notes is included in schedules A, B, C and D, and amounts $378,656,83 as makers or drawers, and $269,608,57 as indorsers. A portion of this indebtedness should be, and I am confident will be, arranged by third parties. Against other portions of it there are credits to individual depositors to a large amount. Of the bills discounted, $178,928,69 were past due when I took possession.

For my own benefit as well as that of all debtors and creditors of the bank, allow me to add a word or two as to their rights and my duties.

I cannot receive the check of a depositor in discharge of another person's indebtedness. Were this to be done some creditors of the bank would get pay in full, whereas the law says they must be paid pro rata.

I can pay no debt of the bank. My duty is to collect debts due the bank and pay over all moneys as soon as collected to the Treasurer of the United States The Controller of the Currency declares dividends to creditors and they are paid from the United States Treasury.

NUMBER XV.

It was no longer a secret, for the wedding day was appointed, and Agnes was to be the wife of the young Itinerant on our Circuit; and no marvel that she listened with tenfold interest to all of Mama's story of her early Itinerant life.

A group of five happy girls, that had from childhood played, worked, laughed, wept, sang and talked together, were waiting a few moments for Mama to come in. When Florence addressed Agnes, good naturedly, yet a little sarcastically, saying, "How could you consent to marry that wandering star and with him doom yourself to forever roam as it were in immeasurable space—For be it known, a Methodist minister never has nor expects to have a home of his own; and the next on the programme is the poor man's blessing, which has en verité become the Itinerant's heritage—a regiment of children, who are to be marched from one parsonage to another in regular file, every one or two years, as the Conference or the good Bishop sees best. The next not very pleasant feature, is the support, which, if it is not begging, is the next thing to it; for it comes a six pence here and a shilling there, just enough to clothe the little flock, or fill their little mouths with food. And then the idea of journeying through life singing "I'm a pilgrim and I'm a stranger; I can tarry, I can tarry but a night," while the echo comes back in doleful numbers of fault finding and complaining if you fail to be the pink of perfection on all occasions. And by the way, you will find young lady Agnes, that a minister's wife is not expected to be mortal like the rest of womankind." Tears were filling Agnes' eyes for her heart was fresh in its youthful love, and she imagined Florence was rather hard on her, but just as Florence was saying you will not catch me marrying a Methodist minister; Mama with her smiling face, entered and observing the tears rolling down her face, and hearing the last sentence uttered by Florence, said, "dont mind it Agnes, Florence will remember all this when the one comes along that suits her, and I shall not be at all surprised if it is not long before she marries a minister herself." Florence did not attempt to defend herself for none of us ever thought of withstanding even a suggestion from Mama. Miriam in her wise way remarked, "I shall laugh Agnes, at Florence when her minister comes along,as Mama says, for don't you remember old aunty Mc— said here once that she would rather have her daughters marry tin peddlers than Methodist ministers, and yet, one of them did marry an Itinerant, who, if he is ever half as good as her own husband, who with our own dear Papa, has borne the burden and heat of the day, he will be sure of heaven." "That will do Minnie," said Mama, "for I will assure you, there are few as good men as Methodist ministers, and there are many worse situations in life than to be the wife of a minister."

"Mama please resume the story of Ash grove circuit, of which you were telling us last evening, and that will end this controversy, for you never fail to make the Itinerant's pathway one of pleasantness"said Cora. At Ashgrove, which was on Cainbridge circuit, your brother, Olin, our first son, came on the wings of one bright morning to bless our household Little Miriam was wild with delight, and even Edith, young as she was, showed signs of joy at his superceeding her in the cradle.

I shall never forget our Presiding Elder on that district, who was one of the best of men. One Saturday he came to attend our Quarterly meeting, and as usual, was our guest. A lady had given Miriam, who was then about five years old, a love of a little bonnet and in her childish delight, as soon as brother Moriaty entered the house, she ran to show it to him. He looked at it a moment and then said, "this is not a Methodist bonnet and I cannot admit you into love-feast to-morrow morning if you wear it, for no one will take you for a little Methodist with that on." The tears came to her eyes as she lisped timidly, "I would like to wear this pretty bonnet brother Moriaty, but I want to be a Methodist." She could not be induced to wear it after that, and it was exchanged for a little brown quaker like one made of light brown silk. The next time the Presiding Elder came around the instant he entered the house she ran with it saying, "can I go into love-feast if I wear this? He said, "yes, they will all know you are a Methodist now," and catching her up in his arms, kissed her and laughed heartily at her earnestness to be recognized as a Methodist so young.

While on this circuit I remember of your father and myself being once invited to attend a dinner party at brother A—'s. In olden times it was the custom for all to stand around the table while the blessing was asked. I can never forget how my risibles were aroused on this occasion; we were all standing, and while some one was pronouncing the blessing, a young lady next me, whose nature was always brimful of merriment, touched my arm and pointed to the center of the table, where a large brown stone milk pan was placed containing a duck pie with the duck's feet all nicely dressed and hanging around the edge of the dish. This we were told was in genuine Irish style. I need not assure you that we enjoyed an ample dinner on the duck pie.

As the Presiding Elder was very intimate in our family, one day just as the conference year was closing he said to me, "If you had your choice where would you go next year?" I stood a moment and then modestly replied without really thinking it would be so. If I were to have my choice, it would be to go to my childhood's home, which was also my spiritual birth-place. There was nothing more said, but when the appointments at the conference were read, ours was Chatham circuit. I felt a glow of delight fill my soul at the thought of being again associated with olden scenes, so that the packing up and moving were an easy task, but on arriving there we found the Parsonage in a lonely place, quite a distance from the church and with all in a dilapidated condition. There was only one front room which was to be parlor, bed room, living room, study and kitchen. There was an unfinished back room that might answer as kitchen in summer. The roof extended nearly down to the ground giving no chamber room and adding to its gloomy and forlorn appearance. At first my heart sank within me, but we resolved to make the best of it. The society was not large and a good deal scattered so I had some spare time which I improved in making plain Methodist bonnets, such as I wore at the time; and the good sisters seeing mine, many of them desired theirs made after the same style, so I became an adept at bonnet making with quite a run of custom. The net profit was very convenient, as our salary was very small and my income in this way clothed myself and children.

The sainted bishop McKendree visited us in this humble home and we felt that his presence blessed the lowly abode. I seem now to see the heavenly smile that made his face radiant as an angel's, and methinks what luster must have been added when dying, he triumphantly uttered those memorable words that have since thrilled the hearts of thousands of saints, "All is well, all is well." We endeavored to sustain a prayer meeting once a week at our house, but it was a lonely year.

Chrysostom, when banished, said to a friend, "You begin now to lament my banishment, but I have done so for a long time; for, since I knew that heaven is my country, I have esteemed the whole world a place of exile. Constantinople, whence I am expelled, is as far from paradise as the desert whither they have sent me."

Freedman's Savings and Trust Company.

A Branch of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, incorporated by act of Congress, approved March 3, 1865, by President Abraham Lincoln, was opened in this city a year ago, at No. 114 Carondelet street.

The gallant manner in which it has weathered the late panic and financial storm should alone commend it to the colored population, for whose benefit it was created, as the proper place for them to deposit their savings.

Section five of its charter orders that a portion of the sums deposited (not exceeding two-thirds) be invested in the stocks, bonds, treasury notes, or other securities of the United States, and the Cashier HAS FULL AUTHORITY TO DRAW THE FULL AMOUNT OF HIS DEPOSITS, at all times.

The following named gentleman are the actual members of the Advisory Board of this Branch:

HON. THOS. J. DURANT, Chairman.

Hon Edward Heath,	Rev John Turner,

MONROE, OUACHITA PARISH,
May 22, 1867.

J. P. NEWMAN, D. D.

Dear Sir—I do not remember whether I promisd to write you from this parish in regard to the progress of reconstruction here, and as your co-laborer, Rev. Mr. Diossy, has spent some time here, and has communicated all that I could do, that would be interesting, I did not think I could say much that would interest you. We have now progressed so far that we can judge pretty well what will be the result of the registration, and of the animus of the people. We have met with no opposition and have been very cordially received, and treated with much respect by most of the citizens with whom we have become acquainted.

There are many more union citizens in this parish than we expected to find, from the reports we had previous to our arrival. We have found a number of good substantial union men in the town who have never swerved in their allegiance to the government, and it becomes very disagreeable when we find that according to our present instructions we cannot register many of them because some of them have at some time held office, and have against their will aided the rebellion. We have been hoping and expecting every day to get instructions that would relieve us from this dilemma, but none have yet come to hand. Some of the best union men are excluded, and the very persons who ought to be the delegates to the constitutional codvention. I hope that we shall receive instructions that will relieve us from this difficulty, for I think it quite unjust that we are obliged to register persons who have held high positions under the confederates, and say to us that they are only sorry that they did not succeed. We have registered up to this time, (Tuesday, A. M., 23,) 1273 colored, and 143 white persons Of the whites I believe not less than 100 would vote on the Republican side. The highest number of votes polled in this parish at my election since the war is 498. There is no probability that more than 400, and I think less than that number of white persons will register, a majority of whom are union men, and will vote for union candidates. Thus you may judge how easy it will be to carry this parish for union, and I believe radical delegates to the constitutional convention. It only requires concert of action, and proper attention to guide the vote of the colored electors. They are all on the right side. The idea that their employers and old masters can control their votes, is entirely fallacious. They not only cannot control their votes, nor can they make them vote for their candidates, except they deceive them, and this they will try to do, and will do so to a considerable extent unless the colored voters are instructed, and put upon their guard against the wiles of their adversaries. They will make them believe that the so-called "union reconstruction and conservative party," is the party who are their best friends, and they will deceive them in many other ways, but if properly put upon their guard they cannot be deceived to any great extent. They need canvassers from abroad to instruct them. They will pay much better attention to disinterested friends than those they have known, who live among them, although they are their true friends. The union party in Louisiana cannot do a better service than to send canvassers into every parish before the registration closes; and while the military will protect them, to give the needed instruction to the colored voters A single lecture on an appointed Saturday, P. M., in every parish would do the work. I would not be afraid to trust this parish without any canvassers, nevertheless it should not be neglected.

The enemy are very jealous and have not lost their feelings of bitter hostility, as you may learn by the leading article in the "Ouachita Telegraph" of the 9th inst, a copy of which was sent to you, and also to General Sheridan, and also another article headed, "Pernicious and unwarrantable interfereance of Registrar Edwards." This same editor is Mayor of Monroe. I do not think him worthy of notice.

We are progressing well and have nothing serious to complain of.

We have heard of several cases of abuse of colored men for registering One was seriously whipped, another shot at, another had severe cuts upon his cheek, another came with his face cut and bleeding in many places. We have referred them to the agent of the Freedmen's Bureau, but I have not yet heard of his taking any notice of any freedman's complaint since we have been here. A new agent I understand has just arrived here, and I hope is prepared to do his duty.

Very truly, yours,
Ansel Edwards.

MEDICAL.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,

127 CARONDELET STREET,

Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of dis ease, Chronic, and Acute

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years, in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient, if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievous y afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the Institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—offe tle.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet Street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city ☞ Consultation free—stamps not "forgotten." jfeb31

It is the Solemn Verdict of the Medical Profession, verified by popular experience, that in cases of Consumption, scrofula, and bronchitis, a pure medicine of Cod Liver Oil, like that manufactured by John C. Baker & Co's, No. 718 Market street, Philpdelphia, for the last thirteen years, affords the only hope of cure. MASON & HAMLIN,

MANUFACTURERS OF

CABINET ORGANS,

ALSO

PORTABLE ORGANS,

ADAPTED TO SECULAR AND SACRED MUSIC, FOR DRAWING-ROOMS, CHURCHES, SUNDAY AND DAY SCHOOLS, LODGES, &C., &C.

Uniting to a considerable extent the capacity of the Piano-Forte with that of the Pipe-Organ, and costing much less than either.

They occupy little space; are elegant as furniture; not liable to get out of order, and are securely boxed, so that they can be sent anywhere by ordinary freight routes, all ready for use.

Forty Styles, plain or elegant cases; one to twelve stops; Prices, $75, $90, $110, $125, $130, $1 0, $ 50, $160, $170, $200, $225, $250, $300, $435, $540, $550, $600, and upwards.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs were introduced four years since, and are a great improvement upon the Melodeon, Harmonium, and other reed organs, greatly excelling them especially in the excellent quality and variety of their tones; in power and quickness of action, and capacity for expression,

THEIR SUCCESS HAS BEEN ENTIRELY BEYOND PRECEDENT,

and proves how greatly such an instrument was needed. Again and again the manufacturers have been compelled to double their manufacturing facilities, until they have been increased six-fold. From the most eminent of the musical profession, the most distinguished pianists, organists, composers, and musical directors, the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs have received an amount and degree of commendation never before bestowed upon any similar musical instrument. More than two hundred and fifty of the most eminent musicians in the country have given written testimonials to the value of the improvements contained in them, and that they excel all other instruments of this class.

FIFTY-TWO GOLD OR SILVER MEDALS, or other highest Premiums have been awarded to Mason & Hamlin for the important improvements effected by them, and for the

SUPERIORITY OF THEIR INSTRUMENTS TO ALL OTHERS.

Constantly exhibiting their instruments in competition with others, they have been awarded the highest premium in every instance, but three or four.

For churches, sunday schools, etc., the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs are the instruments long wanted, of the very best quality, abundant power, not too expensive, nor liable to get out of order.

For private use, in drawing-rooms, &c., they are not less desirable, and are finding a place in the musical families of the principal cities.

They are adapted to a wider range of music than the piano, being fitted for all sacred music and for much secular music, while their quickness of action is such that the most lively, rapid music can be played on them, Then their cost is greatly less, as well as their liability to get out of order.

BRIEF EXTRACTS FROM OPINIONS OF DISTINGUISHED MUSICIANS.

I should think they would become very much sought after as parlor instruments as well as for public performance.—Sigismond Thalberg, the world-renowned Pianist. Sure to find its way into every household of taste and refinement which can possibly afford its moderate expenses. Far superior to everything of its class I have seen.—L. M. Gottschalk, the eminent Pianist. Such pure musical tone, promptness and smoothness of action and fine variety of effect, I have not found in any other instrument of the class.—S. B. Mills, the eminent Pianist. Really so excellent that there can hardly be much difference of opinion respecting them.—William Mason, the eminent Pianist. The best instrument of its class with which I am acquainted, and worthy a place in every drawing room. Harry Sanderson, the eminent Pianist. In every respect far superior to everything I have ever seen of the kind, whether in Europe or America.—Geo. Washbourne Morgan the eminent organist, N. Y. I can only reiterate what so many in the musical profession have said, that for equality, promptness and exquisite tone, they are unequalled.—John H. Wilcox, the eminent Organist, Boston. Surpasses everything in this line I have ever seen, whether French or American.—Jos Zundel, the eminent Organist, N. Y. The best reed instruments in the world are made in the United States, and your Cabinet Organs are greatly superior, and by far the best made here.—Max Maretzek, Musical Conductor, N. Y. Far surpasses all other similar instruments which have come under my observation.—Carl Zerhan, Musical Conductor, Boston. Exceeds in my estimation every other instrument of this general class. Thos. Hastings. I can recommend them with confidence.—Lowell Mason. As soon as the people become acquainted with the superior merits of your instruments, your only trouble will be to supply the demand.—Wm. B. Bradbury. I have never seen anything of the kind which interested me so much.—Geo. F. Root. Exciting much interest in musical circles, and already becoming the fashion. N. Y. Home Journal. The highest accomplishment of industry in this department. This is not only our opinion, but the unanimous verdict of the organists.—Boston Advertiser. A glorious instrument for the temple service, so readily secured as to be available for any congregation, and effective and beautiful as to meet the desires of the most refined and fastidious.—N. Y. Observer.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs must not be confounded with other reed instruments, from which they vary essentially, their superiority being largely derived from PATENTED IMPROVEMENTS, which cannot be employed by other makers. Among them are,

The AUTOMATIC BELLOWS SWELL, patented, a most important invention, and greatly the best swell ever devised being much more effective and easily operated than any other. The variety and beauty of effect of which it is capable, cannot be appreciated except from actual use. The many attempts to imitate or find a substitute for this swell, prove its value. None of them, however, approach it in excellence and simplicity.

IMPROVED SELF-ADJUSTING VALVES patented, secure much more perfect action, durability, and freedom from liability to get out of order.

WOOD'S OCTAVE COUPLET patented, in effect nearly doubles the power of the instrument in which it is used.

NOISELESS SAFETY VALVES patented, prevent the hissing sound often heard.

The IMPROVED COMBINATION REGISTER patented, gives great facility in drawing stops.

The Rustle of the Leaves.

BY LU BILLINGS SPALDING.

When winter's mottled mantle,
Of white and sombre brown;
Has slid from off the hill tops,
That have donned the golden crown;
I know it in my senses,—
And I tell it by the breeze,
For the voice of nature whispers
In the rustle of the leaves.

When Spring, with emerald slippers,
Has reached the summer bowers,
And has culled her share of sweetness.
From the early blooming flowers,
I know, when she's retreating,
By the summer sonnding trees,
There's something so confiding,
In the whisper of the leaves.

When Fall has gained the prestige,
With cloak of scarlet hue,
And hoards of monthling birdlings,
That are all too young to woo:
When the air is full of murmur.
And the humming of the bees.
I know that fall is with us,
By the rustling of the leaves.

When winter, bold and loveless,
In his halls of crystal cold.
Is fencing off his vineyards.
In such fantastic mould:
When all nature seems suspended,
And naught but winter breathes,
I tell it by the rustle
Of the icy hardened leaves.

When old age is crossing o'er us.
And the tree has lost its hue,
And the eye has lost its sparkle.
And the step its lightness too,
It comes in fitful whispers,
From the hoary human trees.
And I know that age is on us.
By the rustle of the leaves.

And thus, I sit a dreaming,
Of the days forever gone by:
Of flowers that used to blossom,
And the lovely summer sky,
So much to be remembered:
Such memento lives and breathes,
And will rustle on forever,
Like the rustle of the leaves.

Far Away.

"The land that is very far off."—ISAIAH XXXIII: 17.

Upon the shore
Of Evermore
We sport like children at their play;
And gather shells
Where sinks and swells
The mighty sea from far away.

Upon that beach
Nor voice nor speech
Doth things intelligible say;
But through our souls
A wisper rolls
That comes to us from far away.

Into our ears
The voice of years
Comes deeper, deeper, day by day;
We stood to hear
As it draws near
Its awfulness from far away.

At what it tells
We drop the shells
We were so full of yesterday.
And pick no more
Upon that shore,
But dream of brighter far away.

And o'er that tide
Far out and wide,
The yearnings of our souls do stray;
We long to go
We do not know
Where it may be, but far away.

The mighty deep
Doth slowly creep
Upon the shore where we did play,
The very sand
Where we did stand
A moment since, swept far away.

Our playmates all,
Beyond our call,
Are passing hence, as we too may,
Unto that shore
Of Evermore,
Beyond the boundless far away.

We'll trust the wave,
And him to save,
Beneath whose feet as marble lay
The rolling deep
For he can keep
Our souls in that dim far away.

Choice of Moses.

Sermon by Rev. Scott Chinn, colored. Delivered in the Marais street M. E. Church, June 16, 1867.

Choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. Hebrews, 11: 25.

Well now, my brethren and sisters, the choice of Moses ought to be the choice of every living man that God has made. Why? Because all are created in his image and bought with his blood: "Ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price." Then it becomes you to make the wisest choice that was ever made by any living creature. The Lord of heaven did'nt take so much pains with any other of the works of his hands. He made nothing else in his own image. Man is the master piece of his creation. And his Son loved us; and clothed with humility, he left the courts of glory to die for man. Now you must have faith in the Son of God. "This is the platform on which I'se stand and its the broadest platform in the universe. With Moses, make this choice to-night, for you may be called to die with a shorter notice that I was called upon to show my ignorance before this beautiful audience to-night.

In this chapter, God has set before us all the white-vested elders who had obtained a good report, and among them is the good Moses, who made the most glorious choice of all. He refused to be called the Son of Pharaoh's daughter, and this is applicable to us, as the world is before our eyes as she was before the eyes of Moses. Some people like to talk about their great parents, that they are the sons and daughters of such and such family. They feel so big that they won't accept a small place in a community, nor take a seat beside a poor black man. They say, my father was rich and great, and thy can't come down to small people

But not so with Moses. His was a mighty choice. He could have been a king, made the nations tremble before him, and bathed in all the glory of this God-forgetting world. He could have towered over all the biggest kings of that country; could have walked on gold; wrote with gold and silver pens, and been a monarch as big as Nebuchadnezzar. He looked where he could have mounted, but he would'nt make such a mistake. He was unlike the big fishes that turn against us in these days. He stuck to his people. He was not afraid of the king, and starts on his journey. Pharoah's daughter is not my mother and I won't own her. She took me out of my frail bed, and then sent for a wet nurse, and as the Lord would have it, his my mother came And when he became of age, felt that he was of the chosen seed, and so he left the old king and his daughter. He said: I don't want that crown of Egypt. O sinner, leave the world and all behind, and seek for that crown at God's right hand.

So Moses starts by faith and in a mountain sees a bush on fire, and walks up to it, but it is not consumed; he turns aside and hears a voice saying: "Moses, draw not nigh, for this is holy ground; I am the God of Abraham; go to Pharaoh and say, let my people go," but the old, wicked king would'nt do it. My brethren, you have been in the same fix. Many called, let my people go, but our old masters would'nt let us go, but God called and stirred up the people of the North, and then we all got free.

So Moses went to Pharaoh and threw down his rod and it turned into a serpent. Then the old king cried out, "bring me my conjurers and my sorcerers and when they came, their rods became serpents too, but Moses' serpent turned and licked up Pharaoh's serpents. (great sensation.) Sinner, you can't beat our God; He can beat all our enemies, the world and hell. But he would'nt let the people go; then the Lord sent ten plagues, and he riz up in the morning and found all his first-born dead. Send for Moses, said he, and let the people go, (shouts of glory,) and they went three days journey in the woods, but Pharaoh went after them. It was just so with us, old massa and missus used to let us; go into the woods for camp-meeting, but they were so full of the nigger, that it drove all religion out of them and they called us back again; but the God of heaven bombarded this South country till old massa and missus had to let us go. (Shouts.)

With six hundred chosen chariots, Pharaoh went after Isreal to the Red Sea, but God said to his people "stand still." The old Sea was before em, with its booming billows, eighteen miles wide, but the Lord stood between Pharoah and Moses, and one side of him was black as night and the other side was bright as glory; and he said to Moses, "smite the waters, and the mighty Jordan [Red Sea,] rolled up its walls on both sides, the east wind blew all night and Isreal entered the mighty channel. And then Pharaoh expected to find an easy channel, but God peeped through the dark cloud, looked off Pharaoh's chariot wheels and said to Moses, "stretch for thy land again," and the horse and the rider was cast into the deep. Then the mighty legislator and his people sung and shouted on the other side of the sea.

Now, children, you must be decided as Moses was; you must choose for yourself; you must refuse the crowns of this world and then obtain a brighter one above. But I tell you, you must be decided to tread the golden streets. Choose rather the affliction of God's people than the pleasures of this world. The Lord has been good to us as a people. He has given us a Moses in the people of the North. We were poor; looked poor, and our heads hung down, but the Lord has delivered us. Many have been our trials like the children of Isreal. Our old masters use to say that niggers were no more than apes and monkies; but that aint so, for you know that Simon was a black man and Jesus would'nt have an ape to carry his cross. But I can prove that we all are made of one blood. If we did'nt come from the first Adam, we did come from the second Adam, who is Christ, and who is the better Adam. This thing is true children, that we read of two Adams, but only one Eve; now they who say we did'nt come from this Adam and Eve of Moses, then our old masters must get us another Adam and Eve from which to come. Aint that clear brother Henry? But the same spirit that converted St. Paul, converted you and me, so we must be of a common stock. Any how, we shall all have a common grave, and the worms will eat the rich dead in the marble tomb, and the poor slave in his humbler grave. Cut my veins and the same kind of blood will flow from them as from a white man's veins. Some white folks say that there is a kitchen in heaven for niggers, but I think there is but one heaven for all, whether black or white, grizzle, gray or red. And let me tell you Catholics, that as there is no kitchen for the colored man in heaven, so there is no purgatory out of which you can come into glory. You are all on the road to heaven or hell. Do you suppose that the Lord will let you come scorched and singed out of hell to smoke and sneez us Christians to death in heaven? No he wont. So make the good choice of Moses to-night and save your souls alive in glory.

President Davis and the Emperor Maximilian.

Among the many names which have risen, spread, floated, and burst like bubbles, upon the tumultuous ocean of political life, during the decennial period that the world now is numbering, may be reckoned the names of the two adventurers, whose names we place (coupled with the so-called offices they held) at the head of this article. The beginning of the present decade, found them both wealthy, influential, prosperous, respected and happy; not exactly happy as the christian and philosopher esteem hapinness, but happy as the thoughtless tumultuous worldly throng esteem the term. Both were brave, talented and educated men, and both destined by fortune to occupy prominent positions upon the world's great theatre. Though reared in hemispheres dissevered from each other by boundless and inconstant seas; these two talented men, were intended to occupy prominent positions, upon the great political chess-board of American politics; devoting energy, wealth and talent, in enslaving and oppressing mankind.

One was reared beneath the bright and blue skies of independent America. Rocked in the cradle of Liberty, honored with high and most important offices by his countrymen; he had worn her uniform and fought for her sainted banner, and his constituents should ever have seen in him a self-sacrificing chieftain standing as a bulwark against rebellion and disaffection. But alas! for poor humanity, he left all his early love, forsook the traditional love of his father-land, and for the unhallowed purpose of making human slavery eternal, he drew the sword against the sainted banner of his fathers, and led his followers to battle against one of the most collossal empires the world ever saw, and sought to found an empire for slavery, upon the burning ruins of the fair Temple of Liberty.

The religious intelligence of Christendom, stood awe struck at the tremendous revolution, the slave power had inaugurated. The distant nations of the old world beheld with awe, the improper course the South was taking, and all of them but one stood back and preserved a strict neutrality, in the fearful tarife waged with so much skill and valor in the new and Western world. That one nation regardless of long years of past friendship, controlled by an imperial chieftain who had founded his magnificent Empire upon the ruins of a Republic, and in direct violation of a well understood American opinion, sent a scion of the house of Austria, Ferdinand Maximilian to found a throne, a new dynasty upon the fallen debris of a Sister Republic. One long shout of joyful ecstacy went up through all the host of rebeldom, when this policy became known and banded rebels, who pretended to be battling for human rights were jubilant over the approach of the Gallic Armada filled with bristling bayonets debarking the legions of a tyrant upon the shores of Mexico. No other nation beneath the sun could have sustained itself as ours did, against such an accumulated might of woe and public calamity. Pressed upon her Southern borders, by a brave and martial people, her ships burned at sea by swarms of privateers, appalled at home by such man as Valandingham, who were urging the people everywhere to cry for peace, and confronted by the legions of the so-called, Emperor Maximilian, the nation seemed upon the very verge of despair. But the nation had then a Ruler. A man whom God had raised up from the depths of Western obscurity, grasped firmly the reins of power. No dangers appalled, no adversities deterred him. He stood for and with his country against the swords of banded millions. And he developed the startling fact that the nation possessed resources of men and material exhaustless as the ocean waters or as the blood of patriots.

When at last the scene at Appomattox, gave back to the nation the whole of her old domain, and when the banners of Lee no longer animated the hearts of the Confederates, France was paralyzed with fright.

Should she like England in the Trent affair, succomb to the genius of Republicanism, and desert her old friend the so-called Emperor of Mexico, or would she risk her old effets cohorts against the two million veterans of the western world? She wisely chose the former, and left her favorite to battle with a people who were determine to live free or die.

Deserted by his faithless allies, Maximilian resolved to brave the battle tide alone, and not basely desert the few friends who had trusted in him.

He sent his wife away and like a hero girded himself with sword and helm, and enterered fearlessly the dread arena of war. Not thus with Jefferson Davis He spoke much of valor and of chivalry, and told the people that they must fight till the last man fell in the last ditch, but so soon as the sword of Lee failed to protect him, he fled from his palatial mansion in dismay, and his last act, so unworthy of a warrior, was the arraying himself in habiliements unmasculine, and disgracing himself by being taken in such disguise. Maximilian was taken sword in hand while battling heroically against the hosts of Escobedo, and although we may detest the spirit which sent him on his Western Mission, we are bound to admire the courage that he manifested by his personal disregard for self, and the sympathy he exercised for his personal adherents.

But both have fallen; fallen suddenly from solar heights. The cause of slavery and American monarchy are together gone, and the strong colossal giantess of the West shaking her flag of freedom, in defiance above her, can smile at the confusion she has created among tyrants. The present incumbent of the imperial throne of France may live to see the day when he will repent his course in regard to American policy. His throne rests upon the sides of a volcano. His ears may yet hear that terrific sound that frequently has made French tyrants fly. The genius of Republicanism is marching to a glorious destiny, and Vive la Republique may ere many years, be again proud Gallia's gathering strain.

Let us trust that many years may elapse before two more men may arise to agitate, disturb and convulse the American world to the same extent of those whose characters we have been considering—Jefferson Davis and Ferdinand Maximilian. "Requiescat in pace."

LOYALIST.

Letter from Baton Rouge.

BATON ROUGE, LA., June 12th, 1867.

Editor New Orleans Advocate:

DEAR SIR—

Thinking that a word from this city might be acceptable to you at this time and of interest to your readers, I venture a brief letter.

This is a quiet little city with nothing of importance to stir up excitement, and indeed for the past few months the only things here which have approached raising an excitement have been the political meetings which have been held here and the late riot. Yes we had a riot!—and in suppressing it, the city authorities have exhibited much more promptness in punishing the rioters. than was shown by those of your city in July last, for already have all the prominent parties engaged in the disturbance been tried and sentenced.

The disturbance began in a drinking saloon botween an old resident here whose name I do not know and our Mr. Regan who has been a popular and somewhat efficient speaker at the Republican meetings of late, and formerly a soldier of the U. S. A. Regan was struck and knocked over by the party above referred to. The fact becoming known to the colored people they came together in considerable numbers and Mr. Regan being somewhat under the influence of liquor at the time spoke to them perhaps indiscreetly, but the advice of other partiec very soon prevailed and the crowd departed quietly.

Regan and a Mr. Francis who was with him at the time were tried before the Municipal Court and sentenced to a a fine of $150, and cost each one seven days in the parish jail. The man who made the only attack which was made (that upon Mr. Ragan) was fined $25 which I understand he did not pay.

Here as elsewhere there is a great deal of misunderstanding of the real objects to be obtained by political organizations. The Republican party is a free colored man's party; they are unable or unwilling to come upon the true basis of Republicanism and ignore all old times prejudices—and distinctions and acknowledge merit as the only criterion by which to judge. It will be a great day for us when we can all act and think without any prejudices of race or color.

Mr. Conway's late visit to this city to organize the Loyal League would, it was hoped by many, harmonize the already discordant elements, but it failed entirely, widening instead of narrowing the breach. The freedman—all honor to thme however, are almost to a main right upon the main questions and harmonious and when they come to the test will do the right thing in the right way.

The schools in this parish are for the most part in a rather poor condition from the inability of the people to support them. There is in the city one free school for colored children supported by the M. E. Church which is tolerably well attended. Other schools are supported by tuition, but they are small and not as useful as they might be with a more experience class of teachers.

Lieut. Webster, agent of the Bureau, is doing all he can, to have good schools kept up here, but as the Bureau is unable to employ the teachers he can do very little.

Brother Hayward seems to be doing well here and is I believe generally liked by his congregation. There is an interesting Sabbath school in connection with his church, numbering some one hundred and twenty pupils and about a dozen teachers, both colored and white. They have been doing what they could to increase the comfort and convenience of their church and I hope ere long they will be able to finish it completely.

Yours, etc.,

UPSILON.

Ocean Telegraphs.

The following is a list of existing or projected telegraphs:

First—Is that of the American Atlantic Cable Telegraph Company; capital $10,000,000, in shares of $100 each; President, W. S. Worl, office 37 New street and 38 Broad street. The route proposed is from Cape Charles (opposite Fortress Monroe) to the Bermudas—six hundred and seventy-seven miles; thence to the Azores, eighteen hundred miles; and thence to Lisbon in Portugal, seven hundred and fifty miles. The advantages claimed by Mr. Worl, the projector, for this route are: that the cable can be laid in three sections, so that in case of accident to one section the other two would remain intact; that shipping stations at the Azores and Bermuda would be established, where masters of vessels could be placed in communication with their owners; that the business of these stations alone would pay handsomely; and that such stations would enable the line to be worked with four fold the rapidity of a single cable. The company have not yet decided as to the particular class of cable they will lay down, but we should not be surprised if one of the Bishop deep sea cables were adopted.

Second—The Ocean Telegraph Company (limited) of England; capital, £600,000, in shares of £20 each, with power to increase; of which Thomas Allen, electrician and engineer, is the promoter. The route proposed is from Falmouth, England, one thousand two hundred and forty miles to the Azores, and thence about the same distance to Halifax, Nova Scotia. The cable for this line (invented by Mr. Allen) is already contracted for and being made. It is a copper wire conductor, surrounded by small steel wires (instead of steel wire surrounded by small copper wires, as in Mr. Bishop's cables,) the whole envelopped in gutta percha and covered with tarred canvas. The Allan cable is five eighths of an inch in diameter, and will weigh in the ship nine and a half hundred weight per knot.

Third—The North American Telegraph Company [limited.] This is another English company. The route proposed is from Scotland to the Faroe Islands, 250 miles; thence to Iceland, 240; to east coast of Greenland, 743; to Labrador, 507; to Canada, 210. There will be two cables, sixty miles apart, laid by this company the whole submarine distance. It is stated that the water in mid-ocean is very deep, hence danger from icebergs will be only encountered near shore. It is calculated that messages will be sent by this line at half a crown [say 90 cents in currency] per word.

Fourth—The Western Union Company of America; what is generally known as the Russo-American line. This company's cable is to be laid from Russian America to Asiatic Russia, [across Behring's Straits] via some small island about half way between the two continents. The land lines are and have for two years been in process of erection. Already it has been erected for seven hundred miles north of New Westminster, British Columbia, and by the end of this year eight hundred miles more will be done. In Asiatic Russia the line is also being pushed with commendable energy. The American, Russian and British governments lend every facility to those engaged in this great enterprise, and all material for the company is everywhere admitted duty free.

Fifth—A French line via Lisbon, Madeira, Canary Isles, Cape Verdes Isles [with branch to the Senegal river in Africa] across the Atlantic ocean to Cape San Roque in Brazil, and to Cayenne in French Guinea is also on the tapis. From San Roque land lines will doubtless run to Rio Janeiro, and to all parts of South America.

Sixth—International Ocean Telegraph Company—projected by the renowned Major General William F. ["Baldy"] Smith—office 41 Wall street. This line has just received a concession from the Spanish government. The route for this cable is from the mainland of Florida by way of the Islands of Sandy Key and Key West to Cuba, the distance between the two latter being only of 87 miles; thence to St. Domingo, thence to Porto Rico. Also from Cuba to Jamaica and thence to the Isthmus of Panama. The organization of this company is: General Wm. F. Smith, president; Alexander Hamilton, junior, vice president; Alfred Pell, jr., secretary; M. L. Delafield, treasurer; Directors. Alexander Hamilton, Cambridge Livingston, Charles Knap, O. K. King, James A. Scrymser, Alfred Pell, jr., Maturin L. Delsfield, Wm. F. Smith and Wm S. Blodgett. While speaking of this cable it may be well to mention that under the auspices of Ex-president Murillo, of Colombia, several hundred miles of telegraph wires were projected and are now partially completed across the lofty Andes—at one point in the crossing of which the wires will be thirteen thousand feet above sea level! A grand chain of telegraphs running from Patagonia up on both sides of South America to Columbia, and from Behring's Straits, down through Russian America, British America, Washington Territory, Oregon, California, Mexico and the Central American Republics, will doubtles connect with this line as well as with the Russian American line.

"Seventh—A line from New Zealand and Australia, running from island to island of the Sunda Group to Singapore, thence connecting with the line of telegraph running from the East Indies to England. When the Russo-American line is completed, a land branch through China and Cochin-China to Singapore, will also probably be constructed. Several of those companies were organized or partly so, some time ago, but successful laying and working of the two great American telegraph cables has given them an impetus never before experienced."

Chrysostom, when banished, said to a friend, "You begin now to lament my banishment, but I have done so for a long time; for, since I knew that heaven is my country, I have esteemed the whole world a place of exile. Constantinople, whence I am expelled, is as far from paradise as the desert whither they have sent me."

"The Sparkling Cup."

Said Solomon, "Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth its color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright. At last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." O intemperance! that habit of folly, what sorrow it has caused. It has dimmed the monarch's crown, withered the scholar's laurels, blasted the statesman's hopes, and robbed the chieftain of his hard won fame. Under this deadly Upas, fair youth has faded, and the beauty of womanhood has departed In this Lethean stream, giant intellects have grown dormant, and the dearest ties of earth have been forgotten In the train of this worst of tyrants, are poverty, dishonor, disease, death and hell. "Who hath wo? who hath sorrow? who hath contentions? who hath babbling? who hath wounds without cause? who hath redness of eyes? They that tarry long at the wine; they that go to seek mixed wine."

As we write, what wrecks of human greatness and beauty float by on memory's stream. In our school days, we knew a youth, the darling son of a devoted father. He was nature's favorite. Gifted beyond ordinary men, wise above his years, he was the pride of his classmates and the delight of his teachers. His was a golden-mouth oratory; and he, the petted, spoiled child of popular favor. Graduating with honor, he soon rose to distinction in the legal profession. Tall, straight, gracefully formed, he was an Apollo-Belvidere. Women admired him, men praised him, Fortune smiled upon him; the enchantress of fame chose him as her ward. But alas! while yet a student, the "sparkling cup" bewitched him, and-step by step he became a daily drunkard. Ruined soul, mind and body, fame departed, companions forsook him, patrons abandoned him, poverty seized him, disease smote him, hell claimed him. On a June day, in '59, he stood at our door and begged a shirt, which was pawned for the fatal cup, and then amid the horrors of delirium tremens, he died. Alas! my friend, alas!

In the first year of our ministry, we had a noble friend, whose locks were as black as the raven's wing, whose eye was like the eagle's, whose mien was majestic, whose mind was massive and heart generous. By marriage he possessed a fortune; his home was a palace; around him sons and daughters rose up to do him honor. But in an unguarded moment, the sparkling bowl of friendship stole upon the hours of domestic happiness, and he became the slave of a passsion that bound him as with bands of iron. Neglectful of business, his wealth took wings and fled away; indifferent to the opinions of others, the withering breath of public denunciation blighted his reputation; careless of domestic morals, murder threw its ghastly shadow on his household; and after years of accumulated sorrow, and when all was wreck and ruin around him, he groaned out his soul to God

But let us lift the curtain and look upon the desolate family. His once beautiful bride, drank in secret the cup of sorrow to its dregs. He had won her in the morning of life, when the light of genius lit upon his bewitching counte nance. They went to the altar with hearts of tenderness and love. Heaven smiled upon their union; hope sat like a bird of auspicious omen, high in the green leaves of fancy, and poured into their bosoms the sweet harmony of a terrestrial elysium; and their happiness lay like an ocean of pearls and diamonds in the embrace of the future But alas! the voice of revelry charmed him and the song of the drunkard became his delight. Yielding to the bright eyed charmer, he forgot his bridal vows, and home became a desolation. With his once happy bride, all now was lost. Hope, pride and fortune, all had departed, and her heart was a little city of ruins. Brimful of passion and spirits, he returned home to make day mournful and night hideous. Where the grateful breath of prayer should have borne on high their wants and woes, he poured forth a torrent of curses on her devoted head; where hymns of praise should have wafted to heaven the gratitude of the soul, he shouted the song of the drunkard to the impious orgies of vice; where the Bible should have dispensed its heavenly wisdom, he opened the tablets of a heart on which was written the history of wretchedness and wo. His half-clad, starving children fled from corner to corner as if some evil spirit had made its appearance, and even his faithful dog skulked away with the growl of anticipated blows. Death came and claimed its bloated victim; creditors seized the small remnant of a once princely fortune; the widow was left in poverty, and the children thrown upon the charities of a hard and friendless world

In a city like this, where revelry rules the social ring, how many are the victims of the "sparkling cup." Perhaps in no city of the Union are there so many habitual drinkers as here. Without exaggerating it may be said, all drink from the intoxicating cup. And what specimens of wretched humanity do we meet with on every hand. Those who have seen better days are now penniless; men who have stood high on the eminence of public honor, are without reputation. How the heart mourns as we look on the long roll of inebriated young men, whose health is impaired, earnings squandered, character blasted, reputation gone, and who are the slaves of a passion that is stronger than life.

What can be done to remedy an evil so prevalent and enormous? Are we not to look to our mothers, wives and sisters as the true reformers in the cause of temperance? If the hand that rocks the cradle, rocks the world, then woman rather than man must lead the van of social reforms. Her influence is all prevailing and omnipotent. Overcoming her own instinct to please, let her refuse the "sparkling cup" to the guests of her board, and from infancy rear her sons to sobriety. She is "mistress of the situation." Her word is law in the social world; her example is irresistable to the sterner sex. Man follows woman. Let her preference be shown for the temperate, and men will bow to the sceptre of her choice.

The family is the fountain of society. As is the family, so is the state. Paley has justly said, that in the "family are the rudiments of an empire." The State springs from the household. What is therein taught finds expression in public opinion and in law. Every child is the outward expression of his parents, and the habits of men, women and children as displayed in society are but transcripts of what they are at home. No youth armed with principles implanted in his nature around the hearthstone, will likely yield to the weaker principles casually inculcated in the outer-world. Sober parents are likely to have sober children. Then we call upon the mothers, wives and sisters of New Orleans. to lead the van of this reform. Without your influence, all other efforts will prove impotent. Let the woes that your sex are suffering, inspire you with a nobler daring; let the happiness of many homes, kindle your zeal; let the hopes of husbands, sons and brothers, inspire you to do and dare for God and humanity.

First Negro Jury in Texas, Galveston June 15.—The first negro jury was empanelled to day at Mavasota—a full jury of blacks.

Intolerance.

Were we required to express in one word the leading characteristic of the heretofore ruling classes of the South, we should designate the one which forms the caption of this article. It is the nature of despotism to be intolerant. The petty despotisms which formed the distinguishing feature of southern society furnished a luxuriant field for the growth of this principle. Although the liberty to speak and act was professedly secured by constitutional guarantees to every citizen, and although the immensely disproportionate development of the South as compared with the North invited investigation, still no discussion was allowed, and no opposition to its peculiar institution was for a moment tolerated. Every lip was sealed; the individual, the pulpit, the rostrum and the press were under bonds' and intolerance was the law.

It demanded of the pulpit to support slavery from a Bible dedicated to freedom; of the politician to sustain it in defiance of the sublime manifesto under which our nation sprang into life; of the press to defend a system that was eating at the foundations of public intelligence; of every citizen to contend for a principle that was making him a slave, and last and worst of all required of the black man, the special victim of its cruel wrongs, to repress each manly sentiment and yield himself to be a beast. Thus beneath all the enactments of civil law, and stronger than statutes or constitutions, was extended throughout the South the unwritten but clearly understood laws of a matured social despotism. The roll of its iron wheel crushed manhood from the slave and brought retribution swift and terrible to the white man who dared question the beneficence of its hideous rule.

This spirit of desperate, unreasoning intolerance animating the ruling classes-is the key to all the mysteries of secession. The masses did not desire rebellion. To them it seemed, as in truth it was, a mad adventure, a rash plunge in to an abyss of fearful evils which they were unwilling to take. But they were paralyzed before the fierce spirit of audacity which ruled the South, and, without organization or concert among themselves, they were swept before the coming storm as clouds are driven before the wind. It was the audacity of intolerance which secured a united South and drove all classes madly into a common struggle. And as intoler ance hurled the unwilling masses into a contest they disapproved, so it kept them there long after all rational hope of success had fled. Needlessly and causelessly it drove the ploughshare of ruin through the finest sections of the South, nor would it relax its pretensions till, every resource exhausted, the entire South fell into the hands of the North, and the institution for which it fought was utterly overthrown.

This same domineering spirit, untaught by disaster, uninstructed by past blunders, yet lingers among these fallen but still aspiring leaders of the South. As by their rashness they made it possible to destroy slavery so by their unreasonableness in prescribing the yankee, vilifying loyal ministers, insulting teachers of the freedmen, breaking up republican meetings and threatening to revive the high-handed measures of the past, they have brought back military rule and secured the enfranchisement of their former slaves. Thus the violent spirit fostered by slavery has turned to its own destruction. The ambitious demagogues who one year ago rejected so proudly the congressional amendment to the Constitution have by that hasty act broken forever their power over the Southern masses. Their blind intolerance has affected at once a revolution, it might otherwise have taken an age to accomplish.

But, incapable of learning, they do not seem to realize how complete is the revolution which they have made necessary or how totally events are setting them aside.

With a sublime unconsciousness of the progress of events, with the ruling passion still strong in death and blinded with rage as they feel the sceptre being wrested from their hands, they still try to overawe and intimidate. But their day is past and the South, amid her ruins, is looking not for men to plunge her into deeper quagmires of gloom, but for those who can lead her into the highlands of a new prosperity.

That prosperity can only be found in the light of liberty and universal tolerations and to that we are rapidly approaching. When the freedmen became fully free men, when every man shall be at full liberty to think and act, when every citizen shall be allowed the undisturbed exercise of his vested rights, when the southern, be he black or white, can follow the leadings of his own judgment in the selection of his party affiliations, and when petty annoyances shall no longer compel to unwilling acts which the mind and conscience disapprove, then and then only will true prosperity return to bless this land. Immigration, capital, enterprise are all waiting the touch of the magic wand of toleration. When that shall come, when the southern masses, rising in their might, shall set aside the fossils who cannot learn and shall call to the helm men who are in sympathy with the spirit of the times, then will the true emancipation of the South commence.

The Republican Convention.

The Republican party in Louisiana is at length permanently organized. The State Convention has met and adjourned. The action of that body is now before the people for their approval. Composed mostly of men of color, who had assembled for the first time in such a capacity, the convention reflected great credit upon a race which has just emerged into freedom. There was less excitement, less wrangling and fewer angry words than usually characterize similar bodies formed entirely of white men. This promises well for the future. Some complain that the number of white delegates was too small; this may be true, yet the deficiency cannot be attributed to any opposition to them on the part of the newly enfranchised citizens. The white Republicans of this city are notoriously inactive in political matters. Had they joined the several ward clubs, more of them might have been delegates; but, theystood aloof from such organizations, and hence they have no just ground of complaint.

The platform adopted by the convention, advocates the perfect equality of all men before the law—indorses the acts of the thirty-ninth and fortieth congress—requires all candidates for office to pledge themselves in favor of the eligibility of all men to hold office without respect to race or color—insists upon the rights of all citizens to sit as jurors, practice in all professions and enjoy all privileges of public entertainment, and all facilities of traveling—favors the re-building of our levees, the immigration of foreigners and the division of lands into small farms—calls upon congress to repeal the Cotton tax—insists that our public schools shall be open to all children, whether white or black—indorses the eight hour system of day labor—demands a revision of the Civil Code and Code of Practice—favors the payment of the National debt—calls upon Congress to disfranchise the leaders of the late rebellion for a period of at least ten years—advocates the continuance of military rule until the State is reconstructed on the above named principles—demands that one half of all the public offices in the State shall be filled by men of color, and pledges the party to discountenance any attempt of any class of citizens to assume the exclusive control of any department of the State Government to the exclusion of any other class. Such is a synopsis of the platform adopted by the late State convention.

The convention also appointed a State Central Executive Committee composed of one hundred and two members, fifty-one of whom are white, and fifty-one are colored. This committee held its first meeting in Economy Hall on the evening of the 19 inst., and on ballot, the following gentlemen were duly elected: President, His Excellency, Benjamin F. Flanders; Vice-Presidents, O. J. Dunn, and Aristide Marie; Recording Secretary Wm. Vigers; Auditor, J. L. Montieu: Treasurer, Wm. Baker.

By this election, Governor Flanders stands at the head of the Republican party in Louisiana. He is in the proper sense, a representative man and enjoys a national reputation. Liberally educated, familiar with the duties of public life, a well tried loyalist, a life-long friend to the colored race and a man of unimpeachable integrity, the position which Mr. Flanders holds will give joy to every true Republican in the land. And it is a matter of congratulation, that the committee is composed of some of the best citizens in our State, whose well known ability will insure the triumph of the party, whose representatives they are. Then Republicans, to the great work before you! Let no one divide you. Work hard; work always, and the victory will be yours.

Shall Congress Meet?

The opinion of Attorney General Stanbery, regarding the power of Military Commanders to make removals from office in the late rebel States, is received with alarm by all loyal men, as it foreshadows the policy of the President of the United States on the subject of Reconstruction. The removal from office of those appointed by General Sheridan and the reinstatement of those displaced by him, will plunge this city and State into confusion and anarchy. Where has Mr. Stanbery been since the adjournment of Congress? One of the first acts of General Sheridan was the removal of Monroe and others. Mr. Johnson was advised of these removals months since, and if they were to be reversed, why this long delay? During this time, the whole machinery of our city and State governments, has been changed, and men have been appointed to fill the various offices who are discharging their duties in a manner creditable to themselves and the State; and if it is the intention of the President to interfere, it should have been done before. The present incumbents are laboring to restore the prosperity of the city and improve its sanitary condition; their removal at this time would produce serious results.

We have had confusion and misrule enough, and we now look to the Congress of the United States, who have the power to protect us, to give us additional legislation, which the occasion requires, Let those who made the laws, give us a supplemental act, explanatory of all doubtful points, and if the power does not already exist with the Military Commanders to remove incompetent and dangerous men who may be in office, that power should be conferred.

It has been intimated that there are those who oppose the reassembling of Congress; that Andrew Johnson should have an opportunity to show his hand; and if he removes Sheridan and revokes his orders, to impeach him. We hope the Congress of the United States will not be led into this error. The loyal people of Louisiana protest against such a course; they cannot afford to be sacrificed for such a purpose. Congress has the power to prevent Mr. Johnson doing wrong, and they can adopt whatever measures are required to complete the reconstruction of the State. If the information is correct, that Mr. Johnson proposes to reverse the action of the Military Commanders, we appeal to those, into whose hands the people have committed the power, to exercise it to prevent this great calamity. The State of Louisiana is to-day on the verge of bankruptcy, without money in her treasury, or the necessary credit to sustain her charitable institutions; without the means to support the insane, who in all probability, before a week elapses, will be driven out upon the cold charities of the world; and with no money to support the Penitentiary, whose inmates will have to be turned loose upon society. Under these circumstances it is no time for the Congress of the United States to abandon the loyal people of Louisiana, whose prosperity is indissolubly linked with that of the State. We unhesitatingly indorse Gen. Sheridan's course, as demanded by the necessities of the hour, and have no doubt he will be sustained by Congress, and the loyal people of the North. The officers removed by him did not enjoy the respect of those who elected them, while those appointed by General Sheridan, not only command the entire confidence of loyal men, but the best portion of those who were lately identified with the Confederate cause. Let Congress meet in July.

The fate of Maximilian—No Empire on the Continent.

The latest from Queratero brings us the news that while the army and a vast majority of the people of Mexico demand the execution of Maximilian, and his leading Generals; Jaurez is personally anxious to say at least the life of the former. It is quite certain that no execution will take place until the cities of Mexico and Vera Cruz are occupied, so that no opportunity for retaliation can be improved.

So dies away the empire, the history of which fills a full page in God's Book of nations. If it be true as is so often suggested, that the Great Ruler set up this Republic of ours on the Continent, so long reserved by him, and so lately discovered, the result has shown that it could not have been any part of the design, that an empire should be our nearest neighbor, sustaining such doctrines as inviolability of Church property—Roman Catholic the sole Religion—censorship of the press—no immigrants except from Catholic countries, etc. A dictator or emperor only subject to the Church.

In opposition to these plans of the Ruler, with reference to the American continent, Louis Napoleon on the 25th of July, 1862, through one of his ministers by letter, asserted that, "the development of the United States must be arrested," and accordingly improving the occasion of our intestine troubles he sought to establish himself, (through intervention) on our borders, and so conveniently as to absorb at the proper moment the Southern cotton States. He accordingly used as a cat's paw the arch-duke Maximilian, having over pursuaded him by his pictures of the wealth of Mexico, the unanimity of the demand of the people that he should be their Emperor, and by his promises that he would sustain him to the end.

The misguided Archduke has fallen and Napoleon stands convicted before the world of treachery and bad faith.

The Mexican empire, the idiot brother of the so-called confederacy gasps and dies midst the lamentations of the chivalry, and the latter having through their friends at the White House succeeded in stullifying the nation, have induced the the most lacrymose wailings over the imagined fate of Maximilian; whereupon the secretary of State demands of the Mexican President that he shall not punish murder in his own country, and that he shall not treat royal assassins impolitely.

This government having thus committed itself through its President and secretary of State to this new interpretation of justice, and having before the world prayed Mexico to spare her great enemy has been fairly entrapped by the aiders and abettors of Empires and Rebellions, and so found it advisable in order to be consistent to connive at the release of our own great enemy, Jefferson Davis. Both Maximilian and Davis were the advocates of principles, which involved the enslavement of mind and body. Both were the enemies of social, religious and political progress. Would not their compulsory death in part atone for the untold account laid up against them in the past? While over their dust the finger board shall point to the inscription:

Here lies two mortal chiefs,
Who fought against God.
So shall their followers lie.

Notwitstanding the belief is too general that the Mexican people are wholy or semi-barbarous, we have the information that quite like civilized captors a court-martial was ordered for the trial of Maximilian simultaneous with the ssue of the latter's proclamation to his late socalled country-men. We accord to him most of the qualities which pertain to a noble and generous man, choosing to attribute his famous decree to the bad influence of this chief, Marquez Miramon and others. Cetainly his manly act of remaining in Mexico to share the lot of those who had adopted his course, stamps him as a man of courage and magnanimity. And the honesty with which he acknowledges his real convictions in what he supposes to be his last moments, is truly touching.

Rev. Dr. Newman will preach in the Hall of the House of Representatives, to-morrow, at 11 o'clock.

News.

Dispatches to the Associated Press.

From Washington—Washington, June 19.—The department of state has information that the court martial in the case of Maximilian has been suspended for the present.

Judge Fisher decided that the prosecution in the Surratt trial need not furnish a list of witnesses to the defendants, and against the right of retaining witnesses for cross-examination at any time during the trial. The fact has been developed during the argument that the prosecution have seventy witnesses.

Charles H. Blain, watchman at the Vermont Central railroad depot, testified that two men, one of whom left a handkerchief marked "J. H. Surratt," slept on the benches on the night of the 17th of April.

Carroll Hobart, conductor on the Vermont Central railroad, testifies that he carrried the same two men, one of whom looked like the prisoner, toward Canada.

Counsel agreed to admit railroad time table as evidence.

John T. Triplett—Heard conversation between Mrs. Suratt and the prisoner. Heard Mrs. Suratt, say she would give any one a thousand dollars to kill the president. Thought he heard the prisoner, when there was a Union victory, curse the Union army. To this the defense objected, but the prosecution wanted to show malice and the evidence was admitted. Further evidence, intended to confirm the impression of Surratt's presence here on the night of the assassination, was heard, but nothing striking was developed.

Court adjourned.

The cabinet session lasted from ten o'clock, until half past two, when the president, Stanton, and Stanberry had a prolonged interview

General Pope telegraphs General Grant that it is untrue that negroes have been appointed to the municipal government of Mobile, but that the offices are filled from the best people of the city. He states that General Swayne is on his way to Washington.

Nothing authentic has transpired regarding the cabinet meeting to-day.

The executive order is not yet completed. Isaac Newton, late commissioner of agriculture, died to-day.

Rear Admiral Stephen C. Rowan has been assigned to the command of the Asiatic squadrons.

The internal revenue receipts to-day were $546,000.

Local and Southern News.

The President has pardoned General Longstreet.

Entered on His Dtties.—Mr. D. W. Cheek, the newly appointed Lieutenant of the Second District police, entered on the discharge of his duties, relieving Charles Bamel, at 9 o'clock last Monday morning.

Opening a Fire Plug.—Antonio Claretta who violated an ordinance by opening a fire plug on Canal street, was fined $25 by Recorder Ahern.

On Sunday last the work of distributing poisoned sausages about the city was commenced, for the purpose of killing off all straggling dogs that are not muzzled.

Sending off Military Prisoners.—General Mower is clearing out the police jail [used for military prisoners, and a part of the parish prison] in this city at a lively rate. In Special Orders No. 89 he orders nineteen prisoners to be taken to Ship Island under guard; four to Vicksburg and nine to Galveston. All of them are soldiers.

Deaths during the Week.—The total number of deaths during the week ending on Sunday morning last, was 128, of which number 2 committed suicide, 1 died of gunshot wounds, 3 were accidentally drowned, 3 died of cholera, 6 of cholera infantum, 13 of consumption, 2 of small pox, 13 were stillborn, and the balance died of various ordinary diseases; 47 were under one year, 14 between 1 and 5, 2 between 5 and 10, 5 between 10 and 20, 11 between 20 and 30, 13 between 30 and 40, 6 between 40 and 50, 11 between 50 and 60, 7 between 60 and 70, 1 between 70 and 80, 3 between 80 and 90, and 8 whose ages were not reported; 91 were white persons, 29 colored, and 8 not classified; 79 were natives of the United States, 10 of Ireland, 5 of France, 3 of Prussia, 3 of Scotland, 2 of Germany, 1 of Holland, 1 of Russia, 1 of Spain, 1 of Sweden and 21 whose nativities were not reported.

The deaths for the previous week were 109, and the increase last week was therefore 19.

Assailed by a Woman.—Mr. Barker after leaving the court-room and going down Lafayette toward Carondelet street, yesterday morning, was assailled by an old Irish woman, who entreated him to give her the money that she had deposited with him. Receiving no satisfactory reply, the old woman became desperate and clutching hold of Mr. B.'s clothes as he moved along, applied all manner of epithets to him. Mr. Barker managed to escape from his unpleasant predicament by getting into a street car.

New Masonic Hall.—The brick masons are clearing away the debris of the old Carrolton Rail road depot, coner of Triton Walk and Apollo street, in the First District, and we understand that the Masonic Fraternity will immediately commence the erection of a hall which shall equal, if not surpass, any other structure of a similar character in the United States.

Ex-Mayor Monroe has gone back to New Orleans with a long tale, his compensation for the cropping of his ears. He uttered what is vulgarly called a whopper when he said at a public meeting that he had not met a single man in the north who indorses the course of General Sheridan. Where could he have been? He found that Radicalism was virtually dead, and that the people of the North were trembling lest they should be put under military rule. Monroe told a great many other whoppers, and might have told many more, had not the gas been turned off, and thus fittingly put a stop to the ex-mayor's invention.—N. Y. Tribune.

Opelousas District.

A long journey—the overflow—incidents.

The months of May and June were devoted to Conferences in Northern and Western parishes of the State, requiring several hundred miles of travel; my route was up the Mississippi, Red, Black and Ouachita rivers to the neighborhood of Arkansas, through much of the overflowed section. The Parishes on the Mississippi could not be visited at this time because of the high water. Some good societies gathered by brother Fenner in Madison and Carroll have been broken up; the people fleeing to places where life could be sustained. I had seen overflow, but along the Black and Ouachita rivers, it was much worse than in the lower part of the State. An immense body of water, was rushing through the great crevasses above and below Vicksburg, submerging that large alluvial area east of the Ouachita river; comprising several parishes. The tract between this river and Texas is mostly high land, much of it piney woods, not of great agricultural value, but safe at least from these calamities. Just after entering Black river, we put ashore some freight on a strip of land a few feet wide; for a farm several miles off, across a wide expanse of water. At another place, a barrel of flour, and a few sacks of corn, were left. The house was nearly surrounded by water. Some cattle were gathered on a small mound, others straggling along the narrow ridge disconsolately seeking food. The family standing upon the front gallery, gazed after the boat, as though their last hope was going from them, and the very house dogs looked wistfully, as we sped away.

It was strange to see smoke ascending from chimneys, and families moving about in houses, when the tips of the fences were just visible out of the water, and no dry land was near. The river in general spread out on both sides, forming a vast lake, bounded by the distant woods, at intervals relieved by a cluster of trees or a hamlet. At one place was a large herd of cattle, standing closely on a very uncomfortably small piece of high land, in front of a fine dwelling. It suggested an anxious thought. How are they to live, our anxiety was soon relieved by seeing on the strip of land near by, four or five bales of hay recently landed by some steamer; indicating that the stout hearted planters, were prepared to stand the seige a little longer. Soon after this, the steamer stopped at an opening in the woods, two rude boats came in sight and coming alongside, a lot of forage and other freight were dispatched to some sufferers far interior—if not inland. Government rations were left at different points in generous quantities, and will go far to alleviate distress.

Trinity—Harrisonburg—Danville, Monroe—A bright boy—Soldiers.

At Trinity, a roast of beef and a basket of cabbages were put out. The place is situated at the intersection of the Tensas, Black, Ouachita, and Little rivers, and was all under water. A high Indian mound, some 40 feet, and some smaller ones were places of refuge for the stock, a few huts and some wood piles, skiffs, scows, pirogues were moving about. Several houses of some pretension were standing partly above the water. I noticed one large two story house, one brick store, several small dwellings, and a brick building with the appearance of a church. It has been under water more than a month. There is higher land about 40 miles back, but between that and the river, many tasteful and comfortable homes have been made desolate.

Harrisonburg, the next place, is on a high bluff, and was strongly fortified during the war. Under the hill several houses were afloat. I saw on the bluff one large dwelling and a frame church, the other houses were very inferior. It has a fine back country. Above this the Boeuf river enters and several smaller streams. Danville, our next stopping place, is on a steep hill side, few houses, and a very little business. I had a talk with a bright nine year old boy, who came on board below. He said the water was waist deep in the house he had left, had to put up scaffolds, and then remove to the gin house, they had no bread he said, but some meat. He had a distinct recollection of having been twice to church, and never to school. Mother had taught him some, and he could read a little; Father was killed in the war, Uncle took care of them now. He meant to be a Doctor, when he grew up, and take care of mother and his little 4 year old sister. As we passed along, several families with the remains of their goods and stocks came on board. As we go farther up the river, there is higher land, and much fine looking country, but at intervals even near Trenton and Monroe, there are overflowed places. Near the latter place a company of U. S. soldiers is encamped. The sight served greatly to discompose my fellow voyagers, and many remarks were made of a rude character, about the U. S. Government and its oppression. In fact the political atmosphere on board the 'Vicksburg' is not as pleasant to Union men as it might be. Several fine plantations may be seen near Monroe and the place is one of considerable business. Two large Hotels, rows of fine stores, two churches, many pretty dwellings and two newspapers, make it the most important place in that part of Louisiana. The only portion of the Vicksburg and Texas Rail Road in operation is a twenty mile section from Monroe eastward. Nothing can be done in that matter until the levees are built. Much rain has fallen here lately which together with the river water will probably destroy all the crop. The water is however, said to be subsiding, and there may be time to replant corn and cotton.

General Monthly Meeting of the Union Sons Relief Association of Louisiana.

New Orleans, La., June, 17, 1867.

Meeting called to order by the President at 20 minutes to 7 o'clock P. M.

Henry Clay, President presiding.

Meeting opened with prayer by Rev. Emperor Williams; Constitution read.

Proceedings of last General Monthly meeting read and approved.

Proceedings of the Board of Finance meeting read and approved.

Proceedings of Female officers', meeting read and approved.

Proceedings of Quarterly meeting, read and approved.

Proceedings of Board of Officers' meeting read and approved.

After which the Secretary called the Roll and collected dues and fines.

The President then said as this was the end of our year, and as the reports of all business, and transactions of the Association done during that time, should be read at this meeting, but as it was adopted at the Officers' meeting that the election for Officers should commence not later than 9 o'clock, and as it is very near that time now, he would ask the Association to postpone reading said reports until the next Quarterly Meeting.

Moved by Wm. B. Runel, seconded by W. H. Alexander, that the annual reports be laid over until next Quarterly Meeting. Adopted.

The President stated that there was a vacancy in the nomination for Board of Trustees caused by Mr. Fields being nominated as Vice-President. Mr. Henry Edwards nominated Edward Johnson to fill the vacancy. Adopted unanimously.

The President announced the house in order to receive new members.

The following persons were received as members of this Association after conforming to the Constitution and By-Laws.

Mrs. Clara Jackson, age 39 years, born in Louisiana, Residence 127 Congress street. Mrs. Menta Brown, aged 40 years, born in Maryland, Residence 117 Basin street.

The President then called the Commissioners of election to prepare the polls, he then announced the house in order for election, the President then withdrew from the chair, to allow the Vice-President to preside over the meeting during the election.

The Vice-President said to have order, and to avoid confusion, he will not allow any more than one bench of members to come at the polls at once.

The Secretary and Commissioners said they were prepared to receive the votes of the members for President and Vice-President.

The Secretary then read the names of the Candidates for the office of President and Vice-President:

Henry Clay for President, David Douglas for Vice President; W. P. Runel for President; Edward Fields for Vice-President.

The Commissioners then proceeded to receive the votes for said candidates, after voting was over, the tickets were counted by the Commissioners and Secretary with the following result.

Henry Clay and David Douglas received 154 votes; W. B. Runel and Edward Fields received 44 votes.

The Vice-President appointed the Commissioners to notify the candidates to come to the stand and hear the result of the election.

The Secretary then announced the result of the election to the house which was received with great applause.

The Secretary then administered the Oath of Office to Mr. Clay and Mr. Douglas, after which they were installed into their seats as President and Vice-President of the Union Sons Relief Association for one year from this day.

The President elect then addressed the meeting thanking them for the honor and confidence that they show they have in him, by electing him again as their President, and said he has taken the oath to discharge the duties of President, and defend the Constitution and By-Laws of this Association, and he intends to carry out every law, and do all the good he can in maintaining peace and harmony in the Association.

Mr. Douglas, Vice-President elect then made a short address to the meeting thanking them for the compliment shown him in electihg him Vice-President saying that he will always aim to do good, and harmonize, and can always be found when wanting, and wanted the members to know that he is a Republican and stands on the Radical Republican Platform. Mr. W. B. Runel made a few remarks to the members thanking them for their votes, and said he had run before against the President, and said he was the only one that could get near the President, but he congratulated him on his success, and hope when they elect a Treasurer, he hoped they will elect a man who will fill the office as he tried to do.

Mr. E. Fields also addressed the meeting, and said he advocated that there ought to be a new president, and the society required it, but as its members have seen fit to re-elect their old President and his party was beaten, he congratulated the blue ribbon on their success.

The Commissioners then proceeded on with the election of Trustees.

The following gentlemen were unanimously elected Trustees to serve one year.

Rev. Emperor Williams, Henry Edwards, W. H. Alexander, Floyd Calhoun, Aaron Washington.

The Secretary then administered the oath of office unto them, and they were installed into office. Rev. E. Williams then addressed the society giving a history of the Society from its foundation to this day and felt proud to see the confidence of the members by re-electing him, as a Trustee, an office held since the society was incorporated, and was glad to see the old President re-elected, he then made a few encouraging remarks on the duties of each officer and member.

Mr. Edwards and Mr. Alexander also made a few pleasant remarks to the meeting.

Mr. Peter Joseph late Vice-President made a few remarks before retiring from his officer, and said that within the past year he has always strived to fill the duties of his office as far as it lay in his power, and hoped the members were satisfied with him during his reign as an office, he said he was the first that said we ought to have another man for President in place of Mr. Clay, and see if they could not do as well as Mr. Clay, but as the members have seen fit to retain him by re-electing him again, he congratulated them on their success and choice.

The Secretary then read a letter from Mrs. Nancy Jacob, asking relief of the members. The members voluntarily contributed six dollars for her.

The Secretary said he had collected $60 for dues, fines, initiation fees which he paid into the treasury.

The President said he thought the minutes of this meeting should be published.

It was unanimously adopted that the secretary have the minutes of this meeting published on Sunday in the N. O. Advocate, Republican and Tribune.

Benediction by Rev. Jos. Jones.

Meeting adjourned.

NUMBER XVI.

Life to me, dear Minnie, is as varied as the views in a kaleidoscope; rest and quiet seem to be mine only in the "Land of Nod," which my dreams would translate land of vagaries. A sigh for retirement just for one hour escaped my lips as I looked out into the charming moonlight—and more magnificent moonlight evenings I have never enjoyed anywhere than in this Southern city, unless it was in Italy, when the full moon shone on the deep blue waters of the Mediterranean—or when we dipped the oar lightly on the calm bosom of the bay of Naples.

Imagination on rapid pinions finds you nestling in your quiet home on the banks of the noble Hudson, while the air is vocal around your happy doorway with the music of innocent childhood's prattling voices. Fingers like thine dear Minnie, are turning with me the pages of memory's mysterious book, while beneath the shadow of the old family tree are gathered a happy group of friends to celebrate Agnes' wedding day. Papa you know, pronounced the ceremony and the tall young minister who had so frequently driven to our door in that one seated gig, or cart as he had called it, was now Agnes' liege lord.

We were saved the bitterness of parting for they were to live not two miles distant in the village of M—, so that we saw them often in their Parsonage home. But in the family group we felt that one bright link was missing in the chain that had so long bound us together.

Providence, as if to fill Agnes' vacant chair sent us two little motherless boys, Denis and Frankie. Brother Olin had moved into one of the Western States where his wife had sickened and died, leaving these precious children, and the father not being able to accompany them, had sent them to find a home with us. It is often remaked that grand parents are far more indulgent to their childrens' children than they were to their own; this was true in regard to our Father in particular. He not only with his own hand made them playthings—little wagons and boats, and houses, but would get down on the floor and let them romp and play with him at their will, which I had never known him to allow his own children to do. In fact, we all appeared ambitious to do for them and thus gain the largest share of love. We taxed their youthful memories by teaching them pieces to declaim. In their plays they were always teaching, preaching, and holding prayer meetings. Denis usually did the preaching and Frankie did the praying. One day Mama was away, and Cora, as she often did, took the advantage of her absence to try her skill at cake making; on this occasion, two large cakes proved to be an entire failure, and she said to us girls, "I am so sorry I have wasted so much, and Mama may be displeased for the cakes will have to be thrown away." The little boys were holding their meeting as usual, but we had not supposed they had listened to a word we had spoken, when to our surprise we heard Frankie praying earnestly, saying, "O Lord do forgive Aunt Cora for spoiling that cake, for she says she is so sorry. And O Lord don't let grand Ma be displeased, for Aunt Cora says she will never do so again."

After family prayer the boys would run and throw their arms around Papa's neck and kiss him, then sit on his knee and talk of God, the Bible, and Heaven. One morning, Frankie, who was not four years old, said, "grand Pa, if the worms do eat my body when I die they cannot touch my soul, can they? for God will take that to heaven." The conversation had not been on this subject and we were all surprised at his questions so far beyond his years. That evening after playing all day, he came to the supper table with his little apron filled with chestnuts he had been gathering; his little head drooped on his shoulder as he said, "dear grand Ma, I am so tired." We washed him and put him in bed, but during the night that fearful childs' destroyer, scarlet fever, seized him and no mortal skill would arrest it, and in less than three days, the little form so much like Raphael's Cherubs, carved in Parian marble, was laid in the coffin. We were so frantic in our grief, that Mama said reprovingly to us, "God gave and now he has taken, what you have set up in your hearts' affections as an idol—God has his mysteries, but by and by, we may see that it is for the best." With bitter tears we laid his little form in the old church-yard, beside dear Edith, and said, "good night," until we meet in the "bright morning."

"Good night! a word so often said,
The heedless mind forgets its meaning;
'Tis only when some heart lies dead
On which our own was leaning,
We hear in maddening music roll
That last 'good night' along the soul."

Florence had been teaching in the village and making it her home with Agnes, and ere long it became evident that she would be caught marrying a minister, contrary to her plain declaration that she would not. Now it was her turn as she came home to urge Mama to continue the story of her early Itinerant life. She said, "do tell us how long you remained in that little lonely home?" O, my child, we did not remain there but one year, and our next appointment was P— Circuit, Mass. Here the Parsonage was very unlike the one we had left; it was an immense shell of a house containing many rooms, but few of them finished and through which the winds held fearful carnival during the long winter nights. In the room we occupied as living room there was an immense fire-place, large enough to contain nearly half a cord of wood and yet it was impossible with this to keep warm. Your Father, learning that stoves were coming into use, went in search of one and purchased a large square, or box stove as they were called and placed it in the center of the room. I cannot begin to tell you the luxury this stove afforded us, in the way of keeping warm, and not consuming half the wood used in the fire-place. You will scarcely believe me when I tell you we really suffered a good deal of persecution for introducing this comfort into our home, for it was considered a dangerous innovation, and many said, the unnatural heat generated would certainly kill us all. One old lady, feeling it her duty to take the affair into her custody and remove the evil if possible; one day, after having exhausted all her anathemas on the accursed thing, and its fearful effects, added contemptuously, "it looks like an old wench stuck up in the middle of the room." We concluded not to heed these remarks, for before, I was obliged no less than half a dozen times each day to remove the stockings from the little feet and hold them before the blazing fire until nearly roasted, and then they were cold again as soon as they touched the floor; now the children ran and played from morning until night without the least complaint.

This was a four weeks circuit, allowing your Father but little time in his family. He preached four times on Sunday, and every evening during the week, except Saturday, and yet many of the people thought because we had a large garden attached to the Parsonage we ought to raise all our own vegetables; and pray what time did your Father get to work in a garden? This people thought we ought not to complain if we have one meal ahead, but trust in Providence as we said, "give us this day our daily bread"

We occupied the Court-house, in which to hold our meetings, as there was no church near. In the village there was a good society, and warm hearts kept the fire burning, not only on the altar of their own hearts, but alive in the church. We were blessed with another son on this charge. Here Wilberforce came to us to complete our quartette—two girls and two boys, and we imagined our family perfect.

Here ended another chapter in our Intinerant life; but a little confusion in packing, moving, and getting settled in another home, opened a new chapter, finding us in a very comfortable Parsonage on S— Circuit, in New York State, only a few miles from the line dividing the State from Conn. In Conn., persons who were to be married were obliged not only to obtain a license, but the "bands" must be publised two or three weeks before the time appointed. It was amusing to see how many evaded this law by coming over to our house to be married. We could not well object, for certainly they had a right to go two or three miles if they pleased to celebrate the happy event, and often they brought there own wine and cake to treat the company, not allowing us to have any trouble; and leaving a good fee.

The society built a new church not far from us, while we lived there, and it was dedicated by Freeborn Garretson, of precious memory. It was a high day and the people shouted aloud for joy. There were but few churches in those days connected with our society; we were obliged to worship in barns and school houses, and it was a great event to have a church dedicated. When winter came, some suggested having a stove placed in the church, but there was much opposition to it, as many of the old saints said they ought to have enough religion to keep them warm. Some of the old ladies carried little foot stoves with them, and others did not appear to feel the cold for they would shout and sing until the church would ring for joy and gladness. This was a year of prosperity, and many were the stars added to the Savior's crown.

Evangeline.

Married.

The following persons were married by Rev. Edward Jackson in the M. E. Church, at Opelousas, La., during the past year.

Raymond Jones to Sara Travers; Thoma Griffin to Cilly Jones; Sanders Frent to Louisa Emerson; Daniel Gustine to Eliza Jones; Willis Smith to Mary Ludley; John James to Celia Morgan; Jarvis Patrick to Cady Hill; Peter Houston to Lucy Swayze; Joseph Davis to Lily Vincent; Emily Mason to Charles Foster; Nelson Ford to Melinda Weller.

A Desperate Affray.—A most serious and heart-rending difficulty occurred in our streets on the evening of the 3rd inst., between Mr. C. W. Stauffer, (late register of voters in the city of New Orleans, during the year 1864, but more recently carrying on business here as a Merchant) and Judge R. B. Jones, (late of the Supreme Bench,) also John and doctor Jones, his brothers. During the affray, in which all the parties were engaged, Mr. Stauffer was instantly killed. The Judge and doctor Jones, were confined in jail, to await their examination, which took place on the 4th inst. John Jones, escaped.

It was a sad and sorrowful scene, and our peaceful community paralysed from the shock. It is said that business matters were the cause. We do not know the origin of the difficulty, but anxiously await such proceedings as will justify us in giving our readers a correct version, as how this melancholy affair originated. The warnings of carrying fire arms, are very conspicuously set forth in this sorrowful affair.

An unsuccessful attempt was made last night to rescue the prisoners from jail, in which the Sheriff, Mr. J.C. Hughes, we learn was wounded, in the discharge of his duty. During the night, loaded fire arms were repeatedly discharged, but from what cause, we know not.

—Natchitoches, La., June 5, 1867.

At a meeting of the Republican Union Club, Parish of Natchitoches, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, that in the tragical death of our late friend Hon. Cyrus W. Stauffer, this Club has lost one of its most active and patriotic members, whose amicable disposition and courteous manners, won him respect even among those, who may have differed from him in political opinion.

Resolved, that to his surviving family we extend our heartfelt sympathies in this hour of sudden bereavement and sorrow.

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in the Natchitoches Times and New Orleans Advocate.

The Letter which accompanies the Photographic Views, to the Emperor Napoleon.

The following is the letter which has been drafted to accompany the portfolio of views to the Paris Exposition. It will be presented to the Emperor Napoleon:

STATE OF LOUISIANA,
MAYORALITY OF NEW ORLEANS,
City Hall, June 8, 1867.

To His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of the French:

Sire—By the direction of the honorable the City Council of New Orleans, I, as Mayor of the corporation, beg leave to accompany the presentation of certain memorials of our city, with the expression of the high respect entertained for your majesty and the great French nation, by the authorities and people of this city, which owes its foundation to French enterprise.

We presume to believe that the sovereign of the countrymen of the chivalric and devoted Bienville cannot but be interested in the fortunes of the city which he established a century and a half ago, on the banks of the "great Father of Rivers," in the midst of the swamps rescued from annual overflow by the energy of himself and his compatriots. To the fostering care of France and the devotion and endurance of her colonists, the success and prosperity of this settlement in its infancy, and for a long period of its struggling youth and manhood were mainly due. When your great predecessor determined to cede this territory to the United States, he displayed alike his wisdom and philanthropy. He knew that the rights of Frenchmen, who had under his protection and encouragement of their government, fixed their fortunes and homes in the territory, would be amply secured by the new power to which the colony was transferred. The guarantees of the treaty of cession of 1803 have been faithfully observed by the United States. The natives of France have enjoyed here all the rights and privileges of American citizens. Their original settlers and their descendants, have become identified with their fellow-countrymen of different races. No prejudices have under the beneficent influence of our republican institutions obtained any permanent hold upon the minds of the diverse races who make up our composite population. None of these have exercised a larger or more beneficial influence on the habits, tastes and many of the social ideas, of our community than the French founders of this city. Especially has this been so in regard to the ornamental arts, and the elegancies and comforts of social life. To the wisdom of your jurists, to that admirable code in the compilation of which your illustrious uncle bore so useful a part, we are indebted for the jurisprudence which governs their conduct and protects their rights in all their civil relations. Under these favorable circumstances the city of Bienville has greatly prospered, and become the fifth in population, and the second in commerce on the continent. Its immense geographical and commercial advantages are fully comprehended by your majesty. Recent political changes, by giving new vigor and variety to the pursuits of our people, will greatly increase the prosperity and activity. These changes will add new attractions to our city for the skilled labor, the cultivated science and art, the enlightened enterprise, and the various fabrics of the nations of the Old World, and especially of France. To promote this purpose we look for great aid to the Exposition which your majesty has wisely originated, and is so energetically directing to so many noble ends. A deep interest is felt by our people in the success and brilliant triumph of this Exposition of arts and products of all nations. We have sent many of our most esteemed citizens to bear personal testimony, and faithfully to report the result of this Exposition.

In further testimony of our interest in this noble institution, and of our high respect for you as the ruler of the ancient mother of our State and city, we beg your acceptance of accompanying photographic views of notable localities of our city, of our principal public buildings and industrial establishments, with portraits of the members of our municipal government. And with our sincere wishes for your imperial majesty's long and peaceful government, and for your success in your high mission as the promoter of peace and the arts and sciences of civilization, I beg to subscribe myself.

Your majesty's very obedient serv't,
EDWARD HEATH, Mayor.

MEDICAL.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,
127 CARONDELET STREET,
Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of this case, Chronic, and Acute

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient, that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years, in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient, if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet Street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city.

☞ Consultation free—stamps not "forgotten."

MASON & HAMLIN,

MANUFACTURERS OF
CABINET ORGANS,
ALSO
PORTABLE ORGANS,
ADAPTED TO SECULAR AND SACRED MUSIC, FOR DRAWING-ROOMS, CHURCHES, SUNDAY AND DAY SCHOOLS, LODGES, &C., &C.

Uniting to a considerable extent the capacity of the Piano-Forte with that of the Pipe-Organ, and costing much less than either.

They occupy little space; are elegant as furniture; not liable to get out of order, and are securely boxed, so that they can be sent anywhere by ordinary freight routes, all ready for use.

Forty Styles, plain or elegant cases; one to twelve stops; Prices, $75, $90, $110, $125, $130, $1 0, $150, $160, $170, $200, $225, $250, $300, $435, $540, $550, $600, and upwards.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs were introduced four years since, and are a great improvement upon the Melodeon, Harmonium, and other reed organs, greatly excelling them especially in the excellent quality and variety of their tones; in power and quickness of action, and capacity for expression,

THEIR SUCCESS HAS BEEN ENTIRELY BEYOND PRECEDENT,

and proves how greatly such an instrument was needed. Again and again the manufacturers have been compelled to double their manufacturing facilities, until they have been increased six-fold. From the most eminent of the musical profession, the most distinguished pianists, organists, composers, and musical directors, the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs have received an amount and degree of commendation never before bestowed upon any similar musical instrument. More than two hundred and fifty of the most eminent musicians in the country have given written testimonials to the value of the improvements contained in them, and that they excel all other instruments of this class.

FIFTY-TWO GOLD OR SILVER MEDALS, or other highest Premiums have been awarded to Mason & Hamlin for the important improvements effected by them, and for the

SUPERIORITY OF THEIR INSTRUMENTS TO ALL OTHERS.

Constantly exhibiting their instruments in competition with others, they have been awarded the highest premium in every instance, but three or four.

For churches, sunday schools, etc., the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs are the instruments long wanted, of the very best quality, abundant power, not too expensive, nor liable to get out of order.

For private use, in drawing-rooms, &c., they are not less desirable, and are finding a place in the musical families of the principal cities.

They are adapted to a wider range of music than the piano, being fitted for all sacred music and for much secular music, while their quickness of action is such that the most tively rapid music can be played on them, Then their cost is greatly less, as well as their liability to get out of order.

BRIEF EXTRACTS FROM OPINIONS OF DISTINGUISHED MUSICIANS.

I should think they would become very much sought after as parlor instruments as well as for public performance.—Sigismond Thalberg, the world-renowned Pianist. I am sure to find its way into every household of taste and refinement which can possibly afford its moderate expenses. I far superior to everything of its class I have seen.—L. M. Gottschalk, the eminent Pianist. Such pure musical tones, promptness and smoothness of action and fine variety of effect, I have not found in any other instrument of the class.—S. B. Mills, the eminent Pianist. Really so excellent that there can hardly be much difference of opinion respecting them.—William Mason, the eminent Pianist. The best instrument of its class with which I am acquainted, and worthy a place in every drawing room. Harry Sanderson, the eminent Pianist. In every respect far superior to everything I have ever seen of the kind, whether in Europe or America.—Geo. Washbourne Morgan the eminent organist, N. Y. I can only reiterate what so many in the musical profession have said, that for equality, promptness and exquisite tone, they are unequalled.—John H. Wilcox, the eminent Organist, Boston. Surpasses everything in this line I have ever seen, whether French or American.—Jon Zundel, the eminent Organist, N. Y. The best reed instruments in the world are made in the United States, and your Cabinet Organs are greatly superior, and by far the best made here.—Max Maretzer, Musical Conductor, N. Y. Far surpasses all other similar instruments, which have come under my observation.—Carl Zerhau, Musical Conductor, Boston. Exceeds in my estimation every other instrument of this general class. Thos. Hastings. I can recommend them with confidence.—Lowell Mason. As soon as the people become acquainted with the superior merits of your instruments, your only trouble will be to supply the demand.—Wm. B. Bradbury. I have never seen anything of the kind which interested me so much.—Geo. F. Root. Exciting much interest in musical circles, and already becoming the fashion. N. Y. Home Journal. The highest accomplishment of industry in this department. This is not only our opinion, but the unanimous verdict of the organists.—Boston Advertiser. A glorious instrument for the temple service, so readily secured as to be available for any congregation, and effective and beautiful as to meet the desires of the most refined and fastidious.—N. Y. Observer.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs must not be confounded with other reed instruments, from which they vary essentially, their superiority veing largely derived from PATENTED IMPROVEMENTS, which cannot be employed by other makers. Among them are,

The AUTOMATIC BELLOWS SWELL, patented, a most important invention, and greatly the best swell ever devised being much more effective and easily used than any other. The variety and beauty of effect of which it is capable, can not be appreciated except from actual use. The many attempts to imitate or find a substitute for this swell, prove its value. None of them, however, approach it in excellence and simplicity.

IMPROVED SELF-ADJUSTING VALVES patented, secure much more perfect action, durability, and freedom from liability to get out of order.

WOOD'S OCTAVE COUPLET patented, in effect nearly doubles the power of the instrument in which it is used.

NOISELESS SAFETY VALVES patented, prevent the hissing sound often heard.

The IMPROVED COMBINATION REGISTER patented, gives great facility in drawing stops.

The Empress.

Brightly the sun, athwart the sky
Beamed down upon our noble river
On whose broad bosom, glided by
A boat-like arrow from the quiver.

And o'er the long and graceful curves
In which the grand old river rolls,
The goodly steamer onward bears
Her precious frieght of living souls.

The sun declines, his golden rays
In violet paint the evening sky;
Still moves the bark with stately tread
And peacefully the moments fly.

There hoary age and glittering youth,
The matron kind, and virgin fair—
The pastor good, the sturdy crew,
Are gathered in this hour of prayer.

There, too, are seen in crowded space,
Veterans of many a hard fought field,
Who've bravely borne the heat of war,
Who ne'er to traitors thought to yield.

A double star adorns their forms,
They claim a private's pittance slight,
Yet nobly have they bared their breasts
Twixt traitor's wrong and country's right

Now side by side they patient lie,
Forgetting all their toil and pain,
In dreams of home and loved ones there,
Whom soon they hope to meet again.

The scene is changed—a sound is heard
Like mutterings dire of gathering storms;
Behold! as they approach the shore,
The foul guerrilias' evil forms.

And from their treacherous guns rush forth
The whistling shot and shrieking shell,
In rolling floods of gleaming fire,
With shouts as from the mouth of hell.

The peaceful trav'lers prostrate fall,
'Mid flame and smoke, in anguish sore,
While the sick soldiers, in their beds,
With wonder hear the cannons' roar.

Now scenes of carnage rend the heart,
And screams of terror pierce the air,
The deadly balls fly thick and fast
To crush the strength and beauty there.

Make way! make way! a young man cries,
While dangling from his bleeding side,
A shattered arm appears in view
As on he comes, with frantic stride.

But oh! what awful thing is this;
A headless man, whose quivering frame,
With heavy force, falls on the deck,
Adding a horror none can name.

'Tis the stout Captain—thus alas!
Removed so swiftly from his post,
No more he'll steer with steady hand
The good ship Empress by the coast.

Who'll take his place? the afrighted cry!
When forward steps the bold McNeill,
"I'll guide the boat," he loudly shouts,
"And guard our flag thro' woe or weal."

Just then a case-shot eleft the guage,
The helpless craft floats toward the foe,
When far above the crashing noise,
A sailor cries, "what ho! what ho!"

Oh! joy, a gunboat heaves in sight,
Now see the cowardly miscreants fly,
Retreating from a martial foe,
These villains of the deepest dye.

Oh, God! that such a dread event
Should eer betide our own fair land;
O, would thou might vengeance take,
And stay the traitor's murderous hand

For the New Orleans Advocate.

Earnestness.

REV. E. DAVIS.

This word is from Saxon origin, from eornest, or geornest, of georn, desirous, studious, diligent, assiduous. The radical sense is to strive, to advance, to reach forward, to urge, to strain. It implies ardour or zeal in the pursuit of any enterprise. The blessed Redeemer in the garden, 'being in agony he prayed (ektenesteron,) the more intently, earnestly." Jude exhorts the Christian to "contend earnestly for the faith which was once delivered to the saints." The apostle of the gentiles says, "We ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard lest at any time we let them slip" Then we are to "covet earnestly the best gifts." And "Elijah, a man of like passions with us prayed earnestly that it might not rain, and it rained not on the earth, (gegs the land,) for three years and six months." And the child of God as he contemplates the bliss of heaven, in contrast with suffering of earth, "desires earnestly to be clothed upon with his house which is from heaven." Then James tells us that "the ischuci dregsis, the fervent, hot, or earnest prayer of the righteous man availeth much." Then we must "strive, agonize, to enter in at the straight gate."

So that zeal is necessary in every department of the Christian enterprise. Earnestness is called for to enter, pursue, and end the Christian life This earnestness gives an eager desire, yea, a burning zeal, for the accomplishment of the object, so that he who has it will not be easily turned aside from the pursuit. It will climb the mountains; ford the streams; wade the swamps, and thread the forrests. Yea, it will go through rivers of blood, and floods of sorrow. Yea, through fagot and flame. How all this is manifest in the life and death of Christ, spending whole nights in prayer, he finds and fulfills the saying, "the zeal of thine house hath eaten me up." It w s more than his meat and his drink to do, or suffer the will of God. Yea, in the approach of death he could say, "I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened till it be accomplished."

The life of St Paul was a perfect example of ardor for God. He could not be delivered from going to Jerusalem to do his duty, and cried out, "What mean ye, to weep and to break mine heart? for I am ready, not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem, for the ame of the Lord Jesus." So faithful and earnest was he in his pastoral work "that by the space of three years he ceased not to warn every one night and day with tears." For a more modern example mark the history of the Jesuits. Some three centuries ago, in France, Ignatius Loyola and a few others at the midnight hour, took a stern vow, by which they bound themselves to renounce the world for the purpose of preaching the gospel of anti-Christ, and their plans were so deeply aid and so earnestly carried out that they have affected the history, and shall yet affect the destiny of Europe, Asia, Africa and America. "In all their missions the order displayed an unconquerable energy, and a spirit of the most indomitable enterprise, as dauntless as they are versatile, and as unwearied, as they are dauntless, the door closed against them was undermined if it could not be opened, and stormed when it could not be undermined, Martyrdom for them had no terror." With such an earnestness their great succeess was the natural result.

In 1733, the Moravians heard that the people of Greenland had no knowledge of Jesus. Almost without an outfit they started. They were ridiculed at Copenhagen, and told that they could not live there, that the country afforded no wood to build houses to live in. They replied' "then we will dig in the earth and live there." For five long years they toiled in the face of disease and death, and saw no fruit of their labor; not a solitary conversion. There motto was, "We will believe though there be nothing to be seen; and we will hope, though there be nothing to be expected." Such a zeal at length gladdened their hearts with great success.

"Fired with a zeal peculiar. they defy
The rage and rigor of a Northern sky,
And plant successfully, sweet Sharon's rose
On icy plains, and in eternal snows."

"Indeed what will not a mind charged with downright earnestness accomplish? Whether we discover the force of this principle in the things of this world, as when it impels a Newton to pour over his problems till the midnight wind sweeps over his papers, the ashes of his long extinguished fire, or a Reynolds to hold in hand his pencil for thirty-six hours together, or a Dryden to think on, for a fortnight in a perfect frenzy, when composing an ode, heedless of privations, even which he did not so much as perceive, or a Hyne, the German scholar to allow himself no more than two nights of weekly rest, for six months in succession, that he might complete the perusul of old Greek authors; or whether we discover it in the concerns of religion; as when it urged on Martin Luther in his gigantic labors, preaching journeying, debating, writing, &c., till at the time of his death the number of works he had published was seven hundred and fifteen, or more than twenty-five for each year of his public life. Or William Carey, to think and ponder, and study, and weep, and preach, and pray about the poor heathen, till the ocean separated him from his native land, and then to toil and struggle in the dark habitations of cruelty, till he had furnished for more than three hundred millions of immortal beings the golden lamp of heaven; or John Wesley, to preach, study, and write, and travel five thousand miles a year, and read on horseback, history, poetry, philosophy; or George Whitefield, to exclaim at the close of his first sermon, "glorious God."

"Unloose my stammering tongue to tell Thy love immense, unsearchable."

and for thirty-five years to traverse England, Ireland and Scotland, and cross the Atlantic thirteen times, preaching everywhere and at all times the gospel of God's grace; or Howard, to penetrate the haunts of poverty and disease; watch over sick and dying criminals, plunge into clamny dungeons, where existed madness and death, and sacrificed his life in deeds of philanthropy; or a Clarkson to lay aside the vestments of the priesthood, and with a few fellow workers, plead for twenty years, for the suffering sons of Africa till the cry of the oppressed aroused the sensibilities of the nation, and the Island Empress rose in her might and said to the foul traffic in human flesh, "Thus far shall thou go and no further." Wherever it is observed it seems to clothe one with a kind of omnipotence. We expect little from the opposite character, the sluggish, irresolute man, but here we always anticipate important results."

The sainted John Sutchiff has well said, "Ministers will never do much till they begin to pull sinners out of the fire," that is till they are so earnest that they will not rest till sinners are converted. These are the men that "turn the world upside down." Give us more of them. We are told that John Welsh used to keep a plaid upon his bed that he might wrap himself in when he arose in the night to pray; and John Knox cried out in prayer, "O, God, give me Scotland or I die." This is the earnestness we want in the ministry and among the people.

For the New Orleans Advocate.

The Criteria of Loyalty.

Mr. Editor—It was my fortune on the night of the 12th inst, to attend a quarterly meeting of the Literary and Debating Society at Lyceum Hall at New Orleans, which was opened by a very beautiful overture, after which an excellent essay was read followed by several other interesting and charming songs by sundry persons.

The programme was very well gotten up and the hall was thronged with a glorious assembly of blooming ladies that lent a halo of loveliness to the scene, and while the eye was wandering over the fairy throng whose bright eyes gave a far richer illumination than the chandeliers that adorned the hall, the mind was freely impressed with the belief that there is no more potent influence in society than that of intelligence and well cultivated female minds.

The addresses which were delivered were far more creditable in points of literature than in those of Loyalty, and your correspondent could not but feel saddened at the thought that the minds of the young should be compelled to receive perhaps their first impressions from remarks and addresses entirely sectional in their nature and which breathed forth no spirit of loyaty or patriotism.

The last address delivered was a eulogy on South Carolina, her people and her chivalry, recounting their incalculable sufferings and intolerable wrongs. Comparisons were drawn between the once happy prosperous and enviable condition of the country six years ago and now, and fresh appeals were again made to the magnanimity of the conquerors, desiring them to cease their fierce and vindictive persecutions and restore into our States the privileges of Freemen. The speaker seemed to exhaust his entire stock of sympathy and commiseration for devoted fallen South Carolina, while all the suffering in the other States was passed by, unregarded, and was entirely ignored. The first of the speakers wound up with some good counsel to young men desiring them to go to work and repair the fallen arches of the great Southern Temple, but the other proposed no remedy whatever and counseled no course, but seemed wholly desirous of keeping clothed in perennial green the remembrane of old South Carolina. One speaker remarked, "the present was not the time auspiciously to nail their flag to the mast head and go forth to great and mighty conquests," but your correspondent felt like the old flag that was lying unhonored that evening in one corner of that Hall, had been nailed to the mast head of the Great Republic, and that 400,000 loyal men had died to place it there, and that all the friends of Secession and disunion were unable to tear it from its high position.

If our people have honestly accepted the terms of the surrender and earnestly desire to return and dwell beneath the enduring folds of the great overshadowing Starry Banner when is the necessity for such loud eulogiums upon the State that inaugurated the great work of secession? She sowed the wind and she has reaped the whirlwind.

Thousands of her people have declared and vowed that they would rather see their noblest cities whelmed in ruin than see them desecrated by the triumphant exhibition of the hated "Grid Iron Flag' and God in his own incalculable wisdom gave them the iron tramp of beleaguring armies and made their highways desolate. We all appealed to God to judge our cause by the sword, and he has spoken out amid the glare of artillery and the shock of arms, "Mene, mene tehel Upharsin."

We should now endeavor to soothe the public mind by the application of gentle emollients, and should endeavor to foster a nobler patriotism in the hearts of the young. The South can gain nought by desiring to perpetuate sentiments of hostility in the hearts of her people. She went to battle for opinion and a principle and the highest Court on Earth has decided against her, and in the language of Longstreet those opinions have been defeated and their opposites have become law.

The bonds of perpetual Union are beboming stronger through the Nation each successive day and hour, and the people must accept the situation in full conformity with the terms of surrender or they will live in continual perplexity. If there are those in the nation who feel their situations one of much discomfort, other lands are smiling round on every hand to receive them as citizens. Our country will lose nothing by their expatriation. Let them voluntarily seek an asylum upon distant shores where they may enjoy the fruition of those glorious privileges which they say are denied them here. But if they choose to remain, let them do so but not stir up discord and disquiet among their friends. Their dreams of a great Southern Empire are fled, and our Colossal nation stanes with her feet resting firmly upon every foot of her old domain and is shaking her victor flag in triumph over the head of her brave but prostrate enemies.

The simple moral influence of her power has bursted the fetters which trans-Atlantic tyrants strove to forge upon the arms of a sister people. The minions of tyranny who sought to stab our country when she was engaged in a domestic struggle, and unfurled the standard of imperialism upon the spires of the city of Montezuma, lost their entire manhood as they gazed in dismay upon the unterrified eagle of America reveling once more in undisturbed possessioon of its wide expanded territory, and the proud legions of the descendants of the conqueror of Austerlitz ignominiously abandoned the gigantic conquest they had so arrogantly undertaken and sought beyond the broad Atlantic a security from the terrific frowns of the maddened and insulted Colossus of the West.

Not only upon the continent of North America is the moral influence of the United States seen and felt. The frozen steppes of Autocratic Russia has been warmed by the genial influence of the Sun of Liberty, and her down trodden serfs have been emancipated and are now joining their loud songs of choral praise in the great anthem of Universal Freedom. Brazil, the land of broad rivers and snow capped monntains has caught the glorious infection and the poor slave who once wandered all bowed down in hopeless dejection, now joins the loud hosannah, and the banks of the lovely Amazon have become vocal with the songs of prospective freedmen. Political freedom is moving over the nations as the deep sea wave rolls along the bosom of the ocean, and close behind it will follow the onward march of the banner of Messiah—Religious conversion will follow fast in the footsteps of political regeneration, and the voice of God will soon be moving over the surface of earth and ocean, and most prominent among them all, and towering highest in the holy race that inaugurates the great movement will be seen, the dear flag that symbolizes freedom.

Slavery and oppression will every where flee away before the advancing star of civilization and republicanism, and

Peace shall o'er tho world her olive wand extend
And white robed innocence from heaven descend.

LOYALIST.

The Grumbler.

The most intolerable bore with whom society is afflicted, is the grumbler, who is continually complaining of the misery of this world; and who wails eternally over buried hopes and vanished joys. His joys are never in the present, but only discovered when he puts on the goggles of memory and searches over the pages of the past, and makes his present miserable in bewailing their departure. Time to his benighted vision is a monster who strtdes along, smashing at every step with grim delight, the idols of fond expectation, and scattering instead of joys, bitterness and sorrow. He looks at the world in this dark, gloomy light, until his heart has become soured and mouldy. He grumbles at morning, noon and night. When he awakes he grumbles because he has to get up; and if he does not find his slippers just where he looks for them, he breaks forth with redoubled energy. His breakfast is too soon or too late. He scolds the children for being so slow, and if they quicken their actions, he boxes their ears for making a noise. When he goes out he always grumbles at the weather. If the sun is shining, he groans inwardly for fear it may be too warm. If it rains, he grumbles because the sun dont shine; and if old Boreas in his glee gets up a little breeze he calls it a hurricane. He would be out of his element, if out of trouble. Like Rachel of old, he mourns and refuses to be comforted.

If the grumbler would be satisfied with being miserable himself, if he would confine his murmurings to himself for his own edification, he would be 'pardoned and pitied.' But when he seeks to spread a shade of discomfort all around him, when he thrusts all his grievances and grumblings on society, then he becomes a fit subject for the denunciation of all honest people.

The grumbler always carries a 'dampher' in society. His long, sanctimonious, sorrow-stricken face kills the natural joyousness of the heart, wherever he carries his doleful phiz. He creates a chilling influence wherever he goes. Everybody knows that if you want to make a sick man think he is dying, look half-dead yourself. Then if you would not exercise an Upas-like influence in society, don't be a grumbler.

The grumbler aims to keep a large stock of misery on hand, and if the present is not adequate for the supply he anticipates and peers into the future for something dismal on which he can feast his propensity. He stands on tip-toe with arms out-stretched to meet trouble half-way if possible. If he has any wealth he is constantly brooding over all the burglaries and robberies he ever heard, and if he should loose a few dollars, he would fancy he saw poverty and the poor house staring him in the face. He croaks about the wicked world, and hides his saintly face in misery as he predicts what a dreadful end to which people are coming. If one of his friends should start on a journey he relates him all the horrible accidents and steamboat explosions that he can conjure up, and prepares his friend to enjoy a delightful state of mind on the road, especially if he is of a nervous disposition.

Dr. Johnson once said that a habit of looking on the bright side of every event is better than a thousand pounds a year. Resolve that you will see this world on the sunny side, and you will find that the longer you live in it the better you will like it. It is a joll old world after all, if we will only think so.

"They err who say life is not sweet,
Though cares are long and pleasures fleet;
Though smiles and tears, and sun and storm,
Still change life's ever varying form,
The mind that looks on things aright,
Sees through the clouds a deep blue light."

You cannot underrate the necessity of being cheerful. It will brighten up your conversational powers, and make you an agreeable and desirable companion. If you meet a friend in good humor, don't throw a cloud unnecessarily over his happiness, and if you have a friend in trouble, don't picture it to him worse than it really is, but rather try to lessen the burden.

"A smile on the face and kind words on the tongue,
Will serve as a passport all nations among;
A heart that is cheerful, a spirit that's free,
Will carry you bravely o'er life's stormy sea."

THERE IS ANOTHER RIVER.—A lady, walking out one day near a river, saw a man with his hat and coat off, and she thought directly he meant to drown himself. She prayed that the Lord would give her some word to arrest him. Accordingly she walked on until she came up to him, when he turned and said, "A beautiful river, ma'am."

'Yes,' she replied, 'but there is another river—a river that makes glad the people of God. Do you know that river?

'No ma'am,' he said.

She tried to speak more, but her tongue was tied, and she left him without another word. She went home to her husband, and told him what she thought and he sent some men to see if he was still there. No, he was gone, but the coat and hat were in the same place. They dragged in the river, but no traces of him could be found. They asked at the police-station about him, but no one knew what had become of him.

Twenty years after, that lady was in Baptist Noel's chapel, and saw a man looking very much at her. She thought, 'I know that face; where have I seen him?'

Whilst she was trying to remember, he leaned over her shoulder and said:

"There is another river. Do you know that river?"

She immediately remembered he was the man she had said those words to twenty years ago. He told her he had gone to drown himself, and her words deterred him from it. He had fled to Jesus, and found peace through believing.—Methodist.

Intelligence from our Mission Rooms.

MISSION ROOMS.—The Missionary Society is now occupying its new and eligible rooms on Broadway, on the west side of Union Square, between Sixteenth and Seventeenth streets. The address of the society and its officers will henceforth be No 35 Union Place, New York. Brethren having occasion to write to the Mission Rooms will please make a note of this.

INCREASE THE NUMBER.—It is most pleasant for us to comply with such an application as the following: "Our missionary collections last year were an advance of more than one hundred per cent. over those of the preceding year, when the Missionary Advocates were not taken. We carefully distribute the papers, writing the names of the parties upon them. We now wish you to increase to fifty the number of papers sent to our address"

THAT YE BRING FORTH MUCH FRUIT.—The mate of a ship was pointed out to us in the congregation of the Bethel ship surrounded by four men whom he had been instrumental in winning to the Saviour during his late voyage.

O FOR MORE AROUSEMENTS.—We have before us a letter from a friend in which the following passage occurs: "A member of the charge who had purposed to give $500 was so aroused under the missionary discourse of his pastor that he doubled the amount, giving $1,000, which has been sent to our treasurer."

THE OPENING.—"The Mission Rooms" were formally opened on Monday morning, June 10, by the calling to order of an assembly of more than one hundred ministers by the chairman of the meeting, Rev. J. S. Inskip. Bishop Janes being present, Brother Inskip invitedhim to conduct the opening exercises, previous to which Dr. Durbin addressed the president on the pleasure with which he could welcome the pastors to this place of gathering, and on the peculiar fitness of the presence of so large a number of the pastors in the "Rooms" of a society of which they are the principal agents and steadfast friends. Bishop Janes commenced the devotional exercises of the occasion by reading the 35th chapter of Isaiah. The assembly then united in singing the first hymn in our collection, "O for a thousand tongues to sing;" after which the bishop offered prayer, in which he was most marvelously drawn out in supplication for the spiritual renovation of our city, our country, and the heathen world. The hymn commencing "See how great a flame aspires," was sung, after which Dr. Foster led in prayer. These opening services, engaged in with great fervor by an unusually large company of pastors from various and distant portions of our work, made the occasion one of extraordinary interest for the cause of missions.

FORGIVEN WITHOUT A PRIEST.—A Priest after examining with a knowing look I colporteur's pack said to him, "Sir, a perceive that in your books a great deal is said about conversion and nothing said about confession, it is clear that yours are Protestant books." A notary who was present opened tne New Testament. "But do you not see," said he to the curate, "that Jesus Christ forgave the thief without the intervention of a priest to confess him? And when St. Stephen was dying, did he ask for a priest to confess him?" The dilemma was embarrassing. "Sir," answered the priest gravely, "the rules of the church in ancient times were different to what they are at the present day."

AN ANECDOTE OF MR. WESLEY.—At one time, Mr. Wesley was travelling in Ireland, his carriage became fixed in the mire, and the harness broke. While he and his companions were laboring to extricate it, a poor man passed by in great distress. Mr. Wesley called to him, and inquired the cause of it. He said he had been unable, through misfortune, to pay his rent of twenty shillings, and his family were just turned out of doors.

"Is that all you need?" said Mr. Wesley, handing him the amount: "here go and be happy." Then turning to his companion, he said pleasantly, "you see now why our carriage stopped here in the mud."

"L'Etat c'est Moi."

Such is the heading of a leader in the New Orleans Times of the 25th inst., on Gen. Sheridan, on the subject of registration in Louisiana. The article is a savage attack upon Gen. Sheridans's civil administration in this district. Its design is to create the impression that Gen. Sheridan is a conspirator against the lawful authority of our government, and, therefore, should be at once removed In the "classic bombast" of the Times, he is denoneed as "ignorant and inexperienced in civil and political affairs"; that he is a "bold, defiant, self-reliant, partizan leader" ; that he is "arrogant, presumptuous, insulting, and insubordinate to his superiors" ; and it is more than intimated, that he is vain, proud, and "hath a vaulting ambition" which can only be fully expressed in a foreign language—"L'Etat c'est Moi!"

Were the circulation of the Times confined within limits where its antecedents and present controlling principles are known, we should not deem the article worthy of our notice; but unhappily having the greater power where it is least known, we therefor should not allow this slanderous assault to pass unrebuked,

Since the days of Gen. Butler in New Orleans, no military commander in Louisiana has displayed a profounder sagacity and a riper knowledge of men and things than Major Gen. Sheridan. Known throughout the nation as a bold, dashing, victorious cavalry officer, his warmest admirers little dreamed that their favorite general would prove no less a statesman than a soldier. The successor of Banks and Canby, it is no easy task to supervise the reconstruction of Louisiana, which in view of past failures and their attendant difficulties, is the most difficult of the "ten states" to reconstruct. If the character of the men chosen to fill subordinate offices, is a safe rule by which to test the administrative abilities of a general in command then Sheridan has no superior among those chosen to command the military districts created by the reconstruction bill. Both for the office of mayor and for that of governor, there was a choice of men; for many names had been suggested for these positions; yet Sheridan's rare penetration of human character and his correct estimate of practical fitness led him to appoint Edward Heath, Mayor of New Orleans, and Benj. F. Flanders, Governor of Louisiana. No man can converse with Gen. Sheridan for half an hour and not be impressed with his marvellous knowledge of our "political situation" and with his wisdom in the choice of the best men and means for the speedy pacification and prosperity of our State. Instead of "inexperience" we are surprised at his wondrous powers to plan and execute.

Few men in this or any other land could have endured his rapid promotion and nation-wide fame, and not have "lost their heads." While he commands the respect of all who enter his presence, yet he is simple in his manners, frank in his spirit, straight forward in his words and deeds. Rarely referring to those exploits on the field of battle which the greatest of chieftain might justly be proud, he addresses himself to the subject in hand; the supreme executive of a law which confers unlimited power upon him, he cannot speak otherwise than in the "first person," yet always without vanity or egotism or pride. Having accepted the appointment of district commander, he feels bound to carry out the will of Congress; yet he is no partizan and his appointments have not been in accordance with the wishes of the "Clubs of a radical faction and of irresponsible demagogues." The statement comes with bad grace from the Times, that "neither the history of this Republic nor of any modern government affords such an instance of flagrant, arrogant, presumptuous and insulting insubordination and defiance by inferior to superior officials, as this letter exhibits." Without containing a vestige of truth when applied to Sheridan, such a wholesale assertion is worth naught, but as a winding sheet in which to wrapt the dead confederacy with its treason, arrogance, presumption and insubordination. Has the Times forgotten Davis and Floyd and Lee and Cobb and Muray and a host of others as "flagrant instances of insubordination, defiance and arrogance!"

If we now turn to Sheridan's letter to Grant, of which the Times so bewailingly complains, and analyze the same with care and candor, we shall fail to discern a single count in the indictment founded in truth. The President's order to Gen. Sheridan to extend the time of registration was conditional, that is, "unless" as the commanding general says, "I show some good reasons to the contrary." And what are his "good reasons" for not extending the term?

I. All the citizens of Louisiana have had ample opportunity to register.

II. The extention of the term of registration would incur additional and unnecessary expense.

III. If other district commanders are tardy, Louisiana should not therefore be cheated out of the honor of being the first of the "ten states," reconstructed and the first re-admitted into the Union.

IV. The people of the South have never confessed their guilt of treason and rebellion against the government of the United States; they still firmly deny having taken up arms as rebels; they call that loyalty which the North calls treason, and, therefore, according to their political faith and their interpretation of the oath prescribed by Congress in the military bill, they claim that they can conscientiously take the oath of registration ; hence General Sheridan considered that the application of Mr. Stanbery's opinion, would open a "broad macadamised road for perjury and fraud to travel on."

In a burst of indignation, the Times declares this is casting upon a "whole people the stain of one of the most odious offences to law and morals" It may be in the estimation of the Southern people, but they are not in a condition to determine what is treason or perjury or fraud. It is a question which of right belongs to the victorious North and to a loyal Congress to decide; that decision has been made, and as the representative of the one, and the agent of the other, General Sheridan frankly utters his opinion and assigns the same as one of the reasons why the term of registration should not be extended.

Conscious of the delicate position he occupies, the Commanding General declares with great sincerity—"I regret that I should have to differ with the President." Nothing could be more courteous and even kind. If we understand the English language, there is nothing in these words that smacks of "boldness, or defiance or disrespect." And with singular appropriateness, he requests General Grant to recollect the President's "bitter antagonism" to the bill which he is called upon to execute. This is done not in disrespect to the President, but to illustrate the difficulties attending the work of reconstruction in his department. And like a true soldier whose first duty is obedience to his superiors, General Sheridan pledges himself to obey the President's positive order to extend the time of registration, if the "good reasons" he has given are not deemed sufficien. to close the registration by the 15th of July. Such are our candid views of the Commanding General of this department.

Who are the Republican Party of Louisiana?

We are somewhat surprised to observe of late a slight degree of misunderstanding on this point among a few af our friends which it may be well to clear up, before it has led them into any practical mistakes which may injure them. It is not infrequent that the zeal of new converts to a sound faith is somewhat disproportioned to their knowledge, and betrays them into unsound doctrines and bad practices. In such cases the cool sober judgment of the body of the church usually anticipates serious mischief by a gentle and timely admonition. The Republican party in Louisiana, we infer from some late outgivings, contains some younger members, who in the novelty of their faith are perhaps a little apt to forget that the principles and the policy of the Republican party were framed some time since, and were in active operation while they were yet owners of slaves, and uniting with their section to war upon its principles.

The history of parties in no country has perhaps witnessed such a sublime and majestic uprisal of all the purest, noblest and best elements of a people, into a lofty broad and compact organization, like the sudden uplifting of an unbroken mountain range across a continent, as was presented in the rise of the Republican party of the United States.

The preparation of the elements, and the growth of the componet parts, were the work of years and the fruit of much heroic toil and unrewarded sacrifice. The true fathers of the Republican party were the patient, earnest conscientious doers and thinkers, who for thirty years have been quietly and perseveringly informing the minds of the people with just principles, while the froth and scum of parties were waging their battles of bubbles on the surface.

And to-day it is emphatically true of the Republican party, and we call the attention of mere politicians to the fact, that the true heart and soul of Republicanism lies deeper than any committees, conventions, or any other party machinery. The vital spirit and authoritative will of the Republican party which can make and unmake conventions, committees, platforms and greater things than these, resides in the conscentious convictions, the ardent love of justice, liberty, and the equal rights of men, and the undying devotion to the Union, of the great majority of the people of the United States, and in their unalterable purpose to make these principles and sentiments, a fixed and enduring part of the fundamental law of the Republic, and of the fundamental law of each rebel state.

It is the enthusiasm which springs from these deep settled convictions and from a great and righteous cause, which gives to the Republican party that solidarity of purpose and irresistible momentum, that tossed aside, like foam from the prow, the power and patronage of Andrew Johnson, and that standing at the back and guiding the plucky arm of sturdy Phil. Sheridan, sends a shiver and a howl throughout rebeldom North and South, as each "bad man" or fraculent malfeasant measures the sod.

It is this party with their high aims and purposes, which has abolished slavery, put down the rebellion, protected loyal men, decreed equal rights, to all men before the law in the rebel states, and prescribed the rules and conditions under which those states may resume their state organizations in the Union, and which now invites all loyal men who are willing to act with it, without distinction of any kind, whether of former politics, religion, race or color, to join its ranks. And it is of all such men, that the Republican party of Louisiana will be composed, and it is from those men collectively that all committees, conventions and other party machinery must derive their authority, and to them they must when demanded lay it down. And it will rest not with any Committee or sub committee of New Orleans to determine the Republicanism or the conditions of membership of any men, but that question rests immediately with the Republicans of Louisiana, and ultimately with the Republicans of the Union. They will decide who are and who are not Republicans.

These few first principles are sound. and are the voice not of an individual but of the party through all its conventions since it has had an existence, They have a few practical corollaries adapted to present circumstances.

I. There was no permanently and definitely organized Republican party for the State of Louisiana until recently, and the late Republican Convention was the first Republican state convention assembled in Louisiana, and the Committee it appointed was the first regularly appointed Republican State Committee in the State, and will retain its authority until it is superseded by a regularly called and authorized convention of the Republicans of the State.

II. That convention did not derive its power to meet, nor its authority to act from the collection of gentlemen who styled themselves a Republican State Committee, but from the Republican people of Louisiana and its acts are possessed of authority only so far as they represent the wishes of the people, and are liable to be repealed or disapproved as the people may direct.

III. The action of the gentlemen who called that convention, had precisely so much authority and no more than that of any other set of gentlemen, who volunteer to take the initiative in forming a new political organization; that authority was self imposed, and simply advisory, and every semblance of it ceased with the assembling of the Convention.

IV. A convention assembled for a certain purpose, once adjourned sine die, is functus officio, and has no power to reassemble, but the people when they wish a convention will elect a new one.

We are led to the foregoing remarks by an article in a contemporary upon the Republicanism of Gen. Sheldon and others, and another in which it advises the Hon. Rufus Waples and the gentlemen who have acted with him as a quasi State central committee in the absence of a regular one, to make the extraordinary assumption of being the permanent "executive and legislative head" of the party and the source of all authority.

As to the Republicanism of any person or persons we have merely to say that so long as the Republican party of the United States requires no test of membership but adherence to its principles, and action with it, we doubt the authority of the Tribune, or of any committee or convention to read any one out of, or into the party. And besides we think that so long as the great mass of Republicans are agreed to unite with late slave owners, as are some of our friends, who are advising this singular action, and with original secessionists, as were others of them, provided they are now of one mind with us, they will hardly acquiesse in the reading out of original Republicans of 1856, and 1860, who carried their Republicanism through four years of toil and danger, while our friends were either opposing them or on neutral ground. We submit that there would be danger in following the rash advice of the Tribune of the ruled out being the larger and better portion of the party.

As to the Tribune's advice to certain gentlemen to assume to act as the "executive and legislative head and assembly" of the Republican party in opposition to the Central State Committee, appointed by the Convention, that is simply child's talk. We represent the great majority of the Republcan vote of this city, white and black, and we speak for both, when we say that should any persons be so forgetful of the great purposes of the Republican party, and so oblivious of the respect due to public opinion as to venture the attempt to make the Republican party a close corporation to be wielded for the ambitious purposes and self-aggrandizement of a few persons, to the detriment of the interests, the just hopes, and the deliberate will of the people of Louisiana, they will be rebuked in such a manner by the Republicans of Louisiana in convention assembled, without waiting for authority from the Tribune or from the "executive and legislative, council, board, or assembly," or whatever other titles it may assume, which is waiting so condescendingly to be "refreshed," that they will not repeat the experiment in haste.

We wish to turn our attention to fighting the common enemy. We have the endorsement of the party. We desire to secure the triumph of Republican principles in Louisiana. Those whose support is necessary to the organs of Republicanism here, will expect such organs to aid the common cause and discountenance faction and schism. Such of these as pursue an opposite course will be understood and rebuked at the proper time and in an effectual way.

The Destiny of Mexico.

Another actor has passed off the Mexican stage. Maximillian's empire lives in the past. Through the treachery of Lopez, in delivering to the enemy the fort of the convent of de la Cruz, Queretaro has fallen, and with it the representative of the Third Napoleon. Deserted by Marquez and Miramon, it but required this Judas act to give o Juarez not only absolute control over the country, but possession of the European and Mexican generals who stood true to the last to the cause of Maximilian and monarchy.

Opposing the empire, we admire the man. Of undoubted courage, refined manners, his whole Mexican experience was that of self-sacrifice.

Ever in the front rank of his army, the fatigues and hardships of war were borne by him without murmur. And if personal prowess in the head of any movement is laudable or worthy of emulation, we think Maximilian's example merits imitation. Should his bloodthirsty captors insist upon death as the penalty of his temerity, the whole civilized world will quake with horror at the act, and a speedy retribution will quickly overtake his destroyers.

In the overthrow of the empire European sovereigns have been taught an important lesson. Taking advantage of our internal struggles they foisted their form of government upon Mexico. Our difficulties settled, the moral force of Republicanism convinced them that they had calculated without their host. And now we opine they are perfectly willing to leave the regulation of Mexico to the Mexicans or to us, if we are willing to undertake it.

Will we undertake it? Will the United States quiet its own local quarrels by uniting its own forces and marching across the Rio Grande and throwing its starry banner over the halls of the Montezumas ? Santa Anna's seizure leads the mind to this belief. Troublesome and irregular neighbors must be either ejected or made peaceable—and though Uncle Samuel did display much patience under James Buchanan, with his own rebellious children, his ire when aroused convinced them that age had not palsied his right arm.

Mexico once ours, the elevating influences of Christianity would ere long display themselves among her people. Men whose only aim appear to be the issuance of a pronunciamiento and the levyance of a prestano upon their countrymen, the former demanding their lives and the latter their property—would take pride in assisting to develop the vast industrial resources of the nation; and each being a sovereign in his own right, the wreckless ambition which these leaders have displayed, would be without object.

The ball is in our hand, pray God it may roll so as to insure ultimately peace, progress and prosperity.

A friend writing from Paris, states, that there were present at the Opera, one evening, nineteen crowned heads. When will it be said that nineteen crown-heads were presented at a prayer-meeting or at a missionary meeting to consult on the conversion of the world to Jesus?

Editorial Items.

Congress will probably meet in July.

President Johnson is in New England, swinging around the circle.

The following is the 3d section of Dr. Goldman's School ordinance for New Orleans:

Sec. 3. Said board shall provide for the education of all children between the ages of six and sixteen years, and shall have the power of establishing new schools for the education of colored children at such points and in such parts of the city where they may be required.

Gen. Sheridan on Registration.

[Telegram.]
Headquarters Fifth Military District, New Orleans, La., June 22, 1867.

General U. S. Grant, commanding armies of the United States, Washington, D. C.

General—I am in receipt of a telegram from the president, through Brevet Major General E. D. Townsend, assistant, adjutant general United States army, directing me to extend the registration in this city and state until August 1, unless I show some good reasons to the contrary, and ordering me to report such reasons for his information. Also stating that, in his judgment, this extension is necessary to a full and fair registration and that the time should be thus extended because the other district commanders will not get through before that time.

My reasons for closing the registration in this city were because I had given the city two and a half months, and there were no more to register. I have given the state two and a half months, and registration will be exhausted by that time.

I did not feel warranted in keeping up boards of registration at large expense to suit new issues coming in at the eleventh hour.

The registration will be completed in Louisiana at the time specified, unless I am ordered to carry out the law under Mr. Stanbery's interpretation, which practically, in registration, is opening a broad macadamized road for perjury and fraud to travel on.

I do not see why my registration should be dependent upon the time when other district commanders get through. I have given more time for the registration of Louisiana than they propose to give to their commands; for 1 commenced six weeks before they did.

I regret that I should have to differ with the president; but it must be recollected that I have been ordered to execute a law to which the president has been in bitter antagonism.

If, after this report, the time is to be extended, please notify me and it will be done. I would do it at once, but the president's telegram was conditional, and there is sufficient time left to issue the necessary order.

P. H. Sheridan,
Major General Commanding.

To Northern Republicans.

We ask our friends at the North and in Congress to weigh well the significance of General Sheridan's last telegram to Gen. Grant. It means simply that there is but one barrier interposed in Texas and Louisiana, between an anxious horde of unrepentant rebels who are angrily and impatiently waiting the opening of President Johnson's "broad macadamized road for perjury and fraud," and the loyal people and their liberties, which the former only await the Presidential signal to overwhelm and tramp out. That barrier is the honest, straight-forward purpose of Gen. Sheridan. He is resolved that by him the Military Bill shall be executed as understood by Congress, the people and the President when it passed.

Let the people in the North and Congress see that Sheridan is sustained. If President Johnson wishes to make him the next President, let him remove him.

Important Message of the Mayor

State of Louisiana,
Mayoralty of New Orleans,
City Hall, June 25, 1867.

To the Honorable Board of Assistant Aldermen:

Gentlemen—It has just come to my knowledge from an official report made to me by Mr. Joseph Hernandez, city treasurer, that there has been issued by him and the city controller, Mr. P. G. Mohan, since the 13th of August 1866, one million two hundred and thirty-two thousand seven hundred and seventy-two thousand dollars of city money, without any authority whatever.

In answer to my inquiries, Mr. Hernandez states that this large amount of money was put into circulation "by virtue of resolutions of joint committees of the common council, and which action was duly approved by said common council under date of November 16, 1866, resolution No. 309." This resolution reads as follows:

Resolved, That the common council does hereby approve and sanction the course pursued and action taken by the joint committees of both boards during the adjournment of the common council, from the 26th of July to the 2d of October, 1866, as per report of said committee presented and adopted this day.

An examination of said report shows that said joint committees made no mention therein of having authorized the issue of any city notes, and it therefore follows that the treasurer and controller have greatly exceeded their powers, and issued obligations of the city without warrant by law.

With this exceedingly large volume of paper money thrown upon the market, in addition to that already issued by the city, it it not hard to account for the great depreciation which has taken place in the value of city paper, and cannot help shaking the confidence of the public in it. If it was sanctioned officially or otherwise by the joint committes, they, too, far exceeded their powers, and must be viewed as equally culpable with the officers already named; and I look to the council to make an immediate examination of this matter, and to take speedy measures for the impeachment and removal of the parties guilty of perpetrating this fraud upon the corporation and the community.

For the further and full protection of the treasury of the city it is also necessary that all officers of the city should be instructed not to receive any of the money in question in payment of sums due the city. The same having been issued without authority and by irresponsible persons, is of no value in law, and the city can never legally be made liable for it. No authority having ever been vested in the present treasurer and controller to issue any new notes of this city, their illegal notes can be readily distinguished by the signatures of themselves or their deputies.

It is to my personal knowledge that, besides the large amount of nearly a million and a quarter of dollars already illegally issued, the treasurer and controller are at the present time engaged in making more of this money; and even now we have nothing to guide us as to the amount actually put into circulation except the statements of the treasurer himself; and it is also necessary that you should take immediate steps to stop any further issue of new city notes.

I regret that from those illegal proceedings the citizens of New Orleans will suffer greatly; but it is of the utmost importance that the people should be apprised of the illegal doings of its officers, and that the promptest action should be taken by you to protect the good faith and credit of the corporation.

Very respectfully,
E. HEATH, Mayor.

The above message has created some excitement in town; from its nature, the effect could not have been otherwise. But we trust that the Mayor will not allow himself to be clamored out of his purpose to bring to public notice the dishonest acts of those designated in his message. Let him pursue his quiet, straight-forward official course and the people will sustain him. After the first blush of excitement is over, the good citizens of New Orleans will discover that their Mayor has acted for the public good. This is all that they require, and all that he seeks to accomplish. Those who so violently denounce, him should be reminded that the Mayor stands ready to prove at any moment, the charges contained in his message. The material questions involved in the controversy are: 1. Were the city treasurer and controller authorized to issue the $1,232,772, named in the Mayor's message. 2. By whom was the authorization made? It is a question of official record. Where are the records? But as it is not likely that these questions can be answered satisfactorily to the respective parties concerned in the dispute, we trust the Commanding General will appoint a commission to investigate the whole subject.

In the mean time, we caution those who hold the city notes in question, not to dispose of them at an unreasonable discount; for although the Mayor considers them illegal, yet we feel confident that he will do all that he can to save the holders thereof from serious loss.

Republican State Central Executive Committee.

The Committee held its second meeting at Economy Hall last Monday evening. Mr. Dunn's resignation as one of the vice-presidents, was accepted and the gallant Captain J. H- Ingraham was elected to fill the vacancy. This is an admirable choice, and will add strength to the committee. President Flanders is now supported by two able vice-presidents, viz: Messrs Ingraham and Marie. Mr. Aristide Marie is a refined and educated gentlemen, and is capable of filling any position within the gift of the people.

Governor Flanders, chairman of the body, being called away after the opening of the meeting, Captain Ingraham was called to the chair.

Judge Hiestand offered a series of resolutions sustaining General Sheridan in his recent letter to General Grant, characterizing Secretary Stanbery's opinion or interpretation of the reconstruction laws as in the interest alone of the rebels, etc., etc. The Judge sustained the resolutions in some pungent remarks. After some amendments and a lengthy debate, in which General Bussy opposed the passage of the same as impolitic. and a weight upon the Republican party of the North, they were adopted.

The resolutions were directed to be forwarded to the officers of Congress, as well as resolutions passed by the Louisiana Republican convention favoring a constitutional amendment forbidding distinction on account of race or color.

A committee was appointed to act in conjunction with a committee from the Loyal League and from the Grand Council, in making arrangements to celebrate the approaching 4th of July.

Mr. A, D. Grief sent in his resignation as member of the commttiee. A special committee was appointed to attend to filling vacancies occurring in the committee by what means soever.

The secretary of the committee was authorized to call upon that of the old committee to turn over the records and other papers.

The several wards of the city and of Orleans parish were instructed to hold elections June 28th for an additional member of parish committee.

General L. A. Sheldon, having heard that a resolution was to be offered for his expulsion from the committee, owing to certain testimony of his in the report of the congressional committee of investigation into the New Orleans riots, took the floor to show his Republican record to be a true one, and to repudiate anything in the above testimony to the contrary. He said, on being questioned as to his present views of the negro suffrage, that the law granted suffrage to all, and he should sustain the law.

The meeting adjourned to meet next Monday evening.

CHRISTIAN HOME—THE REGISTRY—PISTOL OR PAPER.

At Monroe I found a home and the privilege of family worship, with a family who are old residents and have managed to be loyal all through the late struggle between light and darkness. The registrars were on duty here, and two old friends being on the board, it was quite homelike at their quarters. Crowds of colored men stood about the door and within, all eager to be made citizens. They appeared to have quite an appreciation of the privilege, some had travelled all night, others starting before dawn, had journeyed until dark Many of them had been in the Union army, one who had a revolver hung to his belt, after taking a lecture on the folly of carrying it, was asked by the officer, "which would you rather have, the pistol or the paper? when he at once laid his revolver on the table. It had cost him $25 very recently. Occasionally one would have wrong notions of the registry. An old man asked whether he could draw rations on his paper; another if he might bring his wife to get one; others had been told that by registering they would put themselves in the army. Several were refuse because of having been run off to Texas, during the war by their masters and had not since been a year in this State. (Is this right?) Very few whites have registered, the proportion so far is 50 to 500 colored, but among these are many true Union men.

UNEASY REBELS—FLAG OF FREEDOM—GENEROUS DONATION.

Some restiveness has been exhibited by parties in this parish, about the appointment of gentlemen from New Orleans as Registrars for fear their influence is "calculated to destroy that harmony and good feeling, which has hitherto existed, unbroken between the races" which is very likely to be the case if they mean, instructing the new citizens that they will be protected in voting as they please and in preferring at the polls men who have been true to the Union and freedom. I heard a number of complaints made to the Registrars by laborers, of ill treatment, and some of being beaten and threatened with death for going to be registered. The beautiful flag of our country flying from Capt. Merrills flag staff, seems to speak of justice to all. These complainants were sent to the Freedman's Bureau, and by the Agent referred to the civil authorities, but under the present system, not one case in a score receivs attention.

Through the kindness of the late Bureau Agent, Capt. Morey, a gentleman has been induced to give us a fine lot for church and schoolhouse, and a burying ground. He has laid out in building lots, a large tract near the town, for the freedmen and others of small means. Many discharged soldiers are only waiting to receive their bounties, to purchase and make themselves homes. It is a politic as well as a benevolent act; for the lots will sell the more readily, that these people will have so near them, a neat church, comfortable schoolhouse and their own minister.

1ST WASHITA QUARTERLY CONFERENCE—THE OLD OAK—CHRISTIAN LIBERTY.

The time for Conference came, but no room could be found. A planter who has done former kindnesses to the laborers of his place, gave us permission to hold our meetings under a grand old oak near his house. At 11 o'clock Saturday we had preaching; at 3 o'clock the Conference was held, 235 members were reported, 8 appointments, 18 conversions, 29 baptisms, 1 death, 5 marriages, 2 Sunday schools, 48 scholars, 5 local preachers, 2 exhorters. A board of trustees was elected, all having property, 3 being church members, 2 are not, but useful respectable citizens, who will do their duty. They will get an act of incorporation, and be an efficient board of church officers. I had the pleasure of receiving from Capt. Morey, the deed to the M. E. Church, of our lot 60 by 140 feet, and work is at once to be begun upon the house. Brother Fenner has a good official board, he and brother Sims of Bastrop are doing good on this large circuit. Brother Jackson of Carroll could not reach us because of the water, which has also stopped his work. It was a novel scene, that little company under the old oak. There was talk of toils and perils in the past and plans for the future. It was asked "will we be protected? may we worship, vote, labor as we please?" Some reported outrages and feared persecution, but the little band were hopeful. Some of the preachers had been at it 39 to 50 years in Virginia, Maryland, Louisiana, and all rejoiced at the liberty in Christ, that was now enjoyed.

SABBATH SERVICES IN THE WOODS—A GOOD BEGINNING.

Our night meeting was held in a cabin near town. Brother Fenner preached a good sermon, several persons came forward as seekers, and one professed conversion. The Sabbath services were held in the woods farther out, reached by a walk through fields and crossing a Bayou several times on logs. It was a place fit for camp meeting. Here a new cabin was thrown open to us and all day the work of the Lord went on gloriously. First a Sunday school of 40 children was organized, an excellent superintendent was appointed Then the love-feast, a happy, happy time, some curious and thrilling testimonies were given. Then the preaching and Sacraments, a large number came to the Lord's table, two infants and one adult were baptized, three more were candidates for immersion, sixteen joined class, $128 was subscribed for building, principally in small sums of one to four dollars, for our people are poor. The stewards have on their list $300—one planter gives $50, many citizens and our friendly registrars have given sums of $10 and $5—and if we can get help from the Missionary board the Church will soon be built. On Monday the Board of Trustees organized, all accepted the office. A resolution of thanks to M. Tilhout for his donation of the lot, was passed, and one petitioning the Missionary board for an appropriation to aid them in building; $500 was asked. A contract was made with a builder, to erect a house for about two thousand dollars.

BLIND PREACHER—BENEVOLENCE.

One of our local preachers here is an old man from Baltimore, who is entirely blind. He was owned near Monroe for many years, and was a good blacksmith. The blindness was caused by cateract. His master dying, left directions in his will for all the slaves to be kept together and for the comfort of Uncle George; but the parties into whose hands the estate fell, turned off the old man, and he has since been kindly cared for by Mr. Fargout, the gentleman who has given us $50, and who is noted for kindness to his people. A country surgeon lately operated upon one of Uncle George's eyes, destroying it. The remaining one, may be partially restored and measures have been taken to send him to New Orleans for the best surgical aid. One colored men told me he would pay $25 towards restoring Uncle George to sight.

NUMBER XVII.

Mama, in resuming her story, said: "Before you journey with me to another Circuit, I will relate to you a little incident of Miriam, which occurred when she was seven years old. She was attending school about a mile distant from our house. It was my custom to have the girl accompany her in the morning, and to go for her in the evening. But this day, which was cold and windy, the school closed earlier than usual, and the teacher with the best intentions, as the girl had not yet come for her, secured an opportunity for her to ride part of the way, supposing she could, with safety, walk the rest of the way alone. She did so, but on arriving at the house, the frail little creature sank down exhausted, too weak to call, too cold to open the door, and thus was rapidly sinking into that frozen sleep that knows no waking; and would have soon expired, while we were all warm and cheerful within, had I not imagined I heard a cat mewing, and opening the door, there sat our little girl perfectly motionless—and oh! may kind heaven save me from such an another moment. I caught her up in a frenzy of emotion, but to my joy found that she was alive, for she faintly begged me to let her remain quiet, an expression common to any one at that point of freezing. As we placed her in cold water she suffered the most acute pain, and rubbing her for some time we were blissfully relieved by knowing no serious effects would follow.

Miriam was delighted to accompany her Papa, which she was often allowed to do, when he had not far to go; for my duties now detained me at home. Every new house was blessed with a new treasure, and here Addison was added to our number, bringing joy and gladness to our hearts.

There were many amusing circumstances connected with marriages and weddings. At one wedding the company was regaled with a cup of tea, which was in those days considered a great treat, as tea was very expensive, and only used on extra occasions. Before the company had left the room, an old lady passed around the table and drank from each cup what was left that none of the precious beverage might be lost, and which she seemed to enjoy wondrously, smacking her lips as she drained the contents of each cup. Your Father was sent for in great haste to marry a couple at a hotel, not far distant. They were called public houses or taverns in those days, in the country, and very reputable when kept by a good man. The bride and bridegroom made a great dash, and put on any amount of airs, but when he came to pay the fee handed your Father fifty cents. Just as your Pa was seated in his wagon to return, the landlord asked him how much he had received. Your Father hesitated, and at first refused to inform him, but said he, "I will hold your horse until you tell me," and when he learned it was only fifty cents, he turned to his groom and commanded him to hold the horse until he returned. He plainly told the newly married man that if he did not give the Elder (as ministers were often called) more, after making such a display, that he would see before he left the place that he had a coat of tar and feathers which would be more becoming to such littleness than the one he had on. To this feathering allusion he handed over fifty cents more, which the landlord brought out exultantly to your Father, saying, "take this, it was all I could scare out of him, and it will do a little better than nothing." On another occasion in the case of a poor, but honest man, who asked your Father after the ceremony was pronounced if he would not take his pay in some white beans he had on hand, which he accepted very cheerfully.

Our next Circuit was G—, in Conn., and on arriving there found there was no Parsonage; but some good brother allowed us to have one room, and a bed room until we could do better. There were now eight in our family, including the girl. We remained there until Autumn and then moved not far from the village, and near meeting and school.

While in this house we had a very narrow escape from having it burned down over our heads It had taken fire near the chimney, in the chamber that we seldom used, and burned into a bag of flour or corn meal which was standing near; as the fire burned the bag, the flour poured out and extinguished the flames as was afterwards discovered, and thus it was that God watched over us with more than a father's care.

In the village there were large woollen factories, and a great many girls employed in them who attended our church. I now not only made plain bonnets for the good old Methodist sisters, but as the annual Conference was held every other year in New York city, my friends there often sent me many of the more fashionable styles by your Father, which I made up for the girls employed in the factory. Thus we enjoyed many little comforts that our small salary would not allow, as we seldom if ever received that in full. At nearly the close of this year, Fisk was born making a quartette of boys. And now Olin and Wilberforce were old enough to attend school with Miriam and Edith, leaving me alone witth Addison and Fisk during the day.

As cold winter came on I was often alone with my children for weeks, while your Pa was absent on his extensive Circuit. Often the snow would fall at a great depth, and some kind neighbor would come wadding through the drifts "to shovel us out" as he would say, and take care of the cow and pig. Some of these Circuits extended away up into New Hampshire and Vermont, and at times when his return was delayed, I would become so anxious I could scarcely work by day, or sleep at night. As a relief to my anxious heart, I have often called the children around me several times during the day, and read from the Bible some precious promise, and then lifted my heart in earnest prayer, in which all the little ones joined, that their Father's precious life might be spared in the midst of the storm and cold. I was not the only one praying for him, as I must tell you. There was an excellant sister Mary, known as the Preacher's friend, who lived at a remote part of the Circuit, and like Anna of old, continued in supplications night and day. One day the snow had fallen to a great depth, and as the evening came it increased with wind, heaping up the snow into fearful mountains, obstructing the highways, and rendering them almost if not entirely impassable. This holy woman had been engaged in prayer nearly all day, and when night came on with its infuriated storm, she piled the logs on the large fire place, and kept a kettle of water boiling, and ever and an anon would go to the door, and listen amid the howlings of the storm, then return and kneel in prayer. Being asked why she did this, she said, she had an impression that brother E—, the minister, was out in this storm, and that God would direct him to their house before morning, and that she had resolved to sit up all night and keep the fire burning, and a hot cup of tea ready for him. She said also that she would keep the candle burning, which light might aid him to find the house. It was nearly midnight while repeating her listening at the door, that she heard a faint cry for help at a distance. She instantly aroused the family, and sent the men out; and ere long the weary and worn Itinerant in the person of your Father was brought into their comfortable home He had started in the morning, hoping to reach his appointment during the day, but night and the storm had overtaken him, and baffling with storm and wind, he had lost his way. His faithful horse would flounder in the drifts until both horse an rider were for a time buried in the fleecy covering; recovering a little, they would proceed until again lost sight of; continuing thus until almost ready to give up in despair, and while on the verge of hopelessness, he espied a light in the distance, and making a desperate effort, the horse and rider again plunged forward that if possible they might find a haven from the fury of "such a storm," little dreaming that true and warn christian hearts were keeping faithful vigils and that beyond was a light in the window for him. Judge of his surprise on being met by stalwart forms before reaching the house, who carried him all fainting in their arms; then imagine the gratitude that must have inspired his heart while he was nursed as tenderly as a child until after many days when he had recovered from his exhaustion, and the storm had abated. When his faithful horse who had first saved his life while baffiing with the snow and storm, and who had not been forgotten in the abundance the stable afforded, came up in his nobility to the door and received the refreshed Itinerant as if proud to bear the burden, and both went on their way rejoicing.

EVANGELINE.

General Monthly Meeting of the Union Sons Relief Association of Louisiana.

New Orleans, La., June, 17, 1867.

Meeting called to order by the President at 20 minutes to 7 o'clock P. M.

HENRY CLAY, President presiding.

Meeting opened with prayer by Rev. Emperor Williams; Constitution read

Proceedings of last General Monthly meeting read and approved.

Proceedings of the Board of Finance meeting read and approved.

Proceedings of Female officers', meeting read and approved.

Proceedings of Quarterly meeting. read and approved.

Proceedings of Board of Officers' meeting read and approved.

After which the Secretary called the Roll and collected dues and fines.

The President then said as this was the end of our year, and as the reports of all business, and transactions of the Association done during that time, should be read at this meeting, but as it was adopted at the Officers' meeting that the election for Officers should commence not later than 9 o'clock, and as it is very near that time now, he would ask the Association to postpone reading said reports until the next Quarterly Meeting.

Moved by Wm. B. Runel, seconded by W. H. Alexander, that the annual reports be laid over until next Quarterly Meeting. Adopted.

The President stated that there was a vacancy in the nomination for Board of Trustees caused by Mr. Fields being nominated as Vice-President. Mr. Henry Edwards nominated Edward Johnson to fill the vacancy. Adopted unanimously.

The President announcod the house in order to receive new members.

The following persons were received as members of this Association after conforming to the Constitution and By-Laws.

Mrs. Clara Jackson, age 39 years, born in Louisiana, Residence 127 Congress street. Mrs. Menta Brown, aged 40 years, born in Maryland, Residence 117 Basin street.

The President then called the Commissioners of election to prepare the polls, he then announced the house in order for election, the President then withdrew from the chair, to allow the Vice-President to preside over the meeting during the election.

The Vice-President said to have order, and to avoid confusion, he will not allow any more than one bench of members to come at the polls at once.

The Secretary and Commissioners said they were prepared to receive the votes of the members for President and Vice-President.

The Secretary then read the names of the Candidates for the office of President and Vice-President:

Henry Clay for President, David Douglas for Vice President; W. P. Runel for President; Edward Fields for Vice-President.

The Commissioners then proceeded to receive the votes for said candidates, after voting was over, the tickets were counted by the Commissioners and Secretary with the following result.

Henry Clay and David Douglas received 154 votes; W B. Runel and Edward Fields received 44 votes

The Vice-President appointed the Commissioners to notify the candidates to come to the stand and hear the result of the election.

The Secretary then announced the result of the election to the house which was received with great applause.

The Secretary then administered the Oath of Office to Mr. Clay and Mr. Douglas, after which they were installed into their seats as President and Vice-President of the Union Sons Relief Association for one year from this day.

The President elect then addressed the meeting thanking them for the honor and confidence that they show they have in him, by electing him again as their President, and said he has taken the oath to discharge the duties of President, and defend the Constitution and By-Laws of this Association, and he interds to carry out every law, and do all the good he can in maintaining peace and harmony in the Association.

Mr. Douglas, Vice-President elect then made a short address to the meeting thanking them for the compliment shown him in electihg him Vice-President saying that he will always aim to do good, and harmonize, and can always be found when wanting, and wanted the members to know that he is a Republican and stands on the Radical Republican Platform. Mr. W. B. Runel made a few remarks to the members thanking them for their votes, and said he had run before against the President, and said he was the only one that could get near the President, but he congratulated him on his success, and hope when they elect a Treasurer, he hoped they will elect a man who will fill the office as he tried to do.

Mr. E. Fields also addressed the meeting, and said he advocated that there ought to be a new president, and the society required it, but as its members have seen fit to re-elect their old President and his party was beaten, he congratulated the blue ribbon on their success.

The Commissioners then proceeded on with the election of Trustees.

The following gentlemen were unanimously elected Trustees to serve one year.

Rev. Emperor Williams, Henry Edwards, W. H. Alexander, Floyd Calhoun, Aaron Washington.

The Secretary then administered the oath of office unto them, and they were installed into office. Rev. E. Williams then addressed the society giving a history of the Society from its foundation to this day and felt proud to see the confidence of the members by re-electing him, as a Trustee, an office held since the society was incorporated, and was glad to see the old President re-elected, he then made a few encouraging remarks on the duties of each officer and member.

Mr Edwards and Mr. Alexander also made a few pleasant remarks to the meeting.

Mr. Peter Joseph late Vice-President made a few remarks before retiring from his officer, and said that within the past year he has always strived to fill the duties of his office as far as it lay in his power, and hoped the members were satisfied with him during his reign as an office, he said he was the first that said we ought to have another man for President in place of Mr. Clay, and see if they could not do as well as Mr. Clay, but as the members have seen fit to retain him by re-electing him again, he congratulated them on their success and choice.

The Secretary then read a letter from Mrs. Nancy Jacob, asking relief of the members. The members voluntarily contributed six dollars for her.

The Secretary said he had collected $60 for dues, fines, initiation fees which he paid into the treasury.

The President said he thought the minutes of this meeting should be published.

It was unanimously adopted that the secretary have the minutes of this meeting published on Sunday in the N. O. Advocate, Republican and Tribune.

Benediction by Rev. Jos. Jones.

Meeting adjourned.

CHAS. E. LEHMAN, Sec'y.

CHRISTIAN GROWTH BY LABOR.—Health of body can be preserved only by outdoor exercise, and cheerful labor gives a tone both to mind and body. Spiritual health is equally dependent on labor, and the idle Christian is exposed to many more perils. An exchange says: We have tried to make Christians without giving them anything to do; which is like trying to make swimmers without the use of hands or feet. The churches are all full of religious dyspeptics, feeble of purpose, weak in faith, indifferent, languid, listless, of little use to themselves or anybody else, and all for want of the natural exercise which would come from doing God's waiting work in the world. Admit that Christian character is the great thing; that piety and personal holiness are the very highest states and attainments; but to acquire those qualities, and rise up to that serene elevation, we must do something more than to sit even in a closet.

Freedman's Savings and Trust Company.

A Branch of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, incorporated by act of Congress, approved March 3, 1865, by President Abraham Lincoln, was opened in this city a year ago, at No. 114 Carondelet street.

The gallant manner in which it has weathered the late panic and financial storm should alone commend it to the colored population, for whose benefit it was created, as the proper place for them to deposit their savings.

Section five of its charter orders that a portion of the sums deposited (not exceeding two-thirds) be invested in the stocks, bonds, treasury notes, or other securities of the United States, and the Cashier HAS FULL AUTHORITY TO DRAW THE FULL AMOUNT OF HIS DEPOSITS, at all times.

MEDICAL.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,

127 CARONDELET STREET,

Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic, and Acute

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. As it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient, that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years, in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient, if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the Institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering often ite.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet Street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city.

☞ Consultation free—stamps not "forgotten."

MASON & HAMLIN,

MANUFACTURERS OF

CABINET ORGANS,

ALSO

PORTABLE ORGANS,

ADAPTED TO SECULAR AND SACRED MUSIC, FOR DRAWING-ROOMS, CHURCHES, SUNDAY AND DAY SCHOOLS, LODGES, &C., &C.

Uniting to a considerable extent the capacity of the Piano-Forte with that of the Pipe-Organ, and costing much less than either.

They occupy little space; are elegant as furniture; not liable to get out of order, and are securely boxed, so that they can be sent anywhere by ordinary freight routes, all ready for use.

Forty styles, plain or elegant cases; one to twelve stops; Prices, $75, $90, $110, $125, $130, $1 0, $150, $160, $170, $200, $225, $250, $300, $435, $540, $550, $600, and upwards.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs were introduced four years since, and are a great improvement upon the Melodeon, Harmonium, and other reed organs, greatly excelling them especially in the excellent quality and variety of their tones; in power and quickness of action, and capacity for expression,

THEIR SUCCESS HAS BEEN ENTIRELY BEYOND PRECEDENT,

and proves how greatly such an instrument was needed. Again and again the manufacturers have been compelled to double their manufacturing facilities, until they have been increased six-fold. From the most eminent of the musical profession, the most distinguished pianists, organists, composers, and musical directors, the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs have received an amount and degree of commendation never before bestowed upon any similar musical instrument. More than two hundred and fifty of the most eminent musicians in the country have given written testimonials to the value of the improvements contained in them, and that they excel all other instruments of this class.

FIFTY-TWO GOLD OR SILVER MEDALS, or other highest Premiums have been awarded to Mason & Hamlin for the important improvements effected by them, and for the

SUPERIORITY OF THEIR INSTRUMENTS TO ALL OTHERS.

Constantly exhibiting their instruments in competition with others, they have been awarded the highest premium in every instance, but three or four.

For churches, sunday schools, etc., the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs are the instruments long wanted, of the very best quality, abundant power, not too expensive, nor liable to get out of order.

For private use, in drawing-rooms, &c., they are not less desirable, and are finding a place in the musical families of the principal cities.

They are adapted to a wider range of music than the piano, being fitted for all sacred music and for much secular music, while their quickness of action is such that the most lively, rapid music can be played on them. Then their cost is greatly less, as well as their liability to get out of order.

BRIEF EXTRACTS FROM OPINIONS OF DISTINGUISHED MUSICIANS.

I should think they would become very much sought after as parlor instruments as well as for public performance.—Sigismund Thalberg, the world-renowned Pianist. Sure to find its way into every household of taste and refinement which can possibly afford its moderate expenses. Far superior to everything of its class I have seen.—L. M. Gottschalk, the eminent Pianist. Such pure musical tones, promptness and smoothness of action and fine variety of effect, I have not found in any other instrument of the class.—S. B. Mills, the eminent Pianist. Really so excellent that there can hardly be much difference of opinion respecting them.—William Mason, the eminent Pianist. The best instrument of its class with which I am acquainted, and worthy a place in every drawing room. Harry Sanderson, the eminent Pianist. In every respect far superior to everything I have ever seen of the kind, whether in Europe or America.—Geo. Washbourne Morgan the eminent organist, N. Y. I can only reiterate what so many in the musical profession have said, that for equality, promptness and exquisite tone, they are unequalled.—John H. Wilcox, the eminent Organist, Boston. Surpasses everything in this line I have ever seen, whether French or American.—Jon Zundel, the eminent Organist, N. Y. The best reed instruments in the world are made in the United States, and your Cabinet Organs are greatly superior, and by far the best made here.—Max Maretzer, Musical Conductor, N. Y. Far surpasses all other similar instruments, which have come under my observation.—Carl Zerhau, Musical Conductor, Boston. Exceeds in my estimation every other instrument of this general class. Thos. Hastings I can recommend them with confidence.—Lowell Mason. As soon as the people become acquainted with the superior merits of your instruments, your only trouble will be to supply the demand.—Wm. B. Bradbury. I have never seen anything of the kind which interested me so much.—Geo. F. Root. Exciting much interest in musical circles, and already becoming the fashion. N. Y. Home Journal. The highest accomplishment of industry in this department. This is not only our opinion, but the unanimous verdict of the organists.—Boston Advertiser. A glorious instrument for the temple service, so readily secured as to be available for any congregation, and effective and beautiful as to meet the desires of the most refined and fastidious.—N. Y. Observer.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs must not be confounded with other reed instruments, from which they vary essentially, their superiority veing largely derived from PATENTED IMPROVEMENTS, which cannot be employed by other makers. Among them are,

The AUTOMATIC BELLOWS SWELL, patented, a most important invention, and greatly the best swell ever devised being much more effective and easily used than any other. The variety and beauty of effect of which it is capable, can not be appreciated except from actual use. The many attempts to imitate or find a substitute for this swell, prove its value. None of them, however, approach it in excellence and simplicity.

IMPROVED SELF-ADJUSTING VALVES patented, secure much more perfect action, durability, and freedom from inability to get out of order.

WOOD'S OCTAVE COUPLET patented, in effect nearly doubles the power of the instrument in which it is used.

NOISELESS SAFETY VALVES patented, prevent the hissing sound often heard.

The IMPROVED COMBINATION REGISTER patented, gives great facility in drawing stops.

For the New Orleans Advocate.

Death of Gen. Jas. C. Rice.

This gallant christian soldier, in leading a desperate charge at the battle of the Wilderness May 10, 1864, fell mortally wounded. His friends, desiring to relieve his acute pain, asked how he would be turned? He answrered: "Turn my face to the enemy!"

Upon a blood-stained, mossy couch
The wounded hero, dying lay,
While 'round him stood in silent grief
His stalwart warriors of the day.

And as the booming cannons roar,
Came pealing from the neighboring hill,
The chieftain brave, faintly essayed
To intimate his dying will.

They bent the ear to catch the sound
So feebly made in death's last throe,
And heard in tones of living fire,
"Oh! turn my face unto the foe."

In mournful cadence deep and sad,
Requiems on every breeze arise,
Around us are the notes of woe,
Our braves are summoned to the skies.

TO THE HERO OF THE VALLEY.

Peerless leads a Union chief,
His warriors to the fight;
In serried ranks of glittering steel.
Like flashing meteor light—
I see them sweeping up the vale,
Proudly their chargers go;
Huzza! they've gained grim Fisher's hill,
Stronghold of rebel foe.
High on its crest they plant the flag:
"Espoir! bright hope!" they cry,
"Restore we will our Father's trust—
We'll conquer or we'll die!
Dawning with our historic day,
A star appears of dazzling ray,
Ne'er may its brightness fade away!"

Funeral Sermon,

ON THE DEATH OF MILLIE SCOTT, HARRIET TAYLOR AND ALEXANDER LEWIS.

Preached by Rev. Anthony Ross, in Wesley Chapel, June 30th, 1867.

Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live.—John 11:25

This Sunday is set apart to pay our last respects to and commemorate the sainted dead of our Church. Its what, has been our habit from the earliest ages, to pay our respects to our good members who have died in the Lord. They have had joy and sorrow, bitter and sweet, deep and shallow waters, just as we now have; they have fought through all and have left us a good testimony. They have gone and will not come us, but we must go to them. This world is God's plantation, and he must have the fruit that grows thereon. The saints are the fruit and he gathers it home.

Millie Scott was the Lord's old embassador, who walked circumspectly before the world, and when she came down to the bed of death, she shook hands with a world of troubles, and cried, "let go the line," and sailed for glory. She saw the heavenly squad on the other shore, and there was not a dot of a cloud between her soul and Jesus. She is now in the Lord's dressing room. Does you know what that means? That means Paradise. We don't go to heaven till after the resurrection; not until the crack of the last trumpet sounds "awake." We first go to the dressing room and wait for our bodies to come and then be clothed with immortality.

Harriet Taylor died happy in the Lord, and is gone where the angels are. We shall see her no more on earth, but we shall see her in glory. And Alexander Lewis, son of Dr. Lewis, also left a good testimony behind. Their leaders speak well of them all. They were the buds of heaven—not buds bitten by the frosts of persecutions, but buds that are now blooming in paradise. What a thing it is to be a Christian. not a half-done one, but a whole-done Christian, with the sweet leaven of grace in the heart.

"I am the resurrection and the life." Believe thou this? These words dropped from the lips of Jesus. Not spoken by a man, for he was a God-man. He was addressing a poor feeble vessal, a woman, the sister of Lazarus. The penman of this gospel, wrote three epistles. He was originally a fisherman, and being called to be one of our Lord's disciples, he was his peculiar favorite. He lived longer than any of the other disciples, and saw the first denial of Christ's divinity. His aim was to establish the fundamental principles of Christianity, and excuse the rejection of the Messiah by the Jews. He tells of the Lord's miracles, which were wrought to convince the Pharisees. Water was turned into wine; the temple was purged; the dead raised to life, and he healed the blind. In all his carriage and movements he sought to convince the jews. By working these, he showed one great step in the foundation of his church.

But the resurrection of Lazarus was his mightiest miracle. Never before, had he so explained about his own resurrection as he did to Martha and Mary. He comes to Bethany where he was well known; and it is a happy thing to be acquainted with the friend sinners. The Church must imitate his footsteps. Hence, therefore, Lazarus was sick and his sisters sent word to Jesus. This was a great trial for them. They were like us, passing through a howling wilderness, but God afflicts those whom he loves. They grieved for their brother. It is just like us. It combines so in us, that we grieve for our dead and cant help it, when the Lord takes away our darling from our breast. But they sent for Jesus and at the lap of two days he said to his disciples, "Lazarus is dead and I am glad." I will now prove that I am the true Messiah, sent from the bosom of my Father. "Ah!" said the sisters, "Lord if thou hadst been here our brother had not died." "Ah! Ah! I know it," said Jesus. His sympathy was moved. "Where have ye laid him." They came to the grave and rolled away the stone, and Jesus looked up to heaven once, and cried, "Lazarus, come forth." Death gave up its victim, and the sheeted dead stood before him. What cant our Jesus do? (Great shouting.)

Now there is great meaning in these words. We must be resurrected twice, the heart must first rise and then the body. By the first resurrection we cry Abba Father, and by the second, we are made perfect. Any here to-day who have been resurrected? Our sisters who are gone were resurrected. Sister Millie had no one to send and say, "Jesus is come," but there was a voice within that cried, "cut loose the shore-line and let the little bark go." With the eye of faith she saw the angels standing on the distant shore, waiting for her coming. Just as she was dying, some one said, "How do you feel?" when she said, "All is well; hoist up the window and let in the king of glory. Angels are all around my bed; I hear the bells on the other shore ringing; I shake hands with a world of trouble; the stamp is on my forehead, and the sword is in my hand and I cut loose my little bark. Fare ye well, fare ye well." (Great rejoicings.) We believe our good sisters are hovering over us. Only a veil betwixt us. No chilly winds nor poisonous breathe there; no dogs nor hell-hounds their to chase the poor slave; no nigger-traders there to sell them at the auction-block. But all is joy in paradise, and there the angels are flying through the lips of heaven crying, "glory, glory." This is the religion that brings down the high mountains and brings up the valleys. God is now reigning and we are free. Don't give back. We shall stem the billows of life's ocean. We may be separated here. Ah wife! your old slave husband may be buried under some old sugar-mill where he died in his toils, or thrown in a swamp with the aligators, but at the first crack of the tall angel's trump, he shall come up all in white. I am so glad there is to be a judgment. At that day we shall sit on the clouds of glory, and then, could I meet with an angel, I would sing him a song. This religion makes a nice Christian; makes him die nice, and makes the grass grow nice over his grave. This religion is for every body, and no body can break the seal of our faith. If it were not so, the big-bugs would have it all and would not give us a tea-cup full.

There are a great many of these tall people in this city who want a nice religion, a nice preacher and go to heaven in a nice way. But old Paul was not one these of nice preachers. He was the highest kind of a preacher and of the right stripe, and wanted his crown decked with the stars. There is as much difference between some preachers as there is between a mocking-bird and a whip-poor-will. Some people want to know all about the stars; how high heaven is; but I want Jesus and him crucified. What is this? It is, wife obey your husband, and husband take care of your wife. It is to cut loose from fashion; to take off them turtle shells from your heads, them fancy skirts, that paint, and don't make the Lord's house a flower-garden. O Lord give me another peal so I can fire one more shot at these high-headed christians. Now such christians are not genuine, for a genuine saint is one who is double jointed, sure footed, and who has eyes before and apt. He has been resurrected and has the keys of the kingdom. Now I dont want you to be high-headed christians. For God has done a great deal for you. He sot you free and nobody else, and you are responsible for your freedom. Then put on the whole armour of righteousness, for the rule of the gospel is, believe and you shall be saved. This is true, the world over, way over in England and over here in Annopolis and Connecticut. This is my message to you to-day, and may God crown you with his blessing.

For the New Orleans Advocate.

A prelude—"Follow copy"—Map of Louisiana rivers, lakes and bayous—A tour—Ouchita, Sisters and Tributaries—Crops, corn and cotton—Towns—Revenue—Beautiful stream—The country—companions in travel—Croakers—"Yankee" haters—Constitution lovers—"Union men"—Postal affairs—School-houses and Churhces—Reconstruction, etc., etc.

MY DEAR DOCTOR:

Learned essays and labored discussions, of questions, theological or political, is to be feared, may produce dyspepsia among the numerous readers of your very popular paper, unless you occasionally, make room for more miscellaneous articles, such as running notes of travel, written off-hand, and in a style, "free and easy." And hence, as a sanitary measure, I submit this hurried epistle, and ask you to

FOLLOW COPY.

Indeed, if you would keep in the good graces of your correspondents, you must whisper in the ear of the printer, authoritatively, to "follow copy," and to do so verbatum, literatum, et punctuatum. For very often, the very pith of an article, as well as the meaning of the writer, are both lost, by not doing so. And the same is true as to words and phrases, intended to be in italics, or designated by quotation marks. As no one knows, so well as the writer himself, provided he is capable of writing for the press, how an article, or sentence, should be punctuated; what should be in italics; where a capital letter, and where quotation marks should be used. Hence, I repeat, "follow copy," and print this paragraph as a standing admonition to the type setter, and the proof reader.

MAP OF LOUISIANA.

Now, take up the map of Louisiana, and you will be struck with astonishment at the almost endless number of rivers, lakes and bayous, which check the State all over, from center to circumference, all navigable, too, for a good class steamer, the greater portion of the year. So that you can go to almost every nook and and corner of this banner State, of sugar and cotton, by steamboat, from New Orleans, the great commercial metropolis of the Southwest, thus placing each and every plantation all over the State, almost equally adjacent to the market.

ACTUAL OBSERVATION THE BEST KNOWLEDGE.

But you do not fully realize this great advantage, untill you break away from your cloister, in the crowded city, and take a few trips into the interior, if Louisiana has any interior, for nearly every large plantation is adjoining some navigable water—river, lake or bayou.

A TOUR UP THE OUACHITA.

I am off now, on a tour—steamer "Idahoe," Captain Blanks and Clerk Frisbee, gentlemanly officers, a nice commodious boat, good rooms, and splendid fare—company, miscellaneous. Well, the first 200 miles, is up the Mississippi river, traveled over by all, so often, that everything is familiar, without description. We reached "Red River Landing." Here we make a short turn into what is called "Old River," supposed to have been the former channel of the Mississippi. But this, soon brings us into "Red River," which at present, on account of the unprecedented over-flow, seems to be, figuratively speaking, "without bottom or shore." We pass up, amid the wild waste of waters, 40 miles, to what is called "Black River." Here we leave "Red River," so named, by the way, on account of the color of the water, colored by the peculiar characteristics of the soil along the shore, when the water is low enough to have a shore, and pass into "Black River," so named frow the color of its water—a dark colored, yet clear stream. On and up we go, still in the wide expanse of water, from overflow, for 70 miles, which is the entire length of this river. Here we come to where three rivers, all navigable, come together—"Little River," "Ouachita," pronounced (Washita,) and "Tensas," forming the Black River. Here the flourishing town of Trinity is located, so named, from the trinity of rivers. It is situated in the forks, between Little River and Ouachita. Our course is up the Ouachita, one of the most lovely streams and running through one of the most fertile regions of country, in the world, leaving the Tensas, between us and the Mississippi, to our right, and the Little River, to our left. Twenty miles up, brings us to Harrisonburg, behind which, stands a high, romancit bluff, on which may be seen, the ruins of "Fort Beauregard," which, in the time of the war, was an elaborate, expensive, and as was supposed, an impregnable Fort, to prevent the screaming, screeching, and much dreaded, "Yankee gunboats," from penetrating the rich and fertile regions of the Ouachita country. Yet, although, it is said the Fort was erected, and its guns mounted, at an expense of two millions of dollars, when the Federal army, or rather a few "Yankees," as the boys say in playing marbles, "took roundenses," on them, as Grant did at Vicksburg, and came up in the rear, they blew up their own Fort, and took to their heels, before the villainous gunboats came up, and left Harrisonburg to perish, at the hands of the Yankee troops, right under the guns of their own Fort, deserted and destroyed, by its own builders.

BŒUF RIVER—CORN AND COTTON.

A short distance above, comes in still another river, called "Bœuf River." But we continue on our little lovely queen of rivers—the Ouachita. And having passed the overflowed region, our eyes are continuously greeted, on either bank, with the sight of the most lovely plantations in a high state of cultivation. The crops are principally of corn and cotton—all looking well, with the most inviting prospect of an abundant harvest. No soil could be more fertile, and I am free to say, that, in my judgment, corn and cotton could not look better than it does, in all the Ouachita country. And everything about the plantations, indicate no great scarcity of labor, and that the people are determined, in the future, to raise their own "bread and meat," and not rely, as heretofore, on their cotton, to supply them with everything—corn, hogs, cattle, and stock of every kind, will certainly be abundandt in this part of the State.

TOWNS—REVENUE.

Above Harrisonburg, we pass the towns of Columbia, Monroe, Trenton, &c. The principal business points, however, apart are Monroe and Trenton, both in the parish of Ouachita, but a few miles apart, but on opposite sides of the river, and seem to be alike prosperous. But Monroe, being on the line of the railroad, in course of construction from Vicksburg to Shreveport, and the present terminus of the road is destined to be the great town of all that rich, improving country. It is at present, the headquarters of the Third Internal Revenue District, for both the Assessor and Collector. And here too, I met your old friend Edwards, who is one of the Registers, for that Parish, who is "magnifying his office," and regards himself as one of the principal agents, in the reconstruction of that part of the State. And Captain Norcross, the vigilant and efficient Assessor, for the District, is bringing in an immense revenue to the government, which must cause the New Orleans District, to look well to its laurels, with all its superior advantages.

THE BEAUTIFUL OUACHITA.

We go up the Ouachita, over 200 miles from its mouth, at Trinity, and reach our destination, at Ouachita City, an infant village, where still another navigable stream comes in, called "Bayou Bartholomew," which is said to be remarkably accommodating in that, that it runs by almost every planter's door, so circuitous is it in its windings. It thus becomes one of the great feeders of the Ouachita River trade.

For hundreds of miles further, this beautiful river extends, away up into Arkansas, and through a country, as beautiful and productive as was ever washed by water course, or upon which the sun shines. But I am content. And withal, am in love with the "Idahoe," so I will return by the same route, and on the same boat.

OUR COMPANIONS IN TRAVEL.

Our companions in travel are not the miscellaneous, speculating, professional travellers, but the bona fide, residents of the country—the "yeomanry" the "bone and sinew" of the country. Almost to a man, they are ex-Confederate soldiers, or such as were in some way identified with the Confederate army, in the great war of the rebellion. And it is marvellous, to see how many of them retain their bitterness toward the government, and the Universal yankee nation. Indeed some of them seem to nurse their wrath, to keep it warm. This class, can see no good in the freedmen, and can scarcely tolerate any thing said in commendation of their conduct, and litterally scout the idea, of their ever being capable of self-government, or of exercising the right of suffrage. And it is worthy of note, that I noticed some, who talked in this way, had to sign their own names with a mark—unable to write. If it were not deemed too personal, I would mention one loud talker, on the Boat, of this class, whom I had occasion to know, could not write his name, yet he seemed never to tire, in talking of the incapacity of the Freedmen and abusing the "d—d yankees." He was complaining about the want of a school for his children—although an Indiana yankee, was teaching a School within a stones throw of his house—yet he said, with a terrible oath, my children shall live and die without ever learning to read, before I will let them go to any yankee teacher. Being a hoosier, that is, an Indiana yankee, myself, I probably felt unduly sensitive, but considered prudence the better part of valor, and simply exclaimed, "O Tempora! O Mores!" which, to him, meant anything, or nothing, as he seemed to think it was an expression, signifying my approbation of his undying devotion to the South, and the lost cause.

And yet these people claim to be the best friends, the negroes have, that they are their special guardians, to whom they are to look for "every good and perfect gift."

THE DEAR LOVERS OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Here, too, are a group of war-worn veterans, of the rebel army, who spent four or five years, in trying to overthrow this Government, and set at naught the Constitution, and who are now deeply distressed, over the present condition of the country, and the terrible jeopardy, in which the Constitution of our fathers, is placed, by the Radicals. They are expressing to each other their great fears that our government is gone, our institutions are in peril, and the constitution destroyed. Poor creatures! They would enlist your sympathies, to hear their doleful lamentations over the wrecked and ruined institutions of the country. O, such ardent patriots—"if you have tears to shed, prepare to shed them now", while you hear these patriots (?) who have fought, bled, and almost died, to destroy their country, and now having had a purer patriotism whipped into them, by yankee valor, are so sorely distressed at the way in which a Radical Congress is trampling on the Constitution of our fathers, and overturning the Government. In all candor, to hear these men talk, as I have, on this very tour, you would be lead to suppose that they were the Lord's annointed, and elect, chosen guardians of the Constitution, to whose hands have been committed the keeping of the Palladium of all our liberties. But when you come to enquire, more minutely, into their status, you will find that all this apparent alarm for the safety of the Constitution and the country, arises from their mortification at the failure of the "lost cause"—and their deep, undying hate, of the yankees, with a qualifiying epithet, which is a household word, in this connection, and constitutes their grace, before and after meals.

ANOTHER CLASS—THE TRUE MEN.

But there is a far different element in this country. A class of true men, who are Union men and patriots, in deed and truth, who are giving themselves, heart and soul, to the re-construction of the country. They mourn over the folly and wickedness of the past; and are seeking to retrieve lost fortunes, adapt themselves and their families, to the new order of things, and bring their State full fledged, like a dove, into the ark of the Federal Union, and thus, secure rest, quiet and happiness, to the whole country.

This class are disposed to extend a helping hand to the Freedmen, in their efforts to elevate themselves in the scale of intelligence, and that mental and moral culture, so essential to the proper exercise of the rights, and the enjoyment of the immunities, of American citizens. And this is the class that is winning the confidence of the freedmen; and, in my judgment, will control the destinies of Louisiana, in the future—wear her honors, heir her blessings and make her rich alluvial vales—"bud and blossom as the rose." So mote it be.

SCHOOL HOUSES AND CHURCHES.

One thing, especially attracted my attention, and that is, the almost perfect dearth of School Houses, and Churches. Even where large, luxurious, and thrifty plantations, were stretching out, on every hand, scarce a school house, or a church, was to be seen. I could but enquire what are you preachers—Missionary preachers, too, about, educated as you have been, and gifted with the eloquence of Apollos, and the logic of Paul, why is not your voice heard, like peals of thunder, calling on a slumbering church, North and South, to awake, awake, and come to the rescue of this country, morally, religiously. In this way, you would do more for the proper and permanent reconstruction of this country, than by all your political clubs, and party, organizations, upon which so much reliance is being placed. Look out upon this field, as I have done, for the last few days, and in your heart, you will exclaim, "the harvest truly is great." And no man need say, "four months, and then cometh the harvest." But, lift up your eyes, and see, "lo, the fields are already white to the harvest." Such an inviting field, I have never before seen. And woe, woe to the Church, if she enter not in, speedily.

Where is the burning zeal that fired the hearts of the Christian commission, in time of war? A little of that same zeal, expended on this country, now, would soon make the "wilderness and solitary places, glad for them and the desert to blossom as the rose." Why sir, everything is needed, books, papers, tracts, periodicals, bibles, testaments, teachers, colporteurs, preachers, all, all are needed, and needed everywhere. And I have thought, Louisiana must have been specially intended by the Prophet when he said, "blessed are ye that sow by the side of all waters." As in every part of the State, you will find yourself sowing by the side of waters. It has been said of Texas, that she has more rivers, and less waters, more cows and less milk, than any State in the Union. But not so of Louisiana—hence the field is easy of cultivation.

I am concerned about postal affairs, somewhat, and in conversing on this subject, an ex-member of the Legislature, and a preacher, informed me that there was great "disparity" in the mails in this country—meaning derangement, or delays, if he meant anything, and that the "i-rée" of the people, kept them from having Post Offices—meaning ire or wrath of the people, if he meant anything. And yet such men are looked up to, as leaders and guides. Surely, then, I am not mistaken, when I tell you of the great demand, all over this country, for a new order of things, in the way of schools and churches, mental and moral culture. And if you could put your talking tongue in thunders mouth, you should speak to the whole church, and bid her, at once to "go! go! come! come!" and come at once, into all this country, and "preach the Gospel to every creature." You will thus do more than all your "Ben. Butler Clubs," or "Republican" organizations in the city, for the evangelization, reconstruction and salvation, of this beautiful State.

"Where every prospect pleases,
And only man is vile."

I am hopeful for the future of Louisiana, but having finished my tour, I close my letter.

GULIELMUS.

On steamer Idahoe, Ouachita River, Louisiana, June 24th, 1867.

The Republican of the 23d ult., thus refers to our new church:

The new Methodist church, now being erected at the corner of Calliope and St Charles streets, is now almost under cover, and it is expected it will be ready for occupation about the first of September. Its progress has been before mentioned in these columns. The Crescent regards it as a very great improvement to the neighborhood, and as the pioneer of many similar enterprises on the same street, above Tivoli Circle.

Under the head of "Accessions to the M. E. Church," the Charleston Advocate says: "Rev. Thomas Evans, of the African M. E. Church, and some five hundred his of pastoral care, have recently connected themselves with the M. E. Church on Cooper River in this State. Rev. John Wesley Johnson, of Mars Bluff, and his charge of two hundred, having learned the difference between the African and the old Wesleyan Church, have, in a body, joined the M. E. Church."

The treasurer of our Orphan's Home, Captain W. B. Armstrong, has received the $3,000, appropriated by the city common council. Thanks to the council.

"Who is this?"

Such was the question that once passed from lip to lip through an excited multitude assembled in the metropolis of Judea. Slowly descending from the Mount of Olives, a mighty procession was seen moving toward the city, bearing the symbols and uttering the rejoicings of a royal coronation. In the midst, riding in meek, yet kingly glory, was an illustrious character, the fame of whose wisdom and mighty works was spread throughout the land. The fulfillment of prophecy, the triumph of Christ, the public declaration of his claim to the Messiahship, all centered in this hour. His disciples were overjoyed; the people rent the air with acclamations, and as they entered the holy city the joy sped even to the children in the temple, who echoed back the glad hosannas to the son of David. The entire city was moved; the wave of excitement rolled through its whole extent, and the sudden surprise awakened a universal questioning among the people. Happy, if at this auspicious moment they had known their day of visitation, and accepted as their promised Messiah, him who came with such grand testimonials of his mission.

We are not to suppose that at this time, either spiteful Jews or the exultant friends of Christ fully understood the nature of his mission, or the design of that kingdom he was about to establish. Rather, we may say, that none of them understood the spiritual purposes of the great Restorer. They had before them a vision of temporal magnificence, and were unable to ascend to the elevations of thought necessary to grasp those vaster, grander spiritual results, which rise so infinitely above the poor things of human crowns, conquests and empires. Nor are we as yet so far elevated in our views as to appreciate the immense superiority of spiritual and moral, over worldly grandeur. We often turn with far more interest to the history of human conflicts, of strifes for power, of kingdoms and nations established or overthrown, than to the incomparably grander scenes of moral conflict and victory But, though disciples as well as Jews fell far below a true estimate of the real purposes of the expected Deliverer, they each regarded his coming as an event unequalled in its bearings on the destinies of the world. The appearance of one who claimed this high character, and especially of one whose wisdom and power measured to the highest demands of this great mission, and who was accepted amid such demonstrations by the people as their Messiah, would naturally awaken interest, and rivet popular attention.

No man can be fully estimated, even in his personal character, much less in the influenece he exerts upon his age, till he has completed his mission and passed away. If that mission be a grand one, if its connections reach out to the entire human race and stretch far down into the future, generations must come and go before his work can be truly judged. So Christ, whose broad mission spreads over all continents to ocean's farthest isles, and reaches through time to the destinies of eternity, may now be better estimated, both in his character and work than when he trod the vales and hills of Judea's land. As in estimating the grandeur of a mountain, we should stand not at its base, but far out in the distant plain, so to us of this age, the character of Christ rises up to vast hights of grandeur and glory, which those of his own age could never see.

Who then is that great personage, along whose path such acclamations ring? He is the central figure of the Prophetic Scriptures to whom "gave all the prophets witness;" He is the burdened of inspired vision and enraptured song, the Antetype of symbols which shadowed the bringing in of a better hope; He is the Light of the world; the unrivaled Reformer, the mighty Savior, the triumphant Victor; He is the root and offspring of David, the bright and morning Star; the wonderful, the counselor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace.

Join all the glorious names
Of wisdom, love, and power,
That mortals ever knew,
Or angels ever bore;
All are too mean to speak his worth,—
Too mean to set the Savior forth.

The Prize Fight.

We write now, not to chronicle the late prize fight at Plaquemine between King and Turner; that crime against public morals, has been committed by the daily press of this city. The Times, Crescent and Republican did their best to place before the youth of our city, one of the most shameful scenes in which human beings can participate. What we have now to say on the subject, is not so much in reference to the "brutes" in human form, whether principals, seconds or spectators in the horrid scene, but it refers to the offence committed by the press in giving detailed publicity to this brutal combat. We are aware that the offending papers will attempt to justify themselves with the plea that it is their business to daily chronicle the passing events of the times. It may be difficult to draw the line between that which should be published and that which should be omitted. We are not of those who think that the publication of crimes against society is wholly an evil and should not be allowed. The evil is in the manner of the publication rather than in the publication itself. Acts of charity, and of virtue may be so published as not to encourage them, and crimes may be so published as not to condemn them. The Bible records many horrid deeds, but never without a pointed rebuke and a solemn warning.

But this rule is not followed by the secular press in chronicling the disgraceful scene at Plaquemine. With one exception there is not a line of condemnation in the papers to which we have alluded, but on the contrary, the brutal event is given to the public with all possible notoriety and eclat. Special reporters were dispatched to the bloody scene, and their reports given to the public to the extent of three columns, written in the termonology of the pugilistic art. The exception alluded to, is an editorial in the Republican of eighteen lines. More expert to teach than to practice, the editor concludes that such "melancholy spectacles, can only be frowned down by public opinion; but we are sorry to say that the prospects from this source are not at present encouraging." Yet what has the Republican or any other of the city dailies done to create this public opinion? Where is the scathing rebuke that such a "spectacle" justly demands? Where is the fervent appeal to the better moral sense of the community? Where is the invocation either to the civil or military authorities to interfere and prevent the "spectacle ?"

The prime mistake of our dailies was in sending a reporter to the scene. This was of itself a tacit approval. The presence of these repotorial gentlemen was a license to the pugilists and their friends. The glory of seeing their names in the public prints was a powerful incentive to endure the "mauling" incident to the "ring." Had they known that their combat would have been held up to the execration of an offended public, these pugilists would have sought the cover of privacy; but well knowing that the press would emblazon their "fiendish sport," they gloried in their shame. We conceive it to be the duty of the press to chronicle a prize fight in the same manner as a street fight is recorded, and then denounce it with its almost unlimited power. And the public demands this of the press. Ninety-nine hundredths of our citizens will in conversatoin, disapprove of the Plaquemine affair, but this disapproval is impotent unless fearlessly denounced by the press. Were the press of our city to do its duty in this regard, a healthful, vigorous public sentiment would be created against the "ring;" the mayor of the city and governor of the State would feel confidence in attempting to prevent such disgraceful scenes, and the courts to try and punish the offenders

And while on this subject, we may be pardoned for adding a few remarks of another kind. It is customary to designate pugilism by the false descriptive of the "manly art," while just the opposisite is true. There can be nothing manly in an art, in which a combatant takes every advantage of an antagonist which no rules can reach. The gladiatorial sports of Rome in its worst days had points of relief, both morally and esthetically, as compared with this. A Spanish bull-fight, or a South-American cock-pit, though of the same family, is far less brutish and degrading, while prize-fighting is degrading to the whole man to the last degree. And the only redeeming feature of the prize ring is in itself, its greatest condemnation. For weeks prior to the "mill" the pugilists go into training for the fight. During these seasons of preparation they are temperate and chaste, and self-denying to an astonishing degree; they develope a magnificent physique, and for the time being are examples of self-denial and of great pains taking; but so soon as the victory is lost or won they return to all the immoralities of which human nature is capable. We say that this self-denial in the practice of chastity and temperance is their greatest condemnation. If they can thus reform for three months, they can for a year and a life-time, and because they evince their ability to do so, but do it not, therefore God and society hold them accountable

Yet the all absorbing question connected with this "manly art," falsely so called, is its fearful influence upon the youth of our land. Such is human nature, that every boy who reads the details of the match at Plaquemine will itch to achieve laurels at fisticuff's; for lawlessness of all sorts is epidemic, and, spreading by a stranye attraction of sympathy, runs through its season whenever well started. Forgeries, for example, spring up in quick succession, murders beget murders, the dishonesty of clerks or bankers incites dishonesty in others, and we all know, in English penal annals, when the gallows was busiest, the footpads were busiest too. So, we say, for the common weal, and for the peace and safety of our thoroughfares, such battles as that between King and Turner ought to be put down.

TAKE NOTICE!

To end a controversy with a cotemporary, we desire to say a few plain things in a few plain words :

1st. We believe that a white ex-slave holder and a white ex-rebel may be as good a man and may be as safely trusted as a black ex-slave holder and black ex-rebel :—that is to say, that General Longstreet, who fought in the rebel ranks for slavery, is as worthy of a place in the ranks of the Republican party as old Jordan Noble, who held as slaves some of his own race, and who applied to General Lovell, for permission to escort to prison the first "batch of Yankee prisoners who arrived in New Orleans."

2d. That while there may have been some black slave holders as there were some white ones, who treated their slaves kindly, yet it is commonly reported by the freedmen themselves that the worst masters they had, were those of their own race and color.

3d. That we are and always have been in favor of colored men for office, and as in the past so in the future, we shall do what we can to give them an equal chance for all positions of political trust, asking but two conditions of them as of white men—honesty and capability.

4th. That the Republican party is the party for all sincere men, without regard to their political status in the past; and we cordially welcome to its ranks all who will accept its great principles. That such men as Brown of Georgia, and Longstreet of Louisiana, together with every other noted secessionist, whether he be white or black, should be heartily received, for "there is more joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, than over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance."

5th. That we are now as we ever have been opposed to caste both in the church and in the state; and this part of our creed has been put to the test several times, since our residence in New Orleans, and was not found wanting. Once on a sacramental occasion in the Carondelet Street Church, a poor colored women with her child in her arms, came to the altar for baptism. This was unusual and so thought the white congregation present ; but we baptized the child in the name of the Holy Trinity, notwithstanding the frowns of the whites On another occasion, when a little colored girl found her way into our sunday school, and when some southern white teachers threatened to leave the school if the child was not turned out, we refused to comply with their unchristian demand. Those teachers left the school but the child remained and is now preparing to be a teacher for her race. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

The Times.

The New Orleans Times sees fit in a long and, for its columns, not unusually untruthful and scurrilous article, to express its approbation of the Tribune's recent attack upon the Republican party. There is one feature of difference between these two papers; the abuse and billingsgate of the Times are distributed with that graceful ease and naturalness of manner, which betoken the hand of the master artist in the exercise of its native born vocation. That of the Tribune shows an earnest mind and masterly pen, capable of greater things in an honest direction, but temporarily, we trust, misdirected. The Times spares us the labor of a contrast of the two styles, by printing a part of the Tribune's article along with its own. The Times will be held in lasting memory as the pertinacious advocate of the intellectual inferiority of the black man. The printing of these two articles side by side, will be instructive to its readers. The one written by its representative editor and favorite champion of the late dominant class of the South and the other by one of the lately enslaved race, undoubtedly demonstrate the superiority of the Times editor in his chosen and peculiar line of literature.

Congress.

To the relief and great joy of all Union men in the South, Congress met on the 3rd inst. A quorum of both houses was present long before the regular hour for meeting. The members spent an hour before the houses were called to order in friendly talk and congratulations.

It is reported that there will be three different reports from the judiciary committee on the subject of impeachment.

A majority of the committee—five members—will be against impeachment.

Of these, however, three members will favor a severe censure and condemnation of the president. Four Republican members of the committee, under the lead of Governor Boutwell, of Massachusetts, will report in favor of an immediate impeachment.

In the Senate, Mr. Wilson of Massachusetts, chairman of the committee on military affairs, offered a bill vacating all the civil offices in the rebel states thirty days after its passage, but gives the military commanders power to retain such of the present incumbents as they may deem proper, appoint new officers, and order elections to fill vacancies.

The bill also authorizes boards of registration to reject persons whom they believe guilty of trying to evade the requirements of the law and procure false or illegal registration as voters, and to strike from the roll within twenty days all persons found disqualified after registration.

The members of both houses express their determination to frame such laws as will prevent, beyond all doubt, Mr. Johnson from turning over the governments of the southern states to the enemies of the couutry. There was much excitement, and a large crowd of spectators in each house.

We shall wait patiently for the final action on the Military Bill and trust that said action may relieve the whole country of present anxiety.

The Freedmen and Whisky.

HEADQUARTERS, BUREAU REFUGEES, FREEDMEN & ABANDONED LANDS.
District of Louisiana.
No. 154 JULIA STREET.

NEW ORLEANS, La., May 24th, 1867.

(CIRCULAR LETTER.)

The attention of all sub-Assistant Commissioners and Assistant sub-Assistant Commissioners of this Bureau is called to the following Circular Letter.

WAR DEPARTMENT, BUREAU REFUGEES, FREEDM'N & ABANDONED LANDS, WASHINGTON, May 15th, 1867.

(CIRCULAR LETTER.)

"I have information from Virginia and South Carolina, that intemperance among the freedmen is on the increase. Already a movement is on foot in this city, having in view a thorough organization so as to enable the colored people to exert all the power possible to prevent the evil in question."

"I find that the "Sons of Temperance" in their grand divisions retain the old bigotry, and decline to extend their order to save men of dark skins from drunkenness, except it be done on condition that there shall be complete and enforced separation.

"I therefore hope that officers and agents of this Bureau, and the Agents of the different benevolent associations working for the elevation of the colored people will take immediate measures to organize associations of colored people, never excluding the white, under the name of the "Lincoln Temperance Society." There is great appropriatedness in the name from the well known character of Mr. Lincoln and from the love the freedmen bear him."

"Please see to it that Officers or Agents of this Bureau who may be intemperate men, be immediately reported to this office.

Very respectfully,
Your obedient serv't,
(Signed) O. O. HOWARD,
Maj. Gen. Commissioner.

It is hoped that all persons having influence over the freedpeople will endeavor to carry out the wishes of General Howard in this matter.

By order of Brevet Maj. Gen. J. A. MOWER.
WM. H. STERLING,
Capt. 1st U. S. Infantry,
Act. Asst. Adj. General.

The above letter is timely, and the thanks of the country are due Maj. Gen. Howard for his deep interest in the cause of temperance. Intemperance is on the increase among the freedmen, and especially are young men of color, contracting the ruinous habit of using intoxicating drinks, which will destroy both soul and body. This is the abuse of their liberty, and should be corrected at once. We earnestly call upon the christian pastors of this city and throughout the state, to organize temperance societies in their churches, and if necessary to go out side of their churches and persuade the people to save themselves from the slavery of intemperance. Let them preach on this important subject and pledge themselves, not to drink intoxicating beverages. This is the scriptural work of the Christian church. God's word is full of solemn warnings to the drunkard and replete with motives to "look not upon the wine when it is red; when it moveth itself aright."

Shall we have in this city a grand temperance demonstration? What say the pastors? What say the people?

And we respectfully recommend to Maj. Gen. Mower, the removal of all those Bureau Agents in our country parishes, who are notorious drunkards.

Let "judgment commence at the house of God." Let agents be appointed in stead, who are sober men, and who will practically and personnally obey the instructions in General Howard's circular letter.

We hope our preachers and presiding elders will remember that the second half of the year begins with this issue of the Advocate. Collect the six months subscriptions now due, and send on new subscribers.

Mayor Heath and the Common Council.

His Hon. the Mayor, has addressed a second communication to the Common Council on the subject of our city finances. This document is one of marked ability and in every particular becoming the dignity of the office which he so honestly and honorably fills. We rejoice that he has not condescended to reply to the "vilifications" of his official course, as publised in the N. O. Times and other city papers. He can confidently await the full development of facts and confide his reputation to the public, who, sooner or later, will crown him with the enviable title of "honest Mayor Heath."

In his manly and lucid message of July 2, Mr. Heath reiterates and proves the statements contained in his message of the 25th inst. He declares that the same "were derived from an officiall etter written to me by Joseph Hernandez, Esq., city treasurer, with the single exception of my statement that that officer and the controller were at the present time still issuing more new currency, which fact I ascertained from personal observation." He then clearly shows that not only were the city notes in question not authorized, but that the city treasurer and city controller disagree as to their respective sources of authority—the one for issuing and the other for countersigning the notes declared by the Mayor, as unauthorized. In conclusion, his Hon. deprecates the depreciation of the city currency, and promises soon to suggest some method by which the credit of the city may be redeemed.

Mayor's Receptions.

Since Mayor Heath has been in office, he has held receptions at his residence to afford our citizens an opportunity, not only to form a personal acquaintance with the chief magistrate of New Orleans, but also to interchange friendly greetings with each other. On these occasions, Mayor Heath and lady have been honored with many guests, and in turn have received all who came with courtesy and cordiality, while Mr. and Mrs. Fox, have spread a sumptuous board, to the delight of all. Such refined social gatherings have been productive of happy results, and we hope that they will be resumed after the heated season is over.

Rev. N. L. Brakeman, will preach in the large hall of the Mechanic's Institute, to-morrow, at 11 A. M.

Fourth of July

In New Orleans was hot and made up of rain and sunshine. The nation's birthday was celebrated by a military parade and by a Republican celebration in the Mechanic's Institute. Our Southern neighbors did not honor the day in a formal manner. The Union ceremonies in the Institute were highly interesting. Judge Hiestand presided; Rev. N. L. Brakeman offered a fervent prayer; H. C. Dibble read the Declaration of Independence, and Rev. Mr. Smith read the Proclamation of Emancipation to the satisfaction of all present. Mr. Pitkin delivered a brilliant oration, and J. W. Menard recited an original poem amid applause.

The Sunday-school of the First street Church, had an exhibition on the Fourth, which was very interesting. The children appeared well and the girls especially were prettily dressed. The Church was handsomely decorated with flags and flowers. Brother Robinson presided and Father Green, the pastor, was the happiest man there. His good wife served us with ice cream and pound cake.

Judging from the following extract from a recent letter by Bishop Pierce, we infer that he is in favor of diocesan bishops in the Church South:

"If the services of a Bishop are so desirable, as these numerous calls indicate, then the church must meditate a change in her economy, multiply her Bishops, and give each a territory for labor, (I will not say convenient,) but with some reference to the possible. At present there is a prodigal waste of time and mustle in mere travel, without any compensating advantage."

Last Saturday afternoon we attended the examination of Mrs. Williams' colored school on the right bank, five miles below Algiers. There were present, Mr. and Mrs. Drenan, the Provost Marshal and lady, Rev. Mr. Henry, and Mrs. Newman. The school is located on Dr Puissan's plantation, and is a great success. The fifty-four pupils present were neatly dressed and recited their lessons in a very satisfactory manner. Mrs. Williams deserves much praise for her earnestness in this good cause. After the examination, the guests sat down to a good dinner, spread under the shade of some noble trees.

Rev. Joseph Welch, the superintendent of our mission work in Texas spent last Sabbath in this city. With his family he left for the North, the following day. Brother Welch has accomplished a noble work in Texas for God and the Church. We commend him to our Northern friends and hope that he may be successful in the object of his trip.

Rev. Brother Darnell, Presiding Elder of Mississippi district, has returned from a brief visit to his afflicted family in Minnesota. We wish him great prosperity.

Tidings from the Churches.

Rev. S. M. Small writes from Alexandria, La., "We have had an interesting Sunday school exhibition. There were two hundred children and three hundred adults present. Fifty-one children took part in the speaking, and after four had spoken, the whole school sang beautiful pieces. The citizens say the like never was known here. We are so crowded that the people want a gallery put in the church. An old citizen, Curtis F. Lewis made us a donation of a thousand feet of lumber. The Lord reward him, sixty dollars in cash has been given by others. The attendance at Sunday school is 130, we have commenced to use the books and catechisms. The day school is improving fast under the new teacher, Miss Jones. I expect to start for Holmesville on Thursday."

Rev. M. Boyd, in charge at Shreveport says: "the society is prosperous. Meetings are held regularly, and attended to overflowing, last Sabbath we had sixty children at Sunday school, but they stand much in need of books, catechisms, cards, etc. Our work here has caused no little stir, we have had some abuse and Rev. M.——has used hard language about the yankee preachers, says he will build an opposition church, stand at the door and ring the bell himself, but we are not alarmed. They are many difficulties, about political matters, threats being made freely; loyalty is not popular.

Rev. Mr. Kennedy writes from Donaldsonville and Napoleon circuit. "We have got about ninety dollars for the lot at Napoleonville. On the Bayou the water has hindered us in building. We hope, soon to have a school house up, at Pughs. The box of school books, and of Bibles is received. The Sunday school examination was a great success, the attendance continues to be very good. In the day school we have 150 scholars. On the 9th I had a large baptising, 12 were immersed and 5 sprinkled.

From Thibodeaux and Houma circuit, we have the following:

"Things in general look discouraging, the people at both places are greatly impoverished. Our Freedman's agent has no sympathy with our schools or other labors, and recently efforts have been made to break up the republican party by arresting and putting in jail several of its members. The day and Sunday schools are quite large; still many children run the streets and are growing up in ignorance. We are to have a Sacred concert this evening in the School room for the benefit of the Church. The Houma Church is getting along pretty well. The glass is in all the windows but two, we have bought lamps, curtains and will have it complete in ten days. Brother Jessie Cook died happy in the faith, he was over 100 years old. We have now a benevolent society of over 200 members. The school is doing well under the new teacher.

General News.

PARIS, July 1.—The prizes were distributed yesterday. Napoleon said: People and Kings have come here to crown the ideas of peace and conciliation.

France is proud to be great, prosperous and free, and not unnerved by her material joys.

The thoughtful can see the national fibres vibrate for the honor of France, but this noble susceptibility should not create fear for the world's repose, as we here prove our anxiety for peace.

He added that this Exposition marks an era of harmony and progress and the triumph of grand moral principles, which, with justice alone, can establish thrones and enoble humanity.

The speech was followed by "Vive Napoleon! Vive L'Empereur?" which continued for some time.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 1.—The Emperor entered the capital at noon to-day, and was welcomed with immense popular demonstrations.

LONDON, July 2.—Lord Stanley announced in the House that but little progress had been made in the settlement of the Alabama claims.

HOME, June 30.—The religious ceremonies here, in celebration of the eighteen hundredth aniversary of St. Peter's martyrdom, and the canonization of the martyrs in Japan, was one of the most gorgeous spectacles witnessed since the days of King Solomon. The observances commenced with the general illumination of the city, St. Peter's shining like a great church on fire. At 7 A. M., a grand procession of prelates, priests, monks and soldiers moved from the Vatican to St. Peter's, the Pope being carried on his throne. The great church was magnificently decorated with cloths of goid, silver tapestries, paintings, and 200,000 yards of crimson silk; a million wax candles lighted the building.

One hundred thousand people are inside the church, including the ex-king of Naples, foreign ministers, five hundred cardinals, archbishops and bishops, many thousand clergymen, priests, friars, monks, nuns, and soldiers from all parts of the world are present. The Pope celebrated the Gregorian mass in Latin and Greek. Two interruptions occured. The curtains of one window took fire, but was promptly extinguished. A man became crazed by the splendor and cut his throat. The Pope at once reconsecrated the church that was stained with the blood of a suicide.

GALVESTON, July 2.—The trial of Maximilian, Mejia and Miramon ended on the 14th. They were sentenced to be shot on the 16th, but Juarez suspended the execution for three days. They were shot on the 19th at 11 A. M. Colonels were sentenced to six years imprisonment; lieutenant colonels to five years, and minor officers to two years. Brigadier generals and exceptional officers are to be tried by court martial.

The city of Mexico surrendered to Diaz on the 21st. Juarez sent him a congratulatory note with the following directions for the disposition of prisoners:

"The native prisoners you will transfer to your own command or put them at liberty according to the circumstances in which you find them; the foreign prisoners you will retain for the further disposition of the government."

In the archives taken upon the occupation of Queretaro they have found some documents relative to the last will of Maximilian wherein, in case of his death, Teodosio Larez Jose Maria Lacunza and Morquez, the assassin of Tocrobaya, are declared regents.

Escobedo writes from Queretaro:

"I have, by the execution of these master traitors, made terror the order of the day everywhere. I have imposed large contributions upon the rich, and confiscated their property and their all. When I could not do it in person my delegates have strictly complied with my orders, and I hope before closing my military career to see the blood of every foreigner split that resides in my country."

Recollections of the late War.

BY A MUSICIAN.

NO. V.

First view of Vicksburg—Camp at Young's Point—The canal—An incident—Something from home—The magic word—Marching orders—A Southern gentleman—The march—An adventure after honey—"Laughing all over."

Were the history of the war written by a Western soldier who was in the Vicksburg campaign he would no doubt consider our first view of Vicksburg as an epoch in its history. Although many who now compose the assailing army were in the battle of Yazoo Bluffs, but few had ever beheld the city which possessed such formidable natural defences. Accordingly, when we had passed the mouth of Yazoo river and came around in full view of Vicksburg, every eye was turned toward the doomed city. If the yellow, stubborn looking hills caused our hearts to sink within us somewhat, it should not be attributed altogether to our timidity. That first view was enough to make brave men shake their heads in doubt

There was also a gloom in the weather corresponding to that on our brows. We had scarcely landed when it commenced raining, and it continued almost constantly for three days. After the rain ceased we came down from our retreat upon the levee and began preparations for going into camp. In a few days we were nicely and comfortably situated; the sun shone out brightly and had it not been for the vast undertaking before us, we should no doubt have enjoyed ourselves very well. At first there was a great deal of sickness in camp. Our having been huddled together so long on the boats, and the necessasy exposure and hardships attending thereto, were now producing their legitimate results. But as we marched down the line every day, we observed they gradually lengthened until in a few weeks our regiment presented a very respectable numerical appeareance.

But a new source of trouble began to loom up before us. The reader will pardon our simplicity, but we really thought the canal was going to do wonders. We imagined that the great Father of Waters was about to leave the deep channel he had made along the Vicksburg Bluffs, and turn into a little shallow ditch just for our own accommodation. But as one and another of the boys visited the canal and came back shaking their heads knowingly, the impression became prevalent that the great enterprise would be a failure. After visiting it myself in company with a friend of mine, Mr. Brown, and on asking his opinion and receiving from him in reply simply the word "humbug" my own mind was made up permanently as to its utility.

I do not know what Gen. Grant said, when he heard that the dam at the head of the canal had given away, but suppose he did not shed many tears over the accident. Indeed were I allowed to guess, it would be that he and a good many others were almost glad of it. It was but a short time after the water had began to flow into the canal that news came of a break in the levee made of the new dirt excavated from the canal. It was fortunate for our regiment that the break was below the railroad which prevented the overflow of our camp. A few regiments however, that were encamped near the railroad got away in surprisingly quick time. As soon as I heard of the catastrophe, my yankee curiosity was aroused and I started for the scene of action. The water was pouring through the rent, with a strong current. Just as I arrived some men came to the other side who wished to cross over. By rowing round a considerable distance to avoid the suction; they had manage to swing round the circle safely, and were in the act of getting out of the skiff when it suddenly slipped from the bank and glided towards the opening. What was to be done? One of the men as if determined to save his gun, if not himself, threw it upon the levee, thereby sending them further from the shore. I was beginning to think their fate was sealed, when a person in the crowd happening to have a rope, threw it to them and barely succeeding in catching it they were with difficulty pulled to the shore.

Returning to camp in a few hours I found it gone. Alarmed at the steady encroachment of the water, our superior officers had ordered a movement two or three miles up the river. After being safely ensconced in our new position, an event occurred which created quite a commotion. It was nothing less than the arrival to the boys of several companies of some eatables from home. Among the good things were apples, potatoes and eggs. It was not surprising that the two former articles should come through safe without being gobbled up, but to think of eggs running the gauntlet! "Well I never," as Mrs. Bedat would have said. In dividing them it so happened that they did not go quite around which raised a large family quarrel that raged till it was discovered the eggs were spoilt. Often since, when tempted to assert my rights I think of the spoiled eggs and let the matter drop.

But although the soldier can appreciate the good things that strengthen the outer man, it is not that which gives him the greatest pleasure, Letters is the magic word in camp. It spreads like wild fire and draws the company as by a spell to one place. Then the orderly, holding the bundle of letters in his hands, repeats the names on the back of each distinctly and the "lucky fellows" come promptly forward to receive their treasures. Sometimes I have seen among the expectant group an eager, wistful face, watching the pile of letters as it dwindled down and down, until all were gone. I have seen hope die out of the face, and the heart-sickness of a bitter disappointment take its place. O, ye, who, dwelling in ease at home, forget the soldier in his rude tent and scanty privileges, little did you think of the heavy heart-ache which a few lines from your pen would have lightened.

After the running of the blockade at Vicksburg by our transports and gunboats, and other occurrences too numerous to be recorded here, we received marching orders and began to swing round from Vicksburg in front, to Vicksburg in the rear. From Milliken's Bend our regiment marched to Richmond, a small town west of Vicksburg. Here we halted, and intending to remain a few days, we established ourselves snugly around the residence of a Southern gentleman. He was really a good fellow as the phrase goes, kindly permitting us to help ourselves to chickens and—in short to what we liked best. He seemed to regard himself as a fine specimen of a good old Southern gentleman, and his urbanity and good humor was rapidly winning our favorable opinion, when the marked resemblance between himself and several of his yellow girls arrested our attention, and furnished a new commentary on the status of Southern society.

From Richmond we proceeded to Grand Gulf; and crossing the river there made our way towards Jackson, Miss. Proceeding to Clinton, we met our division returning from Jackson; faced about and started once more for Vicksburg. We arrived at Black river in the night, and went supperless to bed. Eatables were becoming disagreeably scarce, which fact caused the boys, when opportunity occurred, to make fearful raids on onion patches and bee stands. At one house not twenty miles from Vicksburg they scattered the hives along the road and so enraged the bees that our regiment had to take a circuitous route to escape their wrath. Like an adventurous knight I thought to keep near the road with impunity; so near indeed that I found part of a hive and in it plenty of honey. Here was a "good thing," so I, with several others "pitched in" regardless of the wrathful bees on and around the honey.

I was walking away slowly and thoughtfully, when the hum of several bees flying around my head and uncomfortably near it, caused me to increase my pace. From this time misfortune and the bees followed faster and faster till at length I got into a furious run, threw away my spoil and became almost frantic. Hearing one of the bees buzzing in my hair I clapped my hat, which I had been swinging violently in the air, upon my head intending to take him prisoner. Pressing the hat rather closely to my head I killed him; and was now free, the rest having given over the chase. I retired from the scene of conflict with a very elevated and touching argument on top of my head against robbing bees.

When but a few miles from Vicksburg we found a "darky on a wood-pile" looking at us with evident satisfaction, and exhibiting two bright rows of ivory.

"Where's your master?" asked one of the boys.

"Dun no," he replied, with a broad grin, "massa dun gone away dis mornin."

Some of the boys then commenced singing, "Say darkies have you seen de massa." As the chorus to the first verse was concluded, the broad grin terminated in a regular chuckle, not loud, but deep. Never did I see a person come so near "laughing all over." The look out of his eyes increased the comical appearance of the fat, old fellow, and the laugh became general. Altogether, the scene was about as laughable as any that can be imagined.

Analysis of the Military Bill.

BY J. P. BOYD, ESQ.

Mr. Boyd makes the following clear snmmary of points expressive of the intent of the bill:

First. That the State governments organized since the cessation of active hostilities in the ten rebel States are only de facto governments, Congress having solemnly declared "no legal State governments exist in those States."

Second. That de facto applies to each of the co-ordinate branches of government, legislative, executive, and judicial. Good during sufferance.

Third. That the State governments organized by President Johnson in said rebel States, were so organized by him without authority from the constitution or any law of Congress.

Fourth. That said attempt to organize State governments in the rebel States by President Johnson was a palpable infringement on the plain prerogatives of Congress, wherein the constitution lodges the power to declare war and make final and permanent adjustments upon the termination thereof.

Fifth. That it was the plain duty of President Johnson, on the cessation of hostilities to have convened Congress in extra session, to lay the ground work of final adjustment; and his failing to do so, but undertaking it himself, was reprehensible and unwarranted on his part.

Sixth. That Congress has wisely and justly set the President's work of reconstruction all aside by this "military bill," and properly asserted their own legitimate authority under the constitution, by divising and promulging a plan for final adjustment, and complete restoration in a manner akin to territorial organizations.

Seventh. That the military bill plainly and unmistakably points out the President's duties, beyond which he cannot go, and that it is manifest that Congress jealously guarded against him, that they predetermined that neither the President, nor the Secretray of War, nor the Attorney General, who are simply executive appointees, should have power to peremptorily instruct the district commander in matters plainly within the sphere of his duty laid down by the law.

Fighth. That the military officer, after being assigned to duty of district commander under the military bill, has a new orbit in which to act, distinct from the ordinary army routine, not being, however, entirely severed from the latter.

Ninth. That when the supplement to the military bill declared it to be the duty of the officer in command of the district to "cause a registration to be made," Congress did not mean that the President should have again power to intermeddle, by peremptorily directing and instructing who shall be registered, or how registration shall be conducted.

Congress has predetermined that matter themselves, leaving much to the good sense and discretion of the officer in command.

This idea does not preclude suggestion, counsel, and advice.

Tenth. In this matter of reconstruction of rebel States, the district commander does not render an "account of stewardship" to the President or Secretary of war, or even to General Grant.

He accounts alone to Congress by showing final results in the formation o new State governments, to be submitted to final approval of Congress alone, where the paramount authority rests

Eleventh. This brings us to the point before asserted, that the district officer must consult the will of Congress alone, as to be understood from laws enacted.

Twelfth. That each district officer, in his orbit created by the military bill is superior to any de facto rebel State government, or any branch thereof over which he is placed, and that he can permit the continuance of any branch of such government or tribunal, or he may remove, suspend, or displace any de facto officer of State government within his district, upon such causes as he shall deem satisfactory to himself, as in the case of the removal of the late Governor Wells by General P. H. Sheridan.

Thirteenth. That it is highly improbable that the Secretary of War will counsel interference by peremptory instructions. He is himself too good a lawyer for that.

Fourteenth. That the military bill does not mention that it shall be any part of the duty of the officer to revise or modify any decree of any civil court adjudicating purely civil matters relating to collections, etc., but by virtue of the injunction of the law that it shall be his "duty to protect the rights of person and property;" in order to perform such duty he may suspend or annul the execution of a pretended judicial writ issued in pursuance of a colorable judicial decree founded in fraud, collusion, or political prejudice, and made to subserve the petty spleen of some individual or individuals, and that the execution of such colorable judgment or decree would result in trespass or other tort to the rights of property of any individual or individuals.

What has been said as to the power of removal of officers, etc., is, of course, confined to State governments and tribunals—not meant to apply to the United States district or circuit courts, they having been established by Congress, and consequnently their origin is coequal with the military bill.

NUMBER XVIII.

Mama, not feeling very well, and wearied with the toils of the day, said to Papa, "will you not relieve me this evening by relating some of the incidents connected with your traveling on those extensive Circuits, and of the remarkable horses you rode upon, that I was telling daughters of last evening? But before you proceed I will say, it used to be remarked, that Methodist Ministers rode the finest horses the country afforded, and sometimes that they were proud of them.

"Yes my dear," said Papa, "I will with pleasure continne the story, for all day I have seemed to live over other years, and can very readily commence where you left off last evening. In regard to the horses, was it any wonder that we sought the best? and pardoned, even if we were sometimes proud of them. For many a time they appeared to be our only reliable earthly friends. In the midst of dense forests, sometimes with an Indian for a guide, and again only his trail to lead us, or a few marked trees to direct our way; again in the swamps and mud, and snow, and often the only bridge across the swollen streams.

I remember once of reluctantly exchanging a fine large horse for a younger one; but on using him, found that the former owner had deceived me, and that he was what is called staky or balky. He once stopped in the middle of the road and refused to advance one step. I reflected a moment on the dilemna in which a wicked man had placed me; then instead of using the whip as I was at first inclined to do, I sat deliberately in the saddle, and sang one of our good old fashioned Methodist hymns, but before it was concluded the horse started off at a gentle pace, and never repeated it again, doing me noble service afterward.

While traveling in Canada in particular I had many streams to ford, and would, without hesitation, plunge in, and the faithful horse would be sure to bring me out safely. One day on reaching a stream that had swolen during a previous heavy rain, causing the current to be very rapid, but knowing the ability of my noble horse, and his success on other occasions, and being anxious to reach my appointment that day, I dashed in as at other times, but had not proceeded far when I found that the head of my horse was turned down stream, and we were being carried without any effort of our own. Knowing the danger of such a course, as there were high falls not far below, I managed to disentangle myself from the saddle, and sprang into the water leaving the horse to his own fate. It was with desperate swimming that I reached the opposite shore, and fearing that the horse would become engulfed in the vortex below, and yet hoping that he might follow me, I whistled and called him by name, and it was not many moments before he came neighing and troting up to me. He had such an interesting look, and knowing air I imagined that he listened to me as I smoothed down his long dripping mane and said as if to him, "my noble fellow. I thank God we are both saved."

At another time I was not quite as fortunate; after having successfully crossed the stream, on reaching the bank of the river, my horse gave a spring to escape sinking in the mud, just at that moment the girth gave away, leaving the saddle, myself and the saddle bags quite deep in the mud, to extricate ourselves as best we could, while the horse stood on terra firma, looking whistfully at us, as if to say, I regret the fearful predicament you are in, and wish I could relieve you. After getting out as best I could, I gathered up my mud-besotted effects, and taking my horse by the bridle, proceeded to the nearest house, which was a little hut. They were very kind to me, assisted me in dislodging the mud of which I had been encumbered.

In traveling thus for miles through the forest where there was not a house, I have suffered intensely from hunger, and have felt that almost any food would satisfy the cravings of appetite, and when I reached my appointment the good friends would give such as they had; sometimes a bowl of brown bread and milk, and sometimes mush and milk which was as great a luxury as I ever enjoyed, for what is sweeter than food to a hungry man?

At one time night overtook me traveling through a new country with only here and there a house. At about nine o'clock, a terrific thunder storm came up, accompanied by the most vivid flashes of lightning I had ever witnessed. I urged my faithful horse rapaidly along, if possible I might reach my journey's end before the threatening shower would fall upon me, when he stopped suddenly, coming near precipitating me over his head, and stood as firmly as ever did Balaam's animal, refusing to advance one step. I did not beat him, neither did he speak to tell me what he had seen in the way. I did not even imagine that he could have seen anything for the darkness was as profound as an Egyptian night, but pausing a moment, a lurid flash revealed to me an object lying almost under the horses feet, and one step more he must have trampled upon it. I at once dismounted and to my surprise, found it to be a child, about two years of age. I took the little frightened, palpitating creature in my arms, and wonderingly rode on, for the child was not old enough to tell me of its home. Full a mile distant I came to a log house and halting at the door, asked if they had lost a child, and was told that they had not; but informing them that I had found one, thep began to bluster around in the one room which served as apartments for the entire family, as did the one bed. After counting heads of those asleep and awake, they decided that one was missing. The Father then came out as appeared to me, rather stupidly, that is, with none of the joy that filled my heart at bringing home a lost child, and taking the little wanderer from my arms simply said, "I suppose it has been playing during the day and got strayed off, and when night came on has not been able to find its way back to the house. I wonder that the old woman did not miss the young one." This little event was to me a serious comment on the ignorance of these backwoods people. A faithful shepherd would not fail to miss a lamb when folding his flock at evening tide. But here a dear little lamb of the household was not missed, having strayed from the fold and exposed to the fearful storm.

MEDICAL.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,

127 CARONDELET STREET,

Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic, and Acute

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient, that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years, in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient, if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet Street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city ☞ Consultation free—stamps not "forgotten."

MASON & HAMLIN,

MANUFACTURERS OF

CABINET ORGANS,

ALSO

PORTABLE ORGANS,

ADAPTED TO SECULAR AND SACRED MUSIC, FOR DRAWING-ROOMS, CHURCHES, SUNDAY AND DAY SCHOOLS, LODGES, &C., &C.

Uniting to a considerable extent the capacity of the Piano-Forte with that of the Pipe-Organ, and costing much less than either.

They occupy little space; are elegant as furniture; not liable to get out of order, and are securely boxed, so that they can be sent anywhere by ordinary freight routes, all ready for use.

Forty Styles, plain or elegant cases; one to twelve stops; Prices, $75, $90, $110, $125, $130, $1 0, $150, $160, $170, $200, $225, $250, $300, $435, $540, $550, $600, and upwards.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs were introduced four years since, and are a great improvement upon the Melodeon, Harmonium, and other reed organs, greatly excelling them especially in the excellent quality and variety of their tones; in power and quickness of action, and capacity for expression.

THEIR SUCCESS HAS BEEN ENTIRELY BEYOND PRECEDENT,

and proves how greatly such an instrument was needed. Again and again the manufacturers have been compelled to double their manufacturing facilities, until they have been increased six-fold. From the most eminent of the musical profession, the most distinguished pianists, organists, composers, and musical directors, the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs have received an amount and degree of commendation never before bestowed upon any similar musical instrument. More than two hundred and fifty of the most eminent musicians in the country have given written testimonials to the value of the improvements contained in them, and that they excel all other instruments of this class.

FIFTY-TWO GOLD OR SILVER MEDALS, or other highest Premiums have been awarded to Mason & Hamlin for the important improvements effected by them, and for the

SUPERIORITY OF THEIR INSTRUMENTS TO ALL OTHERS.

Constantly exhibiting their instruments in competition with others, they have been awarded the highest premium in every instance, but three or four.

For churches, sunday schools, etc., the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs are the instruments long wanted, of the very best quality, abundant power, not too expensive, nor liable to get out of order.

For private use, in drawing-rooms, &c., they are not less desirable, and are finding a place in the musical families of the principal cities.

They are adapted to a wider range of music than the piano, being fitted for all sacred music and for much secular music, while their quickness of action is such that the most lively, rapid music can be played on them. Then their cost is greatly less, as well as their liability to get out of order.

BRIEF EXTRACTS FROM OPINIONS OF DISTINGUISHED MUSICIANS.

I should think they would become very much sought after as parlor instruments as well as for public performance.—Sigismond Thalberg, the world-renowned Pianist. Sure to find its way into every household of taste and refinement which can possibly afford its moderate expenses. Far superior to everything of its class I have seen.—L. M. Gottschalk, the eminent Pianist. Such pure musical tones, promptness and smoothness of action and fine variety of effect, I have not found in any other instrument of the class.—S. B. Mills, the eminent Pianist. Really so excellent that there can hardly be much difference of opinion respecting them.—William Mason, the eminent Pianist. The best instrument of its class with which I am acquainted, and worthy a place in every drawing room. Harry Sanderson, the eminent Pianist. In every respect far superior to everything I have ever seen of the kind, whether in Europe or America.—Geo. Washbourne Morgan the eminent organist, N. Y. I can only reiterate what so many in the musical profession have said, that for equality, promptness and exquisite tone, they are unequalled.—John H. Wilcox, the eminent Organist, Boston. Surpasses everything in this line I have ever seen, whether French or American.—Jon Zundel, the eminent Organist, N. Y. The best reed instruments in the world are made in the United States, and your Cabinet Organs are greatly superior, and by far the best made here.—Max Maretzer, Musical Conductor, N. Y. Far surpasses all other similar instruments, which have come under my observation.—Carl Zerhau, Musical Conductor, Boston. Exceeds in my estimation every other instrument of this general class. Thos. Hastings. I can recommend them with confidence.—Lowell Mason. As soon as the people become acquainted with the superior merits of your instruments, your only trouble will be to supply the demand.—Wm. B. Bradbury. I have never seen anything of the kind which interested me so much.—Geo. F. Root. Exciting much interest in musical circles, and already becoming the fashion. N. Y. Home Journal. The highest accomplishment of industry in this department. This is not only our opinion, but the unanimous verdict of the organists.—Boston Advertiser. A glorious instrument for the temple service, so readily secured as to be available for any congregation, and effective and beautiful as to meet the desires of the most refined and fastidious.—N. Y. Observer.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs must not be confounded with other reed instruments, from which they vary essentially, their superiority veing largely derived from PATENTED IMPROVEMENTS, which cannot be employed by other makers. Among them are,

The AUTOMATIC BELLOWS SWELL, patented, a most important invention, and greatly the best swell ever devised being much more effective and easily used than any other. The variety and beauty of effect of which it is capable, can not be appreciated except from actual use. The many attempts to imitate or find a substitute for this swell, prove its value. None of them, however, approach it in excellence and simplicity.

IMPROVED SELF-ADJUSTING VALVES patented, secure much more perfect action, durability, and freedom from liability to get out of order.

WOOD'S OCTAVE COUPLET patented, in effect nearly doubles the power of the instrument in which it is used.

NOISELESS SAFETY VALVES patented, prevent the hissing sound often heard.

The IMPROVED COMBINATION REGISTER patented, gives great facility in drawing stops.

"The Spider's Web."

BY LU BILLINGS SPALDING.

Back and forth she swayed and swung
From the rafters, brown and bare.
Like a silken shuttle to and fro,
In the gray and dusky air.

Weavin and weaving the whole day through,
Never a thread to waste;
Misty and dim the fabric grew,
A delicate bit of lace.

Like a fairy's handkerchief, small and fine.
Up in the rafters gray;
There it glistened and there it grew,
All through the whole, dim day.

Fatal alas! to the bumbling fly,
Caught in the silken snare;
Fatal alas! to all but her,
Keenly alert in her lair.

Thus, I thought in the shadowy mill,
Watching the weaver high;
All are weavers of God's mankind,
Weavers of destiny!

Weaving and weaving our whole lives through,
Never an hour to lose,
Some weave fabrics as black as night,
Some of heavenly hues.

Weavers of destiny, weaving their thoughts,
Actions, sentiments, words;
Back and forth our shuttles go,
Catching our motives unheard.

And when our fabric is woven out,
And the shuttle has ceased to swing,
Death unfastens the fitful web,
And carries it up to Him.

Happy the weaver whose web be fair,
Woven with watchful zest;
Never more in this world of care,
Peacefully, sweetly at rest.

Thoughts on Family Training

BY H. C. ANTHONY, A. M. OF ALBANY, N. Y.

We are sure our readers will be pleased with the subjoined article from a forthcoming work by Professor Anthony. The author is one of the best thinkers in the land, and his new work will deservedly rank him among the ablest writers on ethics in our country. ED.]

The true character of the Deity ought to be made known to the child as soon as he shall be able to comprehend it. The love that protects us, and supplies our daily wants, can be commended to his notice at a very early age. Afterwards he can be taught, as occurring circumstances supply suitable illustrations, the various other forms under which that principle is manifested. The beauties and bounties of nature, and the more obvious occurrences of Providence may soon be presented as evidences of divine love; but the utmost efforts must be used when the proper time arrives for speaking of the moral law and its demands, to impress upon the mind of the child the fact that these are based upon a broad and deep laid foundation of love and that they call for the exercise of a corresponding spirit on the part of those to whom they are addressed.

What renders this the more necessary is the natural repugnance of the soul to the discipline of restraint which the law imposes upon our desires and action at almost ever turn in life.

It will not do to say that, since the feeling cannot be overcome, by any course of reasoning, it is therefore a waste of labor to attempt, in the use of reason, to modify or weaken its power. Those who argue this, seem to forget how greatly the mind is swayed in after life, by impressions made upon it in childhood; and how much pre-occupation of thought at this period, has to do with the prevailing drift of thought during the succeeding periods of man's earthly existence. A little reflection on this point will, I am sure, induce the conviction that it is, to say the least, perfectly safe to try the effect of well-timed and proper instruction, while a fatal risk may be incurred by its omission.

Another argument presents itself in favor of the early inculcation of this view of divine government, and indeed of everything that tends to hold up before the mental vision a representation of God as he actually is. The mind receives with wonderful facility, and retains with remarkable tenacity, erroneous ideas of the nature, attributes and designs of the Deity.

No one needs to travel far to find proof of this. We all have, even at our doors, some striking illustration of the distorted images that are sometimes allowed to occupy the place in human conceptions, that rightfully belong to the God whose character is so faithfully delineated in the Bible. What safeguards may be used for the prevention of this evil? Manifestly, the most efficient one is that which has already been suggested. Should this be faithfully tried, and proved to be a failure, there will remain but little ground for hope, that success will attend such expedients as we may resort to in the more advanced stages of life. But such a contingency as failure is not to be apprehended except where the conditions essential to success are either neglected or misapplied. Let these be carefully observed, and good results will inevitably follow. Should these, however, fall below the expectations we cherish, it will be more wise to chasten our too sanguine anticipations, than to lay blame upon the means we have employed.

It is incumbent upon all men that they attentively consider the wonders and also the more ordinary ways of Providence, and this should be done whether we are actuated by the higher motive of right, or the inferior one of self-interest. Every one whose eyes are not willfully closed against the light of truth, will learn from a few years of experience that

"There's a Divinity that shapes our ends, Rough-hew them how we will;"

and so become prepared to observe with a constantly increasing diligence, and to interrupt with a judgment that acquires accuracy in proportion as it is brought into exercise, the indications of a superior wisdom that rules in the minuter no less than in the more important concerns of human life. And these observations are not without their practical uses, even if our desires ascend no higher than to the attainment of temporal good. For, connected in sentiment with the maxim quoted above, the Poet has given us another, which persons of any considerable degree of sagacity do not fail to follow while "looking out for the main chance."

"There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at its flood, leads on to fortune."

Now, there is no good reason why such teachings should be made applicable to the lower purposes of life, and be forgotton when we are striving for the accomplishment of its higher aims. Hence we say that parents should with sedulous care impart them to their children, showing by their instructions how the wisdom of the serpent is to be united to the harmlessness of the dove. And there is a pressing necessity that the young should be taught to "watch for Providence," which no one can deny who has witnessed the countless wrecks cast upon the strands of humanity. Who shall say that all these lost ones might not have been saved if the watch had been duly kept, the soundings observed, and the bearings taken at the appropriate season?

But let us hear the immortal bard as he speaks once again:

"We defy augury: there is a special providence in the fall of a sparrow."

Do you note the connection of thought here? how true it is to the highest deductions of reason? how consistent with the results of our best experience? "We defy augury." We are not bound as slaves to signs and omens; we are not of those (abjects that they are!) who "seek unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards that peep and that mutter," and why do we differ from those? Is it, because we hold in constant recognition the guidance and protection of an outstretched hand that moves along at the bidding of infinite Wisdom? Is it, because we know of a truth that "There is a special providence in the fall of a sparrow?"

Parents, would you have your offspring live under the bondage of superstition, trembling with forboding of ill at the occurence of events which convey no significance of harm? fearful of sights and sounds which silly tradition alone has made ominous? Would you have your ears pained with their daily talk of presentiments, signs, dreams and other prognostications—in short, would you see those you so dearly love plunged into the mortal abyss of fatalism? If you would, you have only to say within yourselves, "These dry subjects of God and his dealings with men, are naturally distasteful to the young, and I cannot make them interesting; I will, therefore, amuse my children with tales of faries, witches and giants, which I know they will be delighted to hear." Reason thus, resolve thus, and put your resolution into practice, and the bitter fruit will appear long before you are prepared for its garnering.

But if you would avert this evil, and secure a real blessing, seek out and store your minds with facts illustrative of providential care, of remarkable deliverances from peril, and of human purposes overruled for the bestowment of greater good. Consult also, if necessary, some popular and entertaining work on Natural History; and learn, for instance, how the sponges and the corals grow in the sea; the enormous size to which the trees of some countries attain; the wondrous habits of certain animals; especially those which are more familiarly known to both the young and the old; study these things and others of a similar nature, and you will be furnished with an interesting as well as profitable theme for discourse, whenever the demand comes for a "good story."

You will not be obliged, as with older auditors, to use means for arousing a dormant curiosity; for you will find that mental appetite always on the alert, and ready to give entertainment to whatever bears the charms of novelty. Only observe this rule: Seek to entertain and amuse; and have no cause for suspicion that you are acting the part of a Mentor. If these things are talked about in the same simple, earnest and sympathetic manner that you adopt while conversing with children on other subjects, their attention will be attracted, and in many cases, habits of thought will be formed, which will extend to later years the apitude for observation, and the taste for the study of nature, which had their germs in the well-devised entertainments of the nursery.

Sic Transit Gloria Ecclesia.

In the North Western portion of the Parish of Washington in the State of Louisiana, stands an old hewed log house, which has long been known as the Shilling Church. It was erected almost two score years ago by the pioneer settlers of the country, and has been celebrated in its time for the old fashioned revivals that have from time to time taken place within its walls, and for the numerous conversions, warm class meetings and other acts of devotion, that characterized the congregations that usually assembled there.

For some years past this Church has been upon the wane; God saw fit to call home the few faithful members who were its chief pillars, and the Mississippi Conference of the Church South for some cause unknown to the writer, ceased to give the old grey church a place among their appointments.

For several years, ever since in fact the war for slavery began, this once precious and ancient charge has been neglected, and no choral hymn, or swelling anthem, rose upon the yielding air as offerings of praise to the great God of the Universe, and the owl and the bat at length became its only, its solitary visitants.

The Church being thus entirely abandoned by even the semblance of white worshippers, a few pious blacks occasionally met their for the purpose of comforting themselves, and telling each other of their hopes and fears, and speaking in their rude and uncultivated speech of the story of Jesus and his dying love.

These meetings had never been characterized by any misconduct and had resulted in injury and discomfort to none, but served to keep burning the lamp of Christian love, which had almost entirely been extinguished in the community, so far at least as the Blacks were concerned.

A few months ago and since public opinion has become awake ed upon the present, all absorbing political interests of the day, a white minister attended one of these monthly meetings and aided in giving some more intelligent direction to their devotions. This ordinarily would have have created no usual al wonder, but the minister who has attended and officiated was known to be an out and out Republican, and he was anathematized accordingly and feared and denounced as an emissary of evil, although he was known to have been a quiet unobtrusive man who had been working in the gospel harness for more than a half a score of years and had hitherto been honored with the confidence and esteem of his brethren. The finale of the matter was that when the blacks assembled at the Church on on Sabbath last as was their wont, they found the old Church doors, instead of standing open as in days past, were fast nailed up, and admission thus entirely prevented.

Comment upon the above is wholly unecessary. It is but one of a thousand facts that have occurred to show with what a hearty good will and full concurrence our people are joyously conceding to the blacks the rights demanded for them by Congress.

LOYALIST.

For the New Orleans Advocate.

A Few Words to Men of Color

Great was the rejoicing when the rebellion was crushed by force of arms, even many of those who had supported it, were glad to see its termination. But no class was more joyful than that, which, having been for ages held in bondage, now felt the loosening of its fetters, and saw the dawn of a beautious day. Many realized however, but imperfectly the idea of freedom; they expected every care to vanish, every sorrow to cease, and peace to fold her wings and nestle forever in their bosoms. But two years of partial freedom have doubtless satisfied all that this rose is not without its thorn; that new and fearful responsibilities, many and dangerous enemies, formidable adversities, untried positions and a wearisome struggle are part of the results of emancipation. Nevertheless the future is by no means without its promise, in its mature fruition, are within your grasp. Still the work is but just begun. It is true that the seed has been planted and signs of verdure already appear, but months, nay years of careful tending will be necessary to ensure the bounteous crop.

There are many ways of defeating the purposes of your friends and blighting your prospects as a race, and but one course that promises success. A source of danger and an error into which some of you have seemed to fall, and which your enemies would gladly fester, is the belief that your friends are such, because you are colored. But this is a mistake, they are your friends because you are men, because you have been oppressed, and because their principles oblige them to extend to every man equal rights. Their protracted efforts in this direction have secured increased respect for their principles, and as a collateral result you are free. They have maintained, not only that every man was entitled to freedom, but that freedom would be to every man a benefit.

The first proposition is now almost universally acknowledged; the second you must sustain by your consistent deportment, by your success in the race of life, or else you will relapse into a condition more hopeless than slavery, more dark than its gloom. Your enemies represent that we have made you the nation's special pets, and seem anxious that you should exhibit all the inordinate vanity, and reckless disregard of others rights, which such a view would tend to create. In this way they hope to gain a signal victory over us and you, and show that freedom has been a curse. But be not misled. By patient endurance of a gigantic wrong, you have enlisted in your behalf the united sympathy of the christian world. But should you exchange this for arrogant assumption of your rights, and clamorous or belligerent demands, for even these privileges which both law and equity should now accord, you will only embarrass your friends and render more intense the hatred of your enemies.

On the other hand if you receive with meekness and some degree of thankfulness the privileges which the efforts of your friends have already secured; if you wait with patience the growth of public sentiment, and the subsidence of passion and prejudice, you will retain your place in general sympathy and respect. Meanwhile let every effort be put forth to secure to yourselves real merit. The problem of patient, heroic. yea christian suffering has been already solved successfully. The world awards to all honor for such virtue. But this is only passive merit. The world is waiting and eagerly watching to see if the other problem will be demonstrated with equal clearness. Has the race positive merit? will you achieve worthy deeds? These are the questions which await reply.

While your friends, some with confidence and others hesitatingly, answer these questions in the affirmative, hosts of jealous, malignant and powerful enemies scornfully say, no!

Every menacing action or word upon your part, every boastful harangue by some would be leader of your color, every street row, every act of revenge, every instance of baseness or lawlessness is to them a delectable morsel; the envenomed tongue of slander hastens to exact each act to a position of prominence, and multiplies it to a score. The only remedy is that you show real merit, Scorn all shoddy, all aping the manners of the educated and refined, and become educated and refined. Repress all undue desire for position or power and seek to be worthy of both by undoubted ability. Give us, not empty talk nor flippant promises, but veritable deeds; deeds that shall convince the most obtuse of your worth; deeds to which your friends may point in triumphant vindication of your manhood and ability; deeds that shall startle the drowsy indolence of opposers and cause them to strive for worth themselves lest you outstrip them in the race for glory.

Be strict in your obedience to the laws; fear God and keep his commandments; stretch every nerve in efforts for the right, and future history shall not fail to record your greatness, and the brilliance of your achievements, your friends will be proud of your position, while your enemies will be confounded; and in your success shall be verified the truth of your declaration. "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

La Crescent, Minn.

Worth Better than Show.

A young oriental prince was visiting at the castle of a duke in one of the finest counties in England. He looked from his window into a beautiful garden, and inhaled the fragrance which was wafted toward him by the gentle breath of June.

"What exquisite perfume!" he cried. "Bring, I pray you, the flower that so delights my sense. See yon stately stalk, bearing on its shaft those gorgeous lillies, whose snowy petals are veined with blood-red lines and with violet shade; that is undoubtedly the plant I seek."

They brought him the curious lily of Africa. "Its oder is nauseating," he cried; "but bring me that flower of a hue so much deeper and richer than even the beatiful roses of my own fair land. See how it glows like flame. Surely a rich odor should distil from that regal plant."

It was a dahlia; its scent was even less agreeable than that of the lily.

"Can it be, then, the large white blossoms clustered on yonder bush, or the plue-cups on the neighboring shrub?" he asked.

No, the snowball and campannia proved alike scentless. Various plants yielded their odorless buds or broad-spreading petals for his inspection. But, he found not what he sought

"Surely, it must be that golden ball," he said, "for so snowy a bloom should at least charm the nostril as the eye."

"Fough!" it was a marigold.

At length they placed in his hand a wee brown blossom.

"So unpretending a thing as this cannot surely be that for which I seek," exclaimed the prince, with a vexed air "This appears to be nothing better than a weed."

He cautiously lifted it to his face.

"Is it possible?" he cried. "Is it really this unobtrusive brown weed which gives forth so precious an odor? Why, it hangs over the whole garden, and comes fanning in at my window like the very breath of health and purity. What is the name of this little darling?"

"Precisely that your highness," answered his attendant—"this flower is called mignonette, the little darling?"

"Wonderful! wonderful!" repeated the astonished prince, placing it in his bosom.

"Thus, your highness perceives," remarked his tutor, gravely, "that the humble and unpretending often exhale the most precious virtues."

The King's Charger.

[Correspondent of the London Times.]

PESTH, June 10.—It was observed on the coronation day that the charger on which the king was mounted was very restive at times. His majesty is said to have reproached Count Grunne for furnishing him such a very rampant Bucephalus, and no doubt it was trying enough to have to sit on a curvetting steed nearly 17 hands high, with the crown of St. Stephen who was a large headed man, apparently, on his front, and the robe of St. Stephen, which is not exactly a summer-day's mantle, on his back for so many hours. When the king dismounted to take the oath in the square before the Rath House of Pesth, the horse was very much excited, and it became necessary for two grooms to lay hold of his head as his majesty mounted, which he did with difficulty. Before he was well in his seat the cannon of the Blocksberg opened with a salute. At the first report the horse made a furious bound and rose high in the air, dragging the grooms off their feet, and lighting in a prodigious leap in the center of the throng far away. At the sight, when the horse sprang up, a thrill went through the multitude. What a catastrophe if the king were unhorsed. What an omen if the sacred crown were to fall from his brow just as he had taken the oath! To their surprise and delight, the king, without an apparent struggle, sat firm and lightly in his sadle, and bore the shock unmoved as the horse came to the ground, then shouting to the struggling grooms, who were dragging along, "Auflassen!" ("Let go!") he wheeled round in the midst of his affrighted courtiers, and ruled his charger in its impetuous bounds, amid applause which contended with the thunder of the guns, and rode away in a hurricane of popular delight. His skill as a horseman, and the air with which he drew his sword and spurred his horse up the Kronungshiigel, and wheeled him around while he thrust his deflant point at the four corners of the world, won him golden opinions on the Franz Joseph Platz; and it was remembered how, when Ferdinand was crowned, his majesty could not induce his horse to descend from the mound, although he had got him up very easily, the reason being that for some time previously the animal had been fed at the top by the groom every morning, and was led down afterward. A state y bearing serves a monarch in good stead even among the most unpoetical people, and these things have done as much good to the king as a stroke of state policy, combined with his forcible and solemn manner of taking the oaths and making all the declarations in the coronation ceremony.

Relation the Sexes.

It may be laid down as a general rule that amusements which separate the sexes are dangerous. I would not press the truth too narrowly and literally; but undoubtedly it is a general truth that where women seek their amusements in one way by themselves, and men seek theirs in another way by themselves, there is both ways a tendency to degeneration and temptation. God meant that man and woman should live together, work together, and, in all the functions of life—civil, social, religious, artistic and intellectual—co-operate with each other; and their mutual relations are harmonizing and balancing, and nowhere else more than in the seeking and prosecution of amusements. I believe that boys and girls should go to school together. As they sit together in the household, so I think they should sit together in our temples of learning. Colleges should not be for all men or for all women, but the same buildings and the same professors should be provided for both in common. And as it is in everything else, so it should be in amusements. There is much greater liability to temptation and immorality where amusement is sought in the isolation or separation of the sexes.

Therefore, all exhibitions of pictures and statutes, all provisions for public recreation, all institutions for public amusement, should be such as to enable the people to go in groups and families.

I do not think amusements can be good generally in a community in which a man is ashamed to take his whole family to them. If there is anything you would not like your wife and children to participate in with you, the presumption is that it is wrong; and if there is anything you would like them to participate in with you, the presumption is that it is right. And this might be made a rule of judgment far more widely than it now is.—H. W. Beecher.

NEW IBERIA, LA., July 2, 1867.

To Rev. J. P. Newman, D. D.

DEAR SIR:—Herewith I send you a report of the condition of our church and Sunday-school during the last two years. From May 1865, to May 1867, we numbered 72 church members, from May 1866, to May 1867, we numbered one hundred church members. I opened Sunday-school in May 1866, and in the space of two months I obtained the number of one hundred regular attendants. I have nine exhorters, and three assistant teachers. The daily schools are dull and poorly attended. I want a discipline book, also a hymn-book, and if you can furnish me with a record-book, I did not get the papers you sent me, until lately, they should be directed in care of J. L Lewis I have not seen the Rev. Mr. Bryant but once. I have a revival in my church now, and am receiving a good many candidates.

Respectfully yours,
STEPHEN TILLMAN.

PEST, July 1.—Great agitation here. It is reported that Carloutz and Vakovar Stratimiravitz have been declared dictators by the Serovian population. Gen. Bohlentz has been ordered to evacuate.

TO OUR PREACHERS.

We call the special attention of our Presiding Elders, and of all our Preachers to the importance of circulating the New Orleans Advocate throughout the bounds of our conference. Some of our brethren have done nobly, and we heartily thank them for their successful efforts; but there are others who have done but little. It should be your high and earnest resolve to place the Advocate in every family on your station or circuit. It is your guide in religious and political matters, and brings to your homes the latest news. Among your people, it is a silent but earnest teacher of God's truth, and one on which you can rely. Therefore dear brethren, be in earnest in its circulation. Remember the second half of the current year has just commenced. To accommodate the poorest of our subscribers, we consent to have them pay quarterly. Brethren remember the presents of valuable books you are to receive at Conference, for a given number of subscribers. Then be up and doing, and let us hear from you soon. Who will report the largest number of subscribers to our conference?

Origin of Religious Knowledge

To him who denies a Divine Revelation, the question whence the origin of religious knowledge, is one most difficult of solution. To the christian there is a clear and full answer in the declaration that "holy men of old, spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." But the unbeliever rejects this; he denies inspiration, and asserts that he who created man has left him without communicating to him any religious truths As the existence of religious knowledge among men is an undisputed fact, it devolves upon those who deny that there has been a supernatural communication to man to offer some reasonable solution of this acknowledged fact He must admit not only the prevalence of religious information, but that theology is a science as truely as mathematics or chemistry. As a science its boundaries are clearly defined, its truths logically classified, its place among the great departments of knowldge distinctly allotted, its teachers and pupils thoroughly appointed and its high rank universally allowed.

Whence then the origin of this vast and comprehensive system of religious truth? If its supernatural origin be denied, what rational account can be given of its existence? What explanation can be offered which shall prove so much more reasonable than the one already accepted, that we shall yield the cherished faith of the past, to receive this new solution? If it is urged as a satisfactory account of the origin of religious knowledge that Theology like other human sciences was formed by observation, reasoning and experience, we ask.

1. How is it that Theology as a scientific system reached a state of completeness so far in advance of all other sciences of human origin? Astronomy, Mathematics, Physics, Jurisprudence, Political Economy and other sciences can be traced back, if not to their origin, at least to a very rude state. One science alone comes down to us with the stamp of completeness upon it so absolutely perfect, that for near two thousand years, not an iota has been added or taken from it; and though reaching back into the past beyond the trace of all history, except its own, is yet so perfect that even in its allusions to other branches of knowledge, it gives sanction to no views which have been discredited amid all the improvements and discoveries of succeeding ages. Can it be possible that while all other sciences have reached their present imperfect development through ages of experiment and reasoning, of mistake and gradual discovery, that this most difficult science of God and Divine things should leap at once to completeness merely through human wisdom?

2. But how is it possible that a system of theological science could have ever been formed by human investigation Other sciences are and must be mainly formed upon the basis of experiment, but here is one which must have been formed, if we exclude the idea of revelation, absolutely without any data whatever. It is, if infidelity be true, the science of a world we never saw, and of a Being we never knew. And yet this perfected science to which modern investigation can neither add nor take away a single principle, comes before us invenerable grandeur, not only with no history of its development, but without the possibilities of a gradually expanded growth, Far back in the remote past, it rose at once upon the world a full orbed sun, with no spot upon its disk and like the glorious luminary of day has shone with a steady ustre, which no ingenuity of man can either dim or brighten. But if the disbeliever in the divine origin of christian knowledge still insists that like other sciences it must have had a progressive growth we ask,

3. Why is it that the only complete publication of religious truth is found in but one book, and that book the oldest in the world? Who was it, in the distant past, that rose so far above his times and of all succeeding times, as by his superior understanding to send forth a system of theologic truth that no after generations could improve? Could his name be known he would deserve a place high above earth's most honored ones. But history records no such eminent discoverer of religious truth. While along the progressive periods of all gradually developing sciences shine brilliant names who have added to the stock of human knowledge, in this alone none pretend to have made discoveries. The early religious teachers simply taught what had been communicated to them. Their knowledge came not through reasoning and induction. It was an inspiration from above, and hence the Bible alone is a completed treatise upon a completed science. The grand science of Theology refuses to be bound within the limits that restrain all merely human sciences, and stands apart and alone, an emanation from the mind of God to man

Maximilian.

Count Montalembert, in his late brilliant essay, states a fact, which, though well known, is still curious and suggestive. It is, that during the late rebellion, the line of demarkation between the sympathizers with the rebellion and the friends of the Union in Europe, was no new or arbitrary one, but followed a long established and well defined groove of separation running through all the circles of life, political, social, and religious. The advocates of reform, the liberal and progressive men in the church, the state and society, sided with the Union. The haters of liberty and the leriders of republican ideas, the partizans of Cæsarism and "strong government," the "elite" and aristocracy generally, everywhere sided with the rebels. This was a suggestive division. It told more of the real nature of the issue than tolios of elaborate argument.

Not less suggestive is the division of the press and of public opinion in the country now, upon the fate of Maximilian. The rebel press, from the N. Y. Day Book down to the N. O. Times, unite in one dolorous howl of rage and chagrin, which would be frightening did not their impotence make it ludicrous. Listen to the ravings of the Times as it calls on the United States and the governments of Europe to "trail all their banners in the dust," and march "on to Mexico" to avenge Maximilian.

While on the other hand the Union press of this country, and we doubt not the liberal sentiment of Europe, while they are divided in opinion as to the wisdom and generosity of the course pursued by Mexico, and do not withold that sympathy which the misfortune and personal qualities of the unfortunate Maximilian and the still more unfortunate Carlotta, are calculated to excite in every human breast, nevertheless admit that justice, albeit stern and relentless justice, yet after all, simple justice, was executed upon Maximilian, the invader, the filibuster and the usurper.

It is true that Maximilian was an Imperial Prince, connected by ties of blood with more than half of the crowned heads of Europe. Yet we doubt if American or European republicans will see in this fact any palliation for his crime, or any good cause for his exemption from its accustomed penalty. Not many years since two Americans, it is true not princes, but of those whose blood we have been taught to regard as equally sacred with that of royalty, went on similar expeditions, with similar invitations, with equally respectable surrounders and backers, the one to Cuba, and the other to Nicaragua, experienced similar failures, and met similar fates. Yet we do not remember, that the governments of the civilized world, questioned the right of Spain and Nicaragua to punish these invaders, or "trailed their banners in the dust," or undertook a crusade against them.

The time chosen for Maximilian's invasion, just when in the eyes of Napoleon and other foes to Republicanism the government of this country was in the throes of dissolution; the object of the invasion, to subvert a sister Republic and erect a monarchy on its ruins; the animus toward the United States, to establish an unfriendly empire on its borders which should extend moral and perhaps material aid to the rebellious States, and result in the restoration of Louisiana and Texas to French rule—all these facts so deeply felt and resented by all loyal Americans at the time, have not been forgotten; and we venture to predict that the mourners for the fallen Mexican Empire will not be found among those who were upholding the starry flag in the hour when its deadly peril led the Imperial usurper of France to offer it the flagrant insult of the Mexican expedition. As to the efforts of the rebel press to make the rejection by Mexico of the intercession of the United States for Maximilian's life, a casus belli between the two countries, we heartily endorse the answer of the New York Tribune, that we hope it will teach our government to mind its own affairs and let other people's alone. We have no doubt that the editor of the Times, and every other man who sympathized with the defunct Confederacy, in whose interest the Mexican Empire was projected, would be glad in their inmost souls to embroil this country in a foreign war, and that confederate hopes and stocks would rise simultaneously upon such an event. Gentlemen, the Republic of the United States, which you sought to destroy, will not go to war with the Republic of Mexico, to avenge the fate of the Empire which you wished to see established.

R. H. Shannon.—This gentleman leaves to-day for the North, as U. S. Commissioner, Mr. Shannon has discharged his duties with credit to himself and to the country. In his court the poor freedmen have received even-handed justice. This honor cannot be accorded to other of our city courts. We shall regret the absence of so honest and honorable a judge from our city, but hope for his return after his summer vacation. Mr. Shannon is feared and hated by the disloyal, but respected by the true friends of our government.

Our City Currency.

In deference to the natural anxiety of the tax-payers and holders of the city currency to get at the facts of the controversy between Mayor Heath and the City Council on this important subject, we subjoin a table of all the amounts issued and cancelled from July, 1861, to ——— 1868, together with the No. and date of the Ordinances authorizing them.

Ordinance 5763, Sept. 21, 1861. Old issue		500,000

" 6090, Oct. 24, 1862, redemption of notes then cancelled, 185,760.

The issues under the last four named ordinances were denominated new issues, and as they were issued merely in place of old notes taken up, they added nothing to the volume of the currency.

Ordinance 6106, Dec. 8, 1862, authorized an additional iss e equal to ¾ of taxes due Jan. 1st, 1863. Issued under this ordinance,	419,940

It will be seen that the total amount of outstanding notes, authorized by all ordinances up to date, should be 2,669,-686 25. The total amount of the original issues under military government, termed the old issue, outstanding Oct. 24, 1862, was 1,435,104 Since that time, the only additions to the volume of the currency authorized by ordinance were the tax issues under ordinances 6106, 6252, and 6369, and the batture issue ordinance 6146, which were respectively

The question raised by the Mayor is, by what authority this excess of 1,073,-239 25, has been issued. To his inquiry to this effect, Mr. Hernandez, City Treasurer replies, by citing as the authority Resolutions of City Council, No. 309, Nov. 16, 1865. This Resolution, as it appears on the Minutes, "approves and sanctions the course pursued, and action taken by this joint committee, from July 26th, to October 2d, 1866, as per report of said committees presented and adopted this day." This report as printed does not even mention the issue of any notes. There is evidently a mistake here on the part of Mr. Hernandez. Deputy Controller, M. F. Pratt in his letter of July 1st, 1867, in answer to the inquiry of Mayor Heath, differs from the Treasurer. He state that there has been issued by the present Controller and Treasurer, 1,418,-895, of which there were issued to supply the place of mutilated notes, etc. 302,895, leaving as an increase of volume of currency by the Treasurer and Controller, 1,116,000, and he states that 1,000,000, of this increase was made by virtue of the resolutions of the City Council passed in secret session, and 116,000 were issued by virtue of ordinance. 6236, August 12, 64.

The Mayor as we understand, questions the legality of such authorization, and proposes that the future issue of new notes, be immediately stopped, until an investigation be made into the legality of such action. He also recommends that steps be taken to secure the people from the heavy loss entailed upon them, by the depreciation of City Notes caused by this over issue. In all this we think the Mayor's action is very prudent, and for the best interests of the public and the city.

Surely, if there is any room for a reasonable doubt as to the legality of the Treasurer's and Controller's action, in adding 1,116,000 to the currency afloat, and continuing to add more, the sooner it is stopped and the question thoroughly examined, the better for all concerned. We have also been shown some of the new notes now being issued, which bear date October 24, 1862. How is this? Why are notes issued in 1867 dated back to 1862? These questions, already noticed—and the power of the council to delegate so important an authority as the emitting of currency to a committee, the power of the present Government to act under ordinances passed by military authority in time of war, five years since, and the whole subject of the power of the city to emit currency at all, are all questions of grave importance to be decided. Pending their decision, not a dollar more should be allowed to be issued. The figures are from the Controller's Printed Reports.

Grand Sunday School Exhibition at Wesley Chapel, July 8.

Henry Clay was in his glory. He had labored hard for another year in the cause of Sunday-schools, and on last Monday afternoon, he had the great satisfaction to see the fruits of his toils. Mr. Clay is the superintendent of the Wesley Chapel Sunday-school, which now numbers 300 children, and it is evident that both officers and teachers take great pains to make this school a success. But in view of the large membership at St. Paul's, the number of scholars is far too small. So thought Henry Clay, for he took occasion, during the exercises, to reproach the parents present, for neglecting to send their children to school. He said if he was as guilty as some of those parents, he would want to "stick his head in a barrel and have some one turn the barrel up over him." Mr. Clay was more than half right. Our people do not take interest enough in the Sunday-schools There are thousands of children in this city who are growing up in sin and ignorance. Will not parents awake to the importance of this great subject?

Wesley Chapel was beautifully decorated for the occasion. There were wreaths of evergreens and flowers, and the glorious national flag was unfurled in all its glory. Rev. Mr. Brakeman, R. W. Bowei, Professor Williams, John Jones and Rev. J. Gould, were among the visitors present. Mr. Clay had invited several schools to participate in the exercises, and among those present were the following :

1. Wesley Chapel Sunday-school, H Clay, Superintendent.

2. First Street Church Sunday-school A. Robinson, Superintendent.

3. Marais Street Church Sunday-school Wm. Finney, Superintendent.

4. Excelsior day school, J. H. Collins, Teacher.

These are all fine schools and we looked with delight upon the dear children, many of whom, six years ago were bought and sold like so many beasts of burden. Said a friend by our side, "I wish some rebels were here to here these children sing and speak." And we too wished for the presence of those who assert that the colored race are incapable of mental culture and of rising to a higher social and intellectual plane. On this occasion, the children who took part in the exercises evinced great accuracy of memory and correctness of pronunciation. With but one or two exceptions there was not even a faltering in reciting lengthy dialogues, poems and addresses; and in no instance did we detect the pronunciation so peculiar to the colored people in general. This is astonishing and worthy of praise and admiration. And not the least benefit of such occasions is the noble ideas which occupy the youthful mind. There were pieces recited full of holy thoughts and clothed in beautiful language.

In reporting these exercises, it is imposible to describe each child, or give the piece each recited, we can only give the names of those who took part with an occasional remark. All did well but some excelled. By vote, the children requested Dr. Newman to open the exercises with prayer and a few remarks, which he did. Mr. Clay and the schools then repeated the ten commandments in concert, which was well done. Then came the recitations and hymns as follows :

Anna Green, "The Child's Prayer." Good.

Andrew Jackson, (a little boy,) "When I take my walk abroad." Singing by the schools,

"Go down Moses, way down in Egypt's land.
And tell King Pharaoh, to let my people go."

Sarah A. Johnson, "Skeptic." She has a sweet voice and speaks correctly.

Frank Bland, "Hope." Fine speaker and was applauded.

Millie Wood, "Kings and Thrones are fallen." Excellent recitation.

Edward Washington, "Where is the Spirit's Land?" Very fine.

Georgiana Handy, "Romish Lady." Applauded.

Horace Miller, "Fifth Chapter of Revelations." Recited without a mistake.

Dialogue by Jane Williams, Lizzie Dorman and Alexander Randolph, "False Position." Full of fun and loudly applauded.

Little Cilistine Lewis, "Black Cloud is rising."

Maria Pitman, "That's What's the Matter." This was a capital piece, well spoken and caused much merriment and loud applause.

John Johnson (6 years old) "Little Orator," wonderful memory, and provoked much applause.

Matilda Jones, "The Pauper," good.

Dialogue of Misses E. Bradley and E. Taylor. Beautiful sentiments; fine voices; loud applause.

John Hamilton, "1st. 2d. and 3d Psalms," correctly given.

John Peer, "Disobedient Boy."

Samuel McFalls, "Civil Rights Bill." Applauded. This was a poem and the lines,

The man that holds the bayonet
Can surely drop his vote,

were loudly cheered.

Charles Douden, "Courage Brothers." Good speaker.

Wm. Biggs, "Wanted a Wife." Very amusing.

Dialogue by C. Doudon, and Miss Lorenzo Reed, "Connubial Happiness." This was first-rate.

Charles Smith, "Rather Rub than Rust."

Singing by three young men and one young lady.

Maria Pitman and Mary Bland, "The Intelligent Witness." The pointed and oft repeated question—"Did your dad get corn and bacon for dat ditching?" Caused great laughter.

James Wedlock, comic piece, "Gal with the Waterfall." This caused much fun and applause.

Dialogue by Laura Livermore and Frank Bland, "Six months after Marriage." Beautiful children and beautifully spoken.

Caroline Robinson, "The Shephard."

Wm. Brown, "15th of Revelation."

Ellen Hunter, "My Father's Grave."

Singing—"Do not grieve my Daughter."

Delphine Green, "Hail to the land on which we tread."

Benjamin Smith—"Unmarried man"

Dialogue by John W. Cook and A. McFalls. "How big was Alexander?"

Salina Hill—"Little Sarah." Good.

Amelia Smith, "Stars and Strips." Cheered.

Alex. Randolph, "A Thousand Years."

Agnes Lewis, Anna Green, Lizzie Dorman, Lizzie Cornell, Celestine Lewis, Amelia Smith. Dialogue, "Most beautiful sound."

Harris Steel, "Fling out the Banner of the free."

Singing—"America."

Frank Bland, "Marco Bozarius." Cheered.

Martha Davis, Maria Pitman, Sarah Johnson, "The Apothecarian, cross examined. Cheered to the echo.

Phœbe Harrisson, "Evening Prayer." Good.

Josephine Price, "Poor Widow." Good.

Eliza Bradley, "Liberty." Cheered.

Geo. Phillips, "Who taught you to sing."

Emma J. Ricks, "Departure at hand." Good.

Susan Turner, Virginia Lawson, Dialogue, "Purchase of Love."

Isabella Biggs, "Complaining of the Poor."

Elizabeth Taylor, "Soldier to his Mother."

Fannie Lewis, "What I have Given." Good.

Ida J. Day, "Child beginning to Walk."

Harriet S. Justine, "Forty days and nights Fasting." Good.

Lorenzo Reed, "Burial of Moses." N. O. A. Rendered remarkably well.

Lizzy Dorman, "Love of Christ." Good.

Josephine Mott, "I Remember."

James Williams, "The World for Sale."

Kate Thomson, "Little Fred has gone to bed."

James Wedlock, "The Dutchman."

Maria Pitman, "Sailor Boy's Dream," and by request repeated, "That's What's the matter. Tremendous cheers.

DEDICATION.—The Presbyterian Church recently purchased by Rev. Evans Green's Society will be dedicated to Almighty God, to-morrow afternoon. The services will be held at 3 o'clock, and we hope that the occasion will be witnessed by a large congregation. Sermon by Rev. Dr. Newman.

DR. PEMBERTON.—Dont fail to read Dr. Pemberton's card in another column. You who fear cholera and yellow fever; and you who desire to be surrounded with a sweet atmosphere, should buy his celebrated "Carbolic Acid Disinfectant." The doctors say it is an excellent article, and what they say, must be true.

☞ The Republican State Convention of Texas, which was lately held at Houston, rejected by a decided vote, the term Radical, as the name of their party. They call themselves, The National Republican Party. The same Convention also refused to recommend the New Orleans Tribune to the loyal men of Texas.

☞ Ten new subscribers from Wesley Chapel, and the same number from Marais St. Church, have been added to our list.

☞ The City Council appropriated $1000, to Wesley Chapel for its asylum for aged and infirm members.

General News.

Execution of Maximilian.

HOUSTON, July 9.—The Brownsville Ranchero, of the 6th, publishes a letter from San Luis Potosi, stating that at 6 o'clok on the morning of the 19th, the troops commanded by Escobedo formed, a short distance from the city, for the execution of Maximilian and his generals, the prople of Queretato flocking by thousands to see the closing scenes in the life of the men they loved. The clock strikes seven, the bells toll and announce that the prisoners have left the prison for the last time, and on their way to the execution. After a few moments they appeared drawn in carriages, a large guard around them—the Emperor first, Miramon next and Majia last.

As they neared the place convulsive sobs broke from the crowd.

The carriages stop and the prisoners get out. Among the concourse you can hardly see a dry eye. Tokens of dissatisfaction are manifested. Maximilian, in alighting, is saluted by the people. In an easy and graceful manner, and with an elastic step he marched to the fatal spot. The prisoners were dressed in a plain manner. They were not bound nor blind-folded.

In taking his position, the Emperor spoke in a clear and firm manner, and with nothing of bravado. He seemed to feel his situation. He said, when he was first waited upon at home by the deputation from Mexico, who came with credentials, offering him the government of the country:

He refused. At a subsequent meeting the proposition was again presented. He replied that if convinced that the majority thought that it was to their interest to place him at the head of the government he might consent.

Another deputation waited on him and brought additional testimonials. Upon advice from the powers of Europe who advised him that there was no other course to pursue, he accepted the call. He denied that the court that tried him had power to do so. His was a case of good faith. The nations of the world had pledged their faith to him. He never would have done the act had it not been for the good of Mexico. He hoped his blood would stop the effusion of blood in the country.

Miramon spoke from a paper. The only regret he felt in dying was that, should the Liberal party retain the government, his children would be pointed out as the children of a traitor.

He told them he was no traitor, but had always opposed Liberal principles, and always been against the disorder of the country. He should die as he lived, a conservative, satisfied to die for his country. The name of his acts would live' and posterity would judge whether he was right or wrong. He closed with "Viva la Emperor! viva la Mexico."

Mejia made no address. He sent for Escobedo and said he would die poor, that he had never made an effort to make money. His only wealth consisted in forty cattle in the mountains. He asked that the merchants of Matamoros, to whom he owed considerable, would not press his wife to pay his debts when they came into possession of the money left them by the kindness of the Emperor.

After Miramon ceased the guard was drawn up—the prisoners were standing facing them—the Emperor called the sergeant, and drawing from his pocket a handful of twenty dollar pieces, he gave them to him, and requested that after his death he would divide them with his companions, and asking as a favor that he would aim his bullet at his heart.

The officer gave the signal and the volley was fired. The prisoner lay stretched on the ground. The Emperor was not quite dead.

There was considerable quivering of the muscles. Five balls had entered his breast. Two soldier were called out who shot him in the side. Miramon and Mejia were killed by the first volley. Each of the four balls enterd in the breast. A sheet was thrown over the Emperor by the Doctor who was to embalm his body. The bodies were then taken by their respective friends.

The troops moved back to their quarters. Thousands remained, kept by a supernatural agency.

The New Reconstruction Bill.

The following bill has been agreed upon by the new reconstruction committee recently appointed by Congress:

FIRST—It declares that Congress meant that all the provisional governments in the unrepresented States are illegal and void, and only to be continued subject to the control of the military.

SECOND—It gives commanders power to remove and appoint any civil officer, set aside or suspend any law of said government, or act of any authority acting under them.

THIRD—Boards of registration may exercise their own discretion in the performance of their duties. The taking of the oath prescribed by law is not to be considered as conclusive evidence of the right to register. They may strike from the lists the names of any person who they may believe has improperly taken the oath. They shall not be governed in their action by the action of any officer of the Government.

FOURTH—No court shall take jurisdiction of proceedings against any military commander.

FIFTH—Military commanders shall not be removed without the consent of the Senate, unless they themselves shall request it.

WASHINGTON, July 9.—The debates in both houses to day indicate the growth of the theory that the South is conquered territory, and has no rights. That the States are utterly abolished, and military governments supreme, and that the Constitution does not hold with regard to them.

Bingham, who has been opposed to harsh measures, supported the bill in a violent and vindictive speech

Stephens, in his closing speech, lauded Mexican bravery in slaying Maximilian. This sentiment was loudly applauded. One distinct hiss was heard.

The only part on which the two Houses will probably differ, will be regarding the appointment of civilians to State offices by militay commanders. The proposition thus to restrict commanders meets with powerful opposition from those who are in a hurry to reward loyalty. The speeches of the Democrats attracted no attention whatever from the opposition.

MISSISSIPPI STATE CONVENTION.

VICKSBURG, July 3, 1867.—This body, which met here yesterday, acted in accordance with the nature of the case for the same in the Vicksburg Republican; i. e. "merely in the capacity of a primary convention; and its action is not for the expression of the wants and necessities of the party." It was regularly organized by the election of G. C. Deane, of Yazoo, as President; J. F. Boalder, of Lowndes, and Albert Johnson, of Warren, as Vice Presidents; and Wm. Cumbach, of Washington, as Secretary.

President Doane, on being escorted to the chair, thanked the convention for the honor conferred upon him; and in a neat speech set forth the character of the republican party, the condition and duties of the hour, and what action is necessary to the carrying out of a successful campaign for equal rights in Mississippi. His remarks were warmly applauded, as were also the Vice-Presidents, on taking their seats.

The first State Convention of the Republican party of Texas met at the old court house in Houston at ten o'clock this morning.

It was called to order by Mr. Sabin, who nominated as temporary chairman, Hon. E. M. Pease, ex-governor of this State.

On taking the chair, Governor Pease thanked the members of the convention for this manifestation of their confidence in selecting him as the temporary presiding officer of the first Union State convention held in Texas since the passage of the reconstruction laws. He thought proper to complete the temporary organization by the selection of a secretary.

Rev. Wm. R. Fayle, of Houston, was nominated for secretary, and Charles W. Winn, of Navarro, Spring Hill county, Rev. G. W. Honey, of Galveston, and Scipio P. McKee, of San Antonio, were added to the list of temporary secretaries.

NUMBER XIX.

It was no marvel that Florence's resolution never to marry a Minister was broken, was it dear Minnie? when we reflect a moment on the lovely character added to the really beautiful and manly form of the young Itinerant who led her to the bridal altar. That was a happy moment to both when Papa pronounced them one in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, and bade them go forth imbued with this Triune benediction, to fulfull their high and holy calling. A better minister's wife, methinks could not be found than our dear sister Florence proved to be, if she did indulge in previous prejudices to such a position.

Agnes and her good husband with their little baby treasure had flown on the wings of the conference year to a distant charge. And at the same revolution of the Itinerant wheel, Florence and her beloved went out from our homes to cultivate their field of labor. We were lonely indeed, for another bright ray of sunshine had gone, and well did we know that next to our mother, her place of usefulness could not be filled in our housel old.

When the work of the day was done, and we sat down for a long winter evening, we now appreciated even more than ever, Papa and Mama's story, and implored them to continue it in detail, not that the three daughters left, expected to be Minister's wives and desired to take lessons by their experience; notwithstanding some of our friends had laughingly accused our mother of praying, that all her five daughters might marry ministers, as did the sainted mother of five illustrious sons, by the name of Peck, who prayed, and in answer to her prayer. all of them became ministers of the gospel. Mama always cheerfully replied by saying, that she should not consider a prayer to that effect unworthy of an answer, but she was willing to leave the result with an all-wise Father whom she had no doubt had thus far led her daughters in their selection.

We all decided that Papa must commence where he left off, and with a sweet smile he said, "I wonder if I can find the little thread of the story, as I dropped it some time ago. I remember it was near the close of the year, and your mother's health was far from being good, so that to me it was a severe trial to know that we must move again; but the inevitable two years had come to a close,—the conference ended—the appointments read off, and our destiny was B— circuit, far, far away. It was suggested by many that your Mother should remain with the children for a few weeks, until I could go and visit the new field of labor, then return and take them—when it was thought she would be better able to endure the long journey, for Fisk was an infant of only a few months old in her arms at that time. I need not tell you that your Mother, ever true to her duties as the wife of an Itinerant, insisted on going with me, least the work so sacredly entrusted to my keeping might be retarded. Railroads were not even thought of in those days, so I secured as comfortable a wagon as could be obtained, and placing the Mother and children in it, then, not unlike Jacob of old, we journeyed slowly, while the wagons containing the household furniture followed after us."

Here Papa placed his hand on the dear old arm chair, in which he was sitting, and remarked—this very chair was on one of those wagons—It has traveled many miles, but it has enjoyed years of rest since that time, or I would not be sitting in it this evening. I rejoice that our people are so liberally furnishing the Parsonages of this day, for there is no estimate to be made of the care, and the wear of moving furniture in wagons once in two years.

The journey as I said, was long and tedious. One night it was very late before we could find any one to take us in, for we were strangers, and few would be expected greatly to desire to entertain our little caravan. On reaching a public house, where it is always expected to find room for all who come along—but alas! even here they had retired and the doors were shut, and, as in the parable, the good man of the house refused to rise. One of our men on the wagons, as if to complete the parable by his vociferous importuning, succeeded—for after rattling away at all the doors and could not get in, he went to the window, and shouted out, "you will not let a minister and his sick wife and five or six children go any farther this dark night will you?" Hearing that a minister with his family were there, the landlord arose in haste and admitted us, giving us as good as the house afforded—saying he was himself a Methodist. The next morning he furnished an early breakfast for us, and with many thanks we journeyed on, reaching our new home just at nightfall.

The parsonage was not completed and yet we made ourselves quite comfortable until I succeeded in finishing it. There were five or six acres attached to it, with an orchard, and quite an abundance of fruit, cherries in particular. This was a comfortable and happy home. Papa then said to Mama, you remember brother Luckey on this circuit, and how much he was in our family, also how sensitive you were to my criticisms at times, thinking I was too severe. He was very young then, and since he has often expressed the most sincere gratitude. This recalls to my mind the first time our P. E. brother Marvin came to see us, as I went out to welcome him, and asked him to walk in. He turned around and looking at his horse said, "my horse goes on foot and I ride." I appreciated this eccentric hint, and assured him that his horse should have the best of care taken of him; but this was not equal to the reply he made to the good sister at whose house he stopped. Having prepared as munificent a dinner as the house could produce, she came in and good naturedly said, "Brother Marvin will you step out now, and take a bite." He looked at her a moment, and replied, "if I can't have more than a bite I won't take anything," the good sister not exactly understanding his idiosyncrasies felt indignant and said, you can eat as many bites as you please. She never asked him to partake of her hospitality again, neither could he gain her friendship from that day. He was an excellent man and intended no harm.

A new era now met me in my ministerial career—my health gave way from incessant toil and exposure, which obliged me to desist from active labor for a while. It was proposed to the Bishops by some of my brethren in the ministry, that I should rest for at least one year, and perchance in that time I might regain my health. It was a severe trial to hear my name read off on the list of supernumerary, before I felt my life preaching was half accomplished:—Great grace was imparted to sustain me in this affliction, and I was able to preach nearly every Sabbath.

Having more time to reflect on my own spiritual life, I was led to cry from my inmost soul for full salvation. While preaching a sermon on the subject of Scriptural Holiness, I was so deeply impressed with the idea, that there were heights and depths that I had not attained, that I could not sleep or eat, until salvation like a river of pure water was poured into my soul. In the stillness of the night-time, while pleading with God, I became suddenly so overpowered with the boundless riches of grace, and the preciousness of the blood of Jesus to clense from all sin, that I could not refrain from shouting and praising God the remainder of the night, and as soon as daylight dawned, I arose feeling I must tell to all around, that the precious and all-blessed Saviour had arisen, and appeared the second time to me by his all renewing power. Many of the neighbors as I sang and prayed with them thus early in the morning, caught the sacred flame of love divine, and joined with me in the song of "all glory to the Lamb," who had washed us in his blood. This great work spread in all the churches, so that I could say emphatically with the Psalmist, "It was good for me that I was afflicted."

My health continued precarious for four or five years, and at times my earthly sojourn appeared very transient—but they were eventful years. We were obliged to change our home several times, and study economy in every way to sustain our now quite numerous family, for two little girls, Beatrice and Florence were added to our number during these years. Our greatest joy was the happy conversion of Miriam our first born treasure. I am sure the voice of new born piety never fell in sweeter strains of music on my ears, or thrilled my heart with nobler emotions than while listening to her childlike yet earnest testimony of sins forgiven. Since that time God has given us all our children to journey with us on our way to Heaven, and you dear Minnie was the last the good shepard folded loveingly in his gracious arms.

EVANGELINE.

For the New Orleans Advocate.

A Northern Tour.

As we announced some time ago we made a visit to our former home in the month of May. We have returned to our work, not to leave it again, we hope till the close of the conference year.

When we left here on the 10th of May we had very good summer weather. On the 15th, we reached St. Cloud, Minnesota. The trees were as bare of leaves as in midwinter; the prairies showed no sign of green grass, and we almost doubted the coming of any summer this year. In a few days, woods and prairies were arrayed in summer's green, and there was a freshness and beauty in the landscape that was charming. The Spring all over the North has been very late and wet. It rained nearly all the time while we were there. The crops however look well, and there never was better prospects for plenty to eat. If no calamity befalls the wheat crop, it will be one the of largest ever raised in the country. In Tennessee and Kentucky the harvest is over; around St. Louis it is in progress—in Minnesota it will not be completed till near September.

The contrast between the North and South, is not greater in climate than in apparent prosperity. Minnesota is the youngest of North-western States. The The winters are long, and the cold severe. Its remote inland position is much against it. In 1862, a large portion of it was desolated by an Indian war, and nearly one thousand people killed by the savages. Still the population has doubled since the beginning of the war. Railroads have been built, cities have grown rapidly, manufactures been established, and thousands of new homesteads made all over the country. The tide of emigration pours along her roads like the mrrch of a straggling army. Government lands areeagerly sought for, and when purchased speedily increase in value.

St. Louis, with its vast grain trade, has built one elevator; New Orleans has talked about one. In Minnesota there is one at nearly every litte town on the railroads, and wheat which is the great staple crop, and of which they expect to raise fifteen millions of bushels this year, is handled with the least possible expense.

As we looked at the emmigrants moving on, to battle with the difficulties of remote frontier life, and the long terrible winters, we could but think much greater inducements were afforded to such in the uncultivated fields of the South, with their fruits and flowers and genial sunny skies.

We returned by boat from St. Paul to St. Louis—one of the most pleasant boat rides we ever made. The grand old bluffs of the upper river were fresh in their spring verdure, lower down the hills slope more gently and their sides are cultivated fields, and their summits abound with orchards. Pleasant homesteads are scattered thickly on hillsides and villeys, and growing young cities are numerous along the great river.

Political matters are very quiet, people generally too busy to give them much attention. We met a few men whose opinions had not changed for ten years or longer perhaps. They call themselves democrats and are the only class of people we know of who have learned nothing within the last seven years. They believe New England is the mother of all the our political troubles. that the anti-slavery agitation caused the war; that it is a great crime for a "nigger," to be free; to talk about "Black abolitionists" as if somebody would yet be scared at these words; but when it comes to the idea of a "nigger" voting they have no language sufficiently strong to express themselves, and no "express comyany has yet been found equal to the emergency.

There is no limit to the absurb and stupid things these men will say, if any one will listen to them.

We had not the opportunity to meet with as many of our friends in the church as we desired. Those we saw expressed a lively interest in our missions and were more pleased with our reports of success.

Political Meeting and 4th of July in Franklin.

U. S. OFFICERS AND SOLDIERS—POLITICAL MEETING.

This little town is just now the Head Quarters of several Government officials, Major Humphrey, Inspector of Registry boards, Major Purchase, Sub-Assistant Commissioner of Freedmen's Bureau, Lieut. Keller, Provost Marshal, with their clerks, and the Parish Registrars. Then 20 miles above, at New Iberia, is a company of colored U. S. soldiers. We do not see anything alarming in this influx of military and other officers of our good government, for they pursue the even tenor of their way, and add somewhat to the cheerfulness and the business of the place. Yet some of the citizens probably regard it in the light of "honors thrust upon them." The registrars have got through with their work, and are trying to wile away the days until the President sees fit to dismiss them. A few days ago a public meeting was held in the Court House Square. It was heralded by the Banner, and said to be called by some colored men. No one seemed to know much about it, except that some conciliatory measures were to be taken. Two colored men made speeches in that direction. Dr. Shakspeare Allen, who presided, gave them a good Republican talk, and Mr. Tucker, our mayor, made a reply, quite personal and offensive to the Dr. The mayor told the colored people that the southerners were their "best friends," and said, "go for advice to your old masters;" one replied he would hate to go to his late owner for anything, and the Dr. suggested that perhaps they had better go to the mayor, he being a lawyer. Such milk and water gatherings suit nobody. What we want here is a real no-mistake, Republican meeting. No club has been organized, and no delegates were officially sent to the late Convention.

FOURTH OF TULY—FLAGS, GUNS AND BELLS—PROCESSION—DINNER.

A splendid 4th of July celebration was got up, mostly by some ladies. The School Teacher and the lady of our Provost Marshal affording valuable aid. The affair did honor to all engaged in it. Preparatory to the celebration, some young men determined to put up a bell in the M. E. Church. On the 3d, one of the committee appointed, by his energy, raised among the people nearly enough to make the purchase; next day it was completed, and the bell was hung. The Provost Marshal obtained a cannon for the occasion, and at sun-rise on Independence day our cannon pealed and our bell rang their welcome to the Nation's birth-day. It was a Liberty bell and gun, telling of freedom to all the people. Three flags were manufactured and nearly 300 tri-color badges for the children. At 9 o'clock the Methodist Episcopal Church was thrown open for the patriotic gathering, and in a few moments it was crowded below, above, and about the doors and in the street. Even the storm did not dampen their ardor. After religious services, patriotic airs were sung. The school children were examined in their studies, acquitting themselves well. The Declaration of Independence was read, several addresses were made, and then a a procession formed to march to the school-room about half a mile distant, for dinner. It was a beautiful sight, over 300 children and as many adults followed the star spangled banner to the place of feasting. In front of our Court House the column was halted in military style to salute the flag. Reaching the schoolhouse, a pleasant sight met our eyes; long tables were set out, loaded with every kind of food. Substantials, pastry, candies, lemonade in abundance. Faithful marshals preserved order and fed the hungry patriots. Nothing occurred to mar the pleasure of the day; but one drunken man was seen on the premises, and he was promptly removed. Of all our officials, only the Provost Marshal represented the Government on this National holiday. At intervals during the day, gun and bell waked the echoes, and altogether our 4th of July celebration was a success. When these ladies and children get up another such an affair, Mr. Editor, may you and I be there to see and enjoy it.

DIED.

Died at Houma, Terrebonne Parish, La., May 1867. Rev. Jesse Cook, a local preacher in the M. E. Church, Thibodeaux and Houma Circuit. He was over a hundred years old at his death, and had been about sixty years a preacher. The old man was a member of the Methodist Church long before the separation and rejoiced greatly in coming back to his home. He has rendered considerable service to the Houma class, and died in the triumphs of a living faith.

PEMBERTON'S

"Carbolic Acid Disinfectant."

This Powder is a compound of Carbolic Acid, Copperas, etc., possessing the properties of destroying contagion, decomposing pestilential effluvia, noxious exhalations, and neutralizing strong and offensive odors; removing the effluvia of sick rooms, sewers, cesspools, sinks, privies, etc.

It far surpasses the Chlorinated Lime in its actions and effects, and is certainly the best Disinfectant now in use. Thoroughly disinfecting the atmosphere, electrifying the oxygen and rendering the respirable air both healthy and pure, being entirely free from all injurious effects on the throat and lungs, which so frequently attend the use of deodorizers.

MEDICAL.

Dr. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,

127 CARONDELET STREET,

Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of this ease, Chronic, and Acute

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient, that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years, in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient, if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the Institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet Street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city

MASON & HAMLIN,

MANUFACTURERS OF

CABINET ORGANS,

ALSO

PORTABLE ORGANS,

ADAPTED TO SECULAR AND SACRED MUSIC, FOR DRAWING-ROOMS, CHURCHES, SUNDAY AND DAY SCHOOLS, LODGES, &C., &C.

Uniting to a considerable extent the capacity of the Piano-Forte with that of the Pipe-Organ, and costing much less than either.

They occupy little space; are elegant as furniture; not liable to get out of order, and are securely boxed, so that they can be sent anywhere by ordinary freight routes, all ready for use.

Forty styles, plain or elegant cases; one to twelve stops; Prices, $75, $90, $110, $125, $130, $1 0, $150, $160, $170, $200, $225, $250, $300, $435, $540, $550, $600, and upwards.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs were introduced four years since, and are a great improvement upon the Melodeon, Harmonium, and other reed organs, greatly excelling them especially in the excellent quality and variety of their tones; in power and quickness of action, and capacity for expression,

THEIR SUCCESS HAS BEEN ENTIRELY BEYOND PRECEDENT,

and proves how greatly such an instrument was needed. Again and again the manufacturers have been compelled to double their manufacturing facilities, until they have been increased six-fold. From the most eminent of the musical profession, the most distinguished pianists, organists, composers, and musical directors, the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs have received an amount and degree of commendation never before bestowed upon any similar musical instrument. More than two hundred and fifty of the most eminent musicians in the country have given written testimonials to the value of the improvements contained in them, and that they excel all other instruments of this class.

FIFTY-TWO GOLD OR SILVER MEDALS, or other highest Premiums have been awarded to Mason & Hamlin for the important improvements effected by them, and for the

SUPERIORITY OF THEIR INSTRUMENTS TO ALL OTHERS.

Constantly exhibiting their instruments in competition with others, they have been awarded the highest premium in every instance, but three or four.

For churches, sunday schools, etc., the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs are the instruments long wanted, of the very best quality, abundant power, not too expensive, nor liable to get out of order.

For private use, in drawing-rooms, &c., they are not less desirable, and are finding a place in the musical families of the principal cities.

They are adapted to a wider range of music than the piano, being fitted for all sacred music and for much secular music, while their quickness of action is such that the most lively, rapid music can be played on them. Then their cost is greatly less, as well as their liability to get out of order.

BRIEF EXTRACTS FROM OPINIONS OF DISTINGUISHED MUSICIANS.

I should think they would become very much sought after as parlor instruments as well as for public performance.—Sigismund Thalberg, the world-renowned Pianist. Sure to find its way into every household of taste and refinement which can possibly afford its moderate expenses. Far superior to everything of its class I have seen.—L. M. Gottschalk, the eminent Pianist. Such pure musical tones, promptness and smoothness of action and fine variety of effect, I have not found in any other instrument of the class.—S. B. Mills, the eminent Pianist. Really so excellent that there can hardly be much difference of opinion respecting them.—William Mason, the eminent Pianist. The best instrument of its class with which I am acquainted, and worthy a place in every drawing room. Harry Sanderson, the eminent Pianist. In every respect far superior to everything I have ever seen of the kind, whether in Europe or America.—Geo. Washbourne Morgan the eminent organist, N. Y. I can only reiterate what so many in the musical profession have said, that for equality, promptness and exquisite tone, they are unequalled.—John H. Wilcox, the eminent Organist, Boston. Surpasses everything in this line I have ever seen, whether French or American.—Jon Zundel, the eminent Organist, N. Y. The best reed instruments in the world are made in the United States, and your Cabinet Organs are greatly superior, and by far the best made here.—Max Maretzer, Musical Conductor, N. Y. Far surpasses all other similar instruments, which have come under my observation.—Carl Zerhan, Musical Conductor, Boston. Exceeds in my estimation every other instrument of this general class. Thos. Hastings. I can recommend them with confidence.—Lowell Mason. As soon as the people become acquainted with the superior merits of your instruments, your only trouble will be to supply the demand.—Wm. B. Bradbury. I have never seen anything of the kind which interested me so much.—Geo. F. Root. Exciting much interest in musical circles, and already becoming the fashion. N. Y. Home Journal. The highest accomplishment of industry in this department. This is not only our opinion, but the unanimous verdict of the organists.—Boston Advertiser. A glorious instrument for the temple service, so readily secured as to be available for any congregation, and effective and beautiful as to meet the desires of the most refined and fastidious.—N. Y. Observer.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs must not be confounded with other reed instruments, from which they vary essentially, their superiority being largely derived from PATENTED IMPROVEMENTS, which cannot be employed by other makers. Among them are,

The AUTOMATIC BELLOWS SWELL, patented, a most important invention, and greatly the best swell ever devised being much more effective and easily used than any other. The variety and beauty of effect of which it is capable, can not be appreciated except from actual use. The many attempts to imitate or find a substitute for this swell, prove its value. None of them, however, approach it in excellence and simplicity.

IMPROVED SELF-ADJUSTING VALVES patented, secure much more perfect action, durability, and freedom from liability to get out of order.

WOOD'S OCTAVE COUPLET patented, in effect nearly doubles the power of the instrument in which it is used.

NOISELESS SAFETY VALVES patented, prevent the hissing sound often heard.

The IMPROVED COMBINATION REGISTER patented, gives great facility in drawing stops.

The Sisters Three.

"We were but three," our riper years
Though sometimes shaded o'er with sadness,
Though smiles were sometimes chased by tears,
And mingled was our cup of gladness,
We knew "it was not all of life
To live, nor all of death to die;"
We knew that sorrow, pain and strife
Ne'er reached the world beyond the sky;
We knew 'twas but a fleeting dream,
Our journey "o'er life's solemn sea;"
So, trustful, down the shadowy stream
We glided on—we sisters three.

We were but three; the angel death
Looked on our little trio band;
He still'd the pulse, he stole the breath,
And bore ONE to the spirit land.
With aching heart, and streaming eyes,
We gently laid her down to rest
Beneath the blue and smiling skies,
Upon the green earth's quiet breast.
We list in vain to hear her tone,
We gaze in vain her form to see—
Dust turns to dust, the spirit's flown—
We are no longer—sisters three.

WE ARE BUT TWO! Oh, sister dear,
One golden link in life's bright chain,
Which bound our hearts together here,
Is broken—ne'er to clasp again.
We feel an aching void within
Which this sad world can never fill,
But from her home above life's din,
There comes a sweet voice, "Peace, be still!"
Though passed, oh, loved ones, from thy vision,
My spirit lingers still with thee;
And in my own bright house elysium,
I love thee—we are sisters three."

We still are three—death could not sever
That holy tie—a sister's love,
She still is ours, and ours forever,
Though passed to her bright home above.
And though on earth long years we linger,
Through scenes of sorrow though we roam,
We still shall see a mystic finger
Point upward to her own bright home.
And when upon some angel pinion
We roam, our weary spirit's free,
There, there, in that serene dominion,
Forever we are "sisters three."

For the New Orleans Advocate.

Our Situation.

The leaders of the pro-rebel presses in the South, are giving deed and dirge-like utterances against the political situation, all of which they themselves are indirectly responsible for;

"He who of old would rend the oak.
Dreams not of it's rebound.

and thus it is with them. They inaugurated the war that led to the present unfortunate complication of affairs. They were happy and prosperous while they suffered the people to remain loyal to their old father-land, but goaded on by an ungodly lust for power, they would not be content with a reign of peace and prosperity. They contended that the oppressions were so great that they could not remain longer within the great sisterhood of States, into whose companionship they are now again struggling for admission. They (the newspapers) led our honest people into the unhappy work of secession, and after then grinding and oppressing them by military domination, taxing them one tenth of their substance, forcing beardless boys and grey haired sires from their peaceful homes, to go out to war against their country's honored flag, and shielding every man who owned 20 negroes from the conscription, forcing a worthless currency upon the people and forcing them to take it, and then turning round and dishonoring their own issues and reducing the country to the very verge of ruin, they now complain after all their armies and all their power are surrendered at the laws of Congress, and attempt to draw comparisons invidiuous to General Sheridan, between his conduct and that of General Jackson's many years ago. The civil power to which Jackson yielded a lawful and ready obedience, was one that was loyal to his father-land. It had not been in rebellion for years against its government, nor had Jackson been placed above that power by the supreme legislation of the nation as Sheridan has been. This latter General was expressly appointed to overrule this dangerous civil power, which had recently driven the State almost to ruin.

His province is to control this power that gives but a quasi allegiance to the government, and to enable the loyal people of the State to re-organize a Republican form of government out of the crude elements that are found in the State. This great civil power whose fallen fortunes the pro-rebel press so much laments, is part and parcel of the old machinery which has reduced Louisiana from a proud and honored State to a mere provincial principality. The flag of the Union found Louisiana upon her first accession to the United States, little better than a wilderness abounding with jungle and morass.

American enterprise reclaimed her vast alluvial temporary domains, and palatial residences sprang up along the banks of her great rivers and wealth and prosperity came pouring in upon her people like the waves of ocean but her leading men forgetful of what they owed to the Union, stretched forth their rash hand to smite the banner that had preserved them, and dreadful and unutterable ruin has been the consequence. The princely mansions where wealth so long held high carnival, have been remanded back to the old domain of the waters, and the crocadile and tortoise now revel in the parlors of deserted grandeur, and leviathans of the deep, disport themselves amid the rural gardens and lovely fields of her wealthy aristocrats. It is strange indeed that the old friends of secession, who now seem to be laboring under such mountains of misery, and who yet prate loudly of their loyalty (when it will pay to do so) can find no solitary word of anathema to hurl against those who inaugurated the present unhappy condition of affairs

The men who made the war, who armed the State against the government, and who have ruined her, are never spoken against at all. When it is necessary to send remembrances back for a searching inquiry into their conduct, they at once regard it as a high exercise of christian charity, to let the mantle fall over their enormities, and they keep all their barbed arrows, all their most polished javelins to hurl at such men as Sheridan, who is assiduously striving in good faith to rebuild the ruined arches of the temple which were impiously cast down through their own political recusancy.

If our friends throughout the South are so intensely loyal, as their journals contend they are, why do they never give the old secession leaders a thrust? But this class seem never to fall under their displeasure unless perchance one of them should embrace the union faith and then anathemas are hurled upon him by thousands.

It matters not how much these thinking men as they call themselves, may deride General Sheridan, he will doubtless discharge his duty. He does not seem to be a man easily to be frightened from his purposes, and every attempt made to disgrace him, only gives him additional eclat with the loyal people.

Our people seem to forget that their day of power and pride is past. They themselves declared that if they were conquered, we would have no rights worth living for. The President himself declared that the Military Bill gave unlimited power to the distrtict commanders, and the sentiment was echoed and re-echoed by the entire press South.

But now this same President and his advisers think these very commanders have only very limited powers. Surely it is a strange political faith that blows both hot and cold with the self same breath.

When Mr. Lincoln called for 75,000 men in the absence of Congress to save the Capitol, our presses here denounced the act as dictatorial. The President was then said to have very limited powers, and itall was then vested in Congress, but more recently when Congress refused to follow the leadership and after the policy of the great political Moses, who was to champion us back to our last inheritence, then Congress had no power, and it all lay with the President. Oh! Consistency thou priceless jewel, whether hast thou fled?

Our people will one day ascertain that Congress is the great regal power in this nation, and Presidents,and Cabinets, and Attorney Generals,and armies, and traitors must bow before its inexorable mandates. It is the autocracy of this continent, the vox dei, that rules and shapes our political destinies, and it will allow no macadamized roads to be erected here for fraud, and paying to travel on. It will be its own interpreters, and the intelligible director of its own statutes. Its voice is more potential than that of Delphian Oracle or Ephesian Diana. This great protective body will save its own people and prosecute the great work of rehabilitating these States which it has auspiciously begun; let us devoutly thank our God, that we have a Congress.

LOYALIST.

Spurgeon on Close Communion.

Mr Spurgeon is an open communionist, as many of our readers know, but all do not know that a sermon of his, from the text, "These are they who separate themselves," has been mutilated in the American edition of his sermons. The English edition of this discourse contains, besides other pungent sentences, the following: "There is not a christian beneath the scope of God's heavens from whom I am separated. At the Lord's table I always invite all christians to come and sit down and commune with us. If any man were to tell me that I am separate from the Episcopalian or the Methodist, I would tell him he did not know me, for I love them with a pure heart, fervently; I am not separate from them" This bears rather hard on our friends, the strict communion Baptists. I should not like to say anything hard against them,for they are about the best people in the world, but they really do separate themselves from the great body of Christ's people; they separate themselve from the great, universal Church. They say they will not commune with it, and if any one comes to their table who has not been baptised, they turn him away. The pulse of Christ's body is communion, and woe to the church that seeks to cure the ills of Christ's body by stopping its pulse. I think it is a sin to refuse to commune with any one who is a member of the Church of our Lord Jesus Christ, I should think myself grossly at fault if, at the foot of these stairs, I should meet a truly converted child of God,who called himself a primitive Methodist, or a Wesleyan, or a Churchman, or an Independent, and I should say "No sir, you do not agree with me on certain points; I believe you are a child of God, but I will have nothing to do with you" I should then think this text would bear hard on me: 'These be they who separate themselves; sensual, having not the spirit."

Immense Size of the Pyramids.

The largest of the three now before us, is Cheops, and indeed this is the king of all the pyramids in point of size. The figures are quickly given. The base, each side,732 feet; perpendicular height, 456 feet. But this is not the original size. As we have said, the vandal hands of the old Caliphs were laid upon it; they tore off the granite casement that constituted the smooth exterior, and then removed layer after layer of the huge limestone blocks to build their palaces and mosques in grand Cairo! They seem to have quarried from it with as little reverence for its magnificence and antiquity, and with as little compunction of conscience as though it had been only a bed of native rock in the hill side. Its original base was 764 feet for each side, and its height a little over 480 feet. But mere figures give us no just conception of its immense magnitude. It is only by comparison that we can appreciate this mountain mass of stone. The present base covers nearly thirteen acres; the original base was about thirteen and one-half acres. It is only when we begin to compare it with other structures that our astonishment is excited. If you are a farmer, imagine a large lot of thirteen acres; many a man who has thirteen acres thinks he has quite a farm. Or, if you live in the city, imagine a good sized city lot, sixty feet front, and one hundred and twenty deep. On such a lot you could put a large block of buildings, yet the base of Cheops would give you eighty such lots! A church fifty feet by one hundred is a large church for a city, and yet on the ground covered by this enormous pyramid you could place one hundred and fifty such churches. Now imagine this great field of thirteen acres all covered over with huge blocks of stone, laid closely side by side. Then begin to pile stone on stone, drawing in each successive layer a little, as the farmer does his sheaves in finishing his grain stacks. On you go piling them higher and higher, in one solid mass, till you reach the tops of the tallest forest trees, and yet you have only laid the foundation. Stone is lifted upon stone, layer piled upon layer; you have overtopped the Bunker Hill monument, reached the height of the tallest church steeples of our cities, and yet your cloud towering pile is not more than half completed. Take one of the churches with a spire of one hundred and fifty feet,and few church steeples are as tall as that, then lift another church of the same height, and balance it upon the top-most point of that, and then the golden-tipped point of this last spire is not as high by more than thirty feet as the original apex of this enormous structure.—Rev. D. Randall.

TRIP TO CLINTON.

Clinton, La., is an out-post of the New Orleans District. Friday, June 14, we took passage on the Steamer Louisiana for Baton Rouge, expecting to go thence to Clinton by stage. But high water had again cut off all communication by that route, as also by the Port Hudson Rail Road,and we were obliged to take boat for Bayou Sara where we arrived Sunday morning at 10 o'clock. This is the centre of a once largely cotton growing region, was a wealthy, though small place before the war, but its main buildings were burned by the gun-boats and it is now poor and desolate. There was no service of any kind, during all the day, and with the almost constant arrival and departure of steamers and the consequent business and travel, it did not seem at all like the Sabbath It seemed the hottest day of the season.

The only public house of entertainment in the place is owned and kept by a colored woman, once a slave, and it is well kept, and she is making money. We can heartily recommend the Hotel d'Henriette of Bayou Sara to all whom it may concern. Soon after our arrival our Inn was cheered by the presence of our friends of genial hearts and smiling faces—Mr. C. Heathe and lady, from New Orleans. Mr. H. (brother to his Honor the mayor of the Crescent City) is a northern capitalist and manufacturer of rare experience and ability, and with somewhat extensive and growing interests in the South. He owns a plantation near the Bayou, is going North soon, and hearing that some of the freedmen on his place were sick, and needed care, he had come to so provide for them as to render them comfortable in his absence. This is the true, the only real "re-construction."

It is worthy of note that Mr. Heath's farm lies directly opposite Ex-Governor Wickliff's place, is managed by a freedman, and worked altogether by freedmen, and that his crop his clean, nicely growing, and promises a good yield. His hands we believe work the place on shares and are reliable, industrious and contented. His Excellency,last spring, predicted that if Mr. H. allowed freedmen to manage his place, it would be a great failure, and he would lose all he invested. The point in all this is, that, while the predictions of his Honor, the ex-governor, have signally failed his own hands and crops, superintended by himself, present a striking contrast to those of his northern neighbors. Perhaps the different treatment of the hands by the two men will account for the contrast mentioned.

In the upper portion of the town (called St. Francisville) on the bluff, is situated the celebrated Episcopal Church once the wealthiest in the State. Its congregation represented millions of money, and its Rector, Rev. Dr. Lewis lived in state and fared sumptuously ever day. The beautiful church was surrounded by a lovely flower-garden and park enclosed by an ornamental iron fence; in front of it is a beautiful live-oak and magnolia grove, an Eden to behold—a paradise restored. But what a change came! In the bombardment of the place a huge shell plunged thro' the sacred edifice and exploded, a large fragment of it passing thro' the splended organ! After the war the house and organ were repaired, mostly by the pastor's personal efforts and private means. But, alas! his congregation could not be gathered again. Few came to the solemn assembly. Many had been sacrificed in the war, and slept in distant unmarked graves. Some were in exile, all were scattered, all impoverished. Not enough could be gathered to give their pastor even a meagre support, and he was compelled to close his church and look elsewhere for a living. We believe he is now in New Orleans. But what a desolation he has left! A shepherdless flock reduced to a remnant scattered, peeled, and torn; a people impoverished, bereaved, heart-broken, embittered uncharitable, faithless, hopeless remorseful, despairing; a forsaken sanctuary, its pulpit silent, its altar-fires dead, its sacraments removed, its organ tuneless, its temple hymnless, its bell forever stilled, perhaps like others, given to the confederacy to be moulded into cannon; the park and flower-garden neglected and all grown up to weeds and briers, like the fields of the slothful, and its very iron enclosure being eaten up with corrosion, and decay! There it stands, that house once venerated and beloved, once thronged with the willing worshipers, or gay and wealthy worldlings, now, a vacated, silent, solemn sad memorial of—what? We will not say: An impressive warning, instructive comment, more than curious to contemplate.

Monday Morning we took stage for Clinton, via Jackson, our Jehu was mail-carrier, expressman, and public chore-boy-in-general, disposed to accommodate everybody; as is evident from the fact that when, an hour was past, we were just two miles on our journey. Soon it began to rain heavily, in so much that both coach and umbrella failed to keep us dry. In the seat with us sat Lieutenant Thomas, late of the "Lost Cause," but a good travelling companion, as he had been a good rebel He was in Port Hudson during the siege, was one of General Gardner's aids. As the writer had been one of the besiegers, in that campaign, we beguiled the tedious, rainy hours by mutually, recalling and recounting incidents of its history.

At noon we reached Jackson, the seat of the Centenary College of the M. E. Church, South, and of the Insane Asylum for La. Both institutions are languishing Here lives a Scotch family, by the name of Murdock, the husband and father (now dead) was the architect of the Asylum and College. The widow is an M. D and holds her diploma from the best medical college in Edinburgh. They were uncompromisingly 'union" during the war, were charged with being "Federal Spies," and were repeated arrested and imprisoned by the rebels We have the promise of some "sketches" of their experience in this line for the ADVOCATE. Beyond Jackson the "coach" halted to deliver a package, when a man of tall venerable form came out to receive it. We asked him how long he had lived there. He replied: "since 1805, and have never but once, been over ninety miles from home in all that time!" And yet between that and Clinton we rode at one time four miles (a region settled for over sixty years,) without seeing a house, or any signs of improvement. And in all the distance not a single school-house, and but one church. We reached Clinton at night.

Clinton is beatifully situated, contains perhaps, two thousand inhabitants. "The Silliman Institute," and several high schools, and some of the oldest lawyers in the State. Lieutenant De Gray is in charge of the Freedman's Bureau here, and the freedmen, the best judges in the case, represent him as a faithful and efficient officer. We are greatly indebted to him and his kind family for favors. Miss Skinner who is teacher here in the freedmen's school, has no superior in her profession, and under advers circumstances, has achieved a marked succees. Her heart is in the work. We visited both the day and Sabbath-schools, and addressed them Her discipline, and goverment are the best we have seen, and the proficiency of the pupils, for the time they have been taught, is unsurpassed.

Last year, Rev. H. Ryan, in charge of the Baton Rouge Circuit, extended his labors to this place, and organized a large society (worshipping in the woods) bought a lot of ground, and prepared to build a church. His successor (brother Hodge) was late in getting to the work, this year, the people were still without a house, (the missionary appropriation of last year having been not secured to them) the people too poor to build a house for themselves, and brother H. became discouraged and left the field False reports about brother Ryan,and the M. E. Church were industriously circulated by our enemies, and a number of the people rejoined the Church South. But Presley Yarborough, a local preacher, the official board, and one hundred members remained firm, and rallied to our call It was the first visit of a Presiding Elder of the M. E Church to that place. We remained with them a week, re-organized the work, preached eight times, put brother Yarborough in charge, and left them with one hundred and thirty-six members in town, and fifty-eight in the country, one hundred and forty-nine in all, and with arrangements perfected for the immediate erection of a church.

We found many of the freedmen still living in concubinage, and tried to correct the evil by refusing to receive into the church, adminster the sacraments, or grant licenses to any persons living in that immoral state. Presley Yarborough, P. C. was (as was fitting he should be) the first man married. He is a character worth sketching: He has lived in that place seventeen years, and has not an enemy. He is intelligent, industrious, a true christian, and a good preacher. He now lives two miles in the country, where he has paid for with his own money and owns one hundred and twelve acres of his old masters plantation, and is raising a good crop. He has been a preacher thirteen years, and is able to teach the people. A free man, he owns and tills the same acres where he once toiled a slave. What a change!

One evening we rode out to his place to marry him to the woman, who, tho' the mother of four of his children, had never been lawfully made his wife. We arrived at sun-set. The hands on the place, and the neighbors, had been invited in Mrs. Lucy S Ratliff, his former mistress, and who owned him when the war set him free, and her two nieces, Misses Mollie F. Ryan, and Martha Ryan,(all living at the old place,) were among the invited guests, and were present. The house being to small to accommodate all, the company were invited into the open air where under a magnolia tree, the parents and their four children all standing together, the father and mother were lawfully made husband and wife.

At the close of the ceremony which ended with prayer, Mrs. Ratliff and her two nieces signed the marriage certificates as witnessess! They spoke very higly in Presley's praise, and said that he was a good man, that they wanted to see him do well, and would do anything they could for him. Would that such a spirit towards the freedmen, upon the part of their former owner, every where prevailed. Perhaps it is more general than many suppose. We think it is so.

We were pleased and surprised to meet in Clinton, Mr. Smith, their Post Master, and Dr. Robinson, formerly of the 7th Ky., Regiment, our old associates in the army. They appear to be doing well. We must not fail to mention Hon. Mr. Marston, formerly cashier of the bank there, who very kindly favored us in the way of exchange. Perhaps we ought also to state that we were kindly invited to preach to the colored people in the M. E. Church South, at 3 P. M., on Sunday, and accepted. The white pastor of the church, and a few of his flock was present.

We returned via., the Clinton and Port Hudson Rail Road. The "rolling stock," entire, of that "line" consists of four mules, driven tandum, and two small platform-cars, one for freight, and one for passengers, the latter covered with an awing, this being a late improvement. Our seat were long boards benches with no backs. If the cars run off the track, which they often do, the passengers take to the blackberry patch, the mules are turned to grass, while the driver,jack-screws in hand,turns his attention to replacing the cars on the track.

At Port Hudson where he lives, we met Rev. James H. Merrill late of Texas but for years book-agent of the church South. He was wealthy, but is now poor, and very despondent over the future of his church, as were all the men of that church whom we met in our trip, and we saw several of them Mr. M. is going to Honduras. Arriving in the Port at noon,and remaining till the next A. M., we had time to visit many familliar localities, and the graves of some of the many dead we buried in the siege. What thronging memories came as we wandered from place to place, and recalled the scenes of that sad but successful campaign! At night the same numerous bright, eternal stars stood silent sentinels above us, which shone for us tho' the siege. We could not sleep, our thoughts were with the heroic dead, and with the loved ones far away who mourned their loss. God bless them!

The Sunday Question.

The English House of Commons, on the 19th of June, was engaged in discussing the Sunday question. Lord Amberley moved the second reading of his bill, the object of which was to repeal an act of George III, so far as it relates to the prohibition of lectures at which money was taken at the door. Mr. Mill spoke in favor of the bill. Mr. Bright wished a thorough investigation of the subject, but at the same time expressed himself decidedly in favor of preserving one day in the week as a day of rest and religious observance. The bill was rejected without a division.

By the rejection of this bill, Protestant England has remained true to her ancient traditions and laws touching the Christian Sabbath; and in this, Mr Bright has proved himself a wiser statesman and a more comprehensive reformer than Mr. Mill. The former, and not the latter, appreciates the true relation of the Church to the State, and cordially acknowledges the obligations of the "Higher Law." And his example in this regard is the more valuable from the fact that Mr. Bright is the recognized leader of liberalism in England. He has attained the sublime conception that Christianity is sufficiently liberal for all practical purposes. Unlike Theodore Parker, Wendell Phillips, Wm. Lloyd Garrison, and other American liberalists, who reject Christ and denounce his Church, Mr. Bright, with a clearer vision and a sounder faith, plants himself firmly upon the doctrines of the Gospel, and eloquently demands of the British parliament, to "preserve in-tact one day in the week as a day of rest and religious observance." As in the glorious past, so in the more glorious future, John Bright shall be called the Christian reformer.

Napoleon and Maximilian.

The end of the Mexican empire is another illustration of the doctrine that justice is but partially executed in this life; and it equally illustrates another truth, that the least guilty often suffer the most. As the history of that empire unfolds, facts prove that Napoleon, and not Maximilian, is the more guilty party in the attempt to destroy republican institutions on this continent. Under the pretence of collecting claims due the French Government, Napoleon sought to gain a foothold on Mexican soil. Taking advantage of our civil war, he sent his splendid legions to crush to death the Liberal party in that portion of our continent. To accomplish his purpose, he has expended not less than $70,000,000 in hard cash, and $8,000,000 in munitions of war; while he has sacrificed thousands of his best troops, and caused the loss of $50,000,000, invested by too credulous Frenchmen, in the new empire. As his dupe and tool, the Archduke Maximilian was chosen to cover his designs, and, as the sequel has proved, has been the greater sufferer—his life has been sacrificed to the duplicity of another. We cannot but condemn the foolhardiness of the Austrian prince in accepting such a mission, yet posterity will throw the mantle of oblivion over his faults, and only remember his personal excellencies, which are made to appear more conspicuous by his melancholy death. But not so with Napoleon. As the principal in this grand conspiracy against liberty, he deserves the greater punishment. His genius as a statesman cannot save him from the just condemnation of mankind. Justice against his evil works may not be speedily executed; he may remain longer upon his throne, and revel in the luxuries of the Tuilleries and St. Cloud; France may be taxed to pay the $70,000,000 squandered in Mexico; French merchants may not regain their $50,000,000 invested in the empire; the homes of the brave dead may never be cheered by the presence of the fallen heroes, and "Poor Carlotta" may ever murmur "Poor Maxmilian!" yet the day of retribution will come, and justice be impartially executed.

Bishop McTyeire.

In his lengthy episcopal letter of July 11, in the Nashville Christian Advocate, Bishop McTyeire recites his sad experience among the "Churches in East Tennessee." He charges our ministers and laymen there with church-robbery, parsonage-robbery, and mob violence." But why don't the Bishop give us the NAMES of the men guilty of such charges? Out with them, Bishop; don't be afraid of a suit for slander. It is a cowardly way of stating the case to say that a "Northern Methodist, the Rev. Mr. ——," occupies a church and a parsonage to which he has no legal claim, and that a "Northern Methodist, class-leader," led a mob, etc., etc. We have no irresponsible Rev. Mr. ——— in our church. Every one of our ministers in East Tennessee, stands ready to answer to his name; and we guarantee the Bishop against mob violence in that State, if he can muster pluck enough to give us the names. But why don't he give the NAMES? Evidently for two reasons: I. He knows that his statement is ex parte, and that he can't prove the statement true; II. His design is to slander the WHOLE Methodist Episcopal Church, and if possible to increase the prejudice of the Southern people against that Church. He is conscious of the power of the "Old Church" in the South, and trembles at her triumphant progress through the Southern States. But his insinuations will avail nothing. His accusations against the Rev. Mr. ——— will pass unheeded by a people rapidly coming to the light.

Thomson Biblical Institute.

Some months ago we alluded to the kind intention of Mr John Baldwin of Berea, Ohio, to purchase a location for our Theological school, and we are now happy to state that he has just purchased the "Darby Place" near Franklin, La. The plantation is located on the Bayou Teche and Opelousas R. R. and consists of 2,000 acres of excellent land. It is in the most delightful and healthy portion of our State, and will be an admirable place for our students to work and study. It is within the bounds of the Opelousas District, and the presiding elder, Rev. R. K. Diossy has rendered efficient aid in the matter. In behalf of the Church we thank Mr. Baldwin, and our people will pray that his life may be spared to carry out the details of his noble design.

The Water Works vs the Street Commissioner.

We are informed that Mr. Bragg, the Superintendent of the Water Works has addressed a complaint to the city authorities that the city is using too much water, and that to prevent such indiscretion in the future, he will assume exclusive control of the hydrants, (i. e.) in plain words, shut off the supply. This is cool, decidedly. The charter of the "Commercial Bank" conveys to that body the exclusive right of supplying the City and its inhabitants with water, for the express consideration that this company shall "at all times furnish the city with all the water necessary for washing, watering and wetting the streets and gutters, and for all other public purposes, free of charge."

This is explicit, if the company have not the facilities to comply with their contract, let their charter be taken away and given to parties who will do so. We hope the street commissioner who we believe is faithfully discharging his duties, without fear or favor, will insist upon the utmost rights due the city.

Water is a necessary, not to be supplied by measure, but in such an abundance, that no possible use of it can exceed the supply. A little more water Captain Bragg!

Nye and the Times.

"Senator Nye has announced that he did not believe the Southern States would be loyal until every rebel in them was dead. Shame on you, Mr. Nye! You know you are misrepresenting a brave but unfortunate people."—Times.

This is a good sample of talking at cross purposes. One party states a true proposition in a false form, the other replies by stating a false one in a true form. Mr. Nye, intending to say that the rebel population of the Southern States are as disloyal as ever, which is true, says that the Southern States are as disloyal as ever, which is not true. The Times, intending to be understood that the late rebels are now the only "truly loyal," and the meekest, most magnanimous and thoroughly reconstructed people in the South, which is false, says that the Southern people are, as a majority, loyal, which is true, or fast becoming true. The majority of the legal voters in Louisiana, under the protection of the Military Bill, are perfectly loyal. And if they are allowed to reconstruct the State government, they will not ask or need confiscation or extermination of rebels to keep the State loyal.

But as to the late rebels of the Southern States, we lay down as a rule, which has its honorable exceptions, such as Gen. Longstreet and a small class of large-minded, patriotic men, that they now hate the United States, free institutions and liberal ideas more than ever, and the Times knows this fact. We could take its files since the surrender, and by extracts from its columns show more malignant and dangerous hatred of the Union, more contempt of law and order, more abuse of the North and more hatred toward Union men than could be found in the Richmond Enquirer during the war. Said a prominent gentleman of Mississippi, a leading and able lawyer, the other day to us, "I have taken my parole, and intend to observe it faithfully; but I openly avow, that I hate the United States government, and will hate it till I die; and I hope to see it destroyed. Should a war break out I will not fight for it. I will teach my children to hate it, and my feeling is that of "our people" generally."

Military Bill---Late Supplement ---Summary Thereof.

1. The true intent and meaning of that law at first was and now is declared to be, that no legal State governments exist in the rebel States named.

2. Congress has at last boldly discarded all indirection and circumlocution, and now explicitly asserts its constitutional prerogative by sweeping the entire batch of rebel States named from their assumed State-Sovereign standpoint into a territorial condition, there to be dealt with, adjusted and reconstructed in a manner akin to the government management and control heretofore of territories, but blended with more cautious severity, and justly so, considering the badly concealed hostility still rampant, more or less, throughout the rebel States.

3. Concerning State governments organized by President Johnson since active hostilities in the rebel States named, wherein blatant, unrepentant rebels, with pomp and flourish of trumpets, were restored to high and responsible official positions, Congress now declares in tones of "one having authority" and not to be misunderstood, "it is written, my house shall be called the house" of the free, "but ye have made it a den of thieves," and that same authority has placed scourges in the hands of the district commanders with orders to drive out, and leave no disloyal officials in the "temple." See section four of the supplement.

4. The commanding officer in each district is armed with potential authority to remove or suspend therein, for reasons satisfactory to himself, any civil officer, executive, legislative, judicial, ministerial or municipal, and such action is valid until disapproved, if ever, by the commander of the army of the United States. No approval is first required as a preliminary. Disapprovals will only occur in case of extraordinary injustice and hardships. This power of disapproval is only conferred for the sake of securing uniformity throughout the five districts.

5. The foregoing points are based upon a liberal construction of the original law and supplement, the eleventh section of the last act expressly declaring that the whole shall be liberally construed to the intent and purpose that the spirit of the law may prevail, and utterly preclude all opportunity for "strict construction." The word "litteral" is a clerical error in the eleventh section.

6. Congress having been reconvened by the spontaneous voice of the whole nation, roused by the threatening attitude of President Johnson miscounseled, has now made the whole work so plain "that he who runs may read" and understand the same; and Mr. Stansbery's professional aid is most cuttingly dispensed with, and Mr. Johnson's ideal executive wings are closely and completely clipped.

Immortality Necessary for Man's Complete Development.

We judge it safe to assume that the Creator has given to every species of organic beings, or at least, to some individuals of the species, a life of sufficient durations, to allow of all that growth and development, of which the organization of the being is capable. In other words they live long enough to complete their growth, whether that time be long or short.

The horse attains to his full size and strength and beauty in a few years, and though he may live longer afterwards than the period of his growth, he makes no further improvement. The limit of progress has been reached, and he can go no further. All that his vital action can now do, is to preserve that organization for a little while from decay.

His race has not made any improvement for thousands of years, and probably will not for thousands yet to come.

The same is true of all animal life, including the physical nature of man. He reaches the limit of material progress in the average length of material life. Beyond that, vitality battles with decay, till the latter certainly conquers. If our lives were much longer, even equaling in duration those of the antediluvian Patriarchs, we have no reason to suppose our bodily powers would be superior to what they now are, at the maximum of the present life.

In the vegetable world the same law rules. Some of these mature very speedily—their lives are correspondingly short. Others require centuries to come to perfection and they live centuries.

In man we find another nature, governed by different laws from those applying to the physical, but capable of a progress far greater than any material growth—a progress that has no common standard, like bodily stature, and that has never found any fixed barrier to still greater progress.

Physically ancient races of men were not inferior to modern ones; but, intellectually, there have been great changes. In a few things the ancients attained to a perfection yet unsurpased, but these were only the first buds of the human intellect that came into bloom. If in poetry and some of the arts they have not yet been excelled, it is none the less true that modern intelligence has a vastly wider range, and that the common people of our time have more extensive and varied information than was possessed by the Philosophers and Wise Men of the ancient world. That great progress will be made in future we never doubt, for we feel that there are vast realms of thought and action still unexplored, with no barriers in our way, and no sentiments to guard their borders of silence and solitute.

The greater our knowledge the more we are impressed with the littleness of the known and the vastness of the unknown.

The men who have been termed great have been those in whom certain powers had outgrown the same, as they exist in ordinary men, and these more than others, have been impressed with the imperfection of their own knowledge. Instead of exhausting the mines, they have only discovered a few veins of the rich ore and pointed out where others might work.

Man's intellectual growth is stopped only by the failure of this life, which is far to short for the complete development of a single power or faculty of the mind, even under the most favorable conditions. Whether there is a fixed limit to the growth of each mental faculty or not, and if so how long it would take to reach that limit, are questions we now have no means of solving. We are sure of this, however, that the powers that make men great, are possessed in a less developed, or it may be latent condition, by every individual of the human race, and they only want favorable conditions to enable them to grow. As a possible oak with all its roots, trunk, branches and leaves, is contained in each acorn that falls, so the possibility of all human greatness that has ever been, or ever shall be, is contained in each human mind, however, humble its condition now.

That our present life is not sufficient, for this is a proposition too plain for denial. For such a growth a future life is necessary, and not only a future, but also an immortal life. If we allow that each faculty has its limit of expansion and growth—a speculation we do not think supported by probability, the time for the full development of all the faculties, must be inconceivably great. But the complete growth of each power would by no means exclude the idea of further progress. A few simple elements comprise the material world, but new forms of utility and beauty are ever appearing. Ten characters of fixed and definite powers, give expression to all possible numbers, and by them we perform all arithmetical calculations. We may calculate the possible changes of the letters of our alphabet—a number so vast that all the words ever spoken by man would not reach a conceivable fraction of it, and which to our capacity is as incomprehensible as eternity itself. What form of figures, or words shall express all possible combinations and powers of the human mind, elevated to its fullest limit in every faculty.

When that is all done, we then may be ready to enjoy that heaven of eternal repose which some fancied we might reach at last.

We conclude, therefore, that the human mind is by far the most wonderful of all created things, within our knowledge. The present life of man is utterly insufficient to allow it to reach its limits of growth and progress.

It would seem very strange if God, after giving length of life sufficient for perfect growth, to all vegetable and animal organization, should mar the existence, and cut short the progress of his greatest work, by denying it time to reach maturity, and cause human souls to fall like blighted fruit with none to ripen ever. But man as immortal promises to fulfil the Creators, grand design, and while rising higher in knowledge, goodness, and power, to ever confer the more honor, on God, whose power and wisdom have been combined in his creation.

DEDICATION.—In consequence of the storm last Sabbath, the Presbyterian Church recently purchased by the society of which Rev. Evans Green is pastor, was not dedicated at the time appointed; but Providence permitting, the dedication will take place next Sunday, at 3 P. M. Rev. N. L. Brakeman, the Presiding Elder, will officiate on the occasion.

In an article in the Christian Recorder of June 29, Rev. Ebenezer Hayward, of Natchitoches, is claimed as a minister of the A. M. E. Church. This is a mistake. Mr. Hayward belongs to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and is one of her most reliable ministers. There is no organization of the A. M. E. Church in the Parish of Natchitoches.

☞ The Methodist Quarterly for July is on our table, Rev. Mr. Haven's article on the inspiration of the Scriptures, is fresh as the morning; Dr. McClintock's review of "Migne's Roman Catholic Publishing House," is replete with valuable information; and the editor's summary of religious intelligence and his book reviews, are worth more than the price of the Quarterly for the whole year. See the table of contents in another column.

☞ Special attention is invited to Messrs. Carlton & Porter's advertisement of Whedon's Commentary on the Gospels. Every intelligent Christian should read this work. For lucidness of style, compactness of expression, and fidelity to the sacred text, it has no superior among works of this kind. We hope all our preachers will send for it; it will aid them greatly in preparing their sermons.

Rev. James Hayward, of Baton Rouge, has been on a visit to his friends in this city. He preached on last Sabbath at Jefferson, at St. Paul's, and at First Street Church.

☞ The Roman Catholics of New Orleans, lament the death of Maximilian. In their cathedral and larger churches, solemn requiems have been sung to his memory, and solemn prayers have been offered for the repose of his soul. Yesterday, the St. Louis cathedral was the Pope who excites the sympathies of the church. It was popery and the empire, versus protestanism and the republic.

NEW ORLEANS, July 16th, 1867.

Editor of the N. O. Advocate:

It gives me pleasure to announce the receipt, by Rev. R. K. Diossy from Rev. Thomas Kennedy, from the Donaldsonville District, of $11, 75 (eleven dollars and seventy-five cents,) as a collection taken up for the benefit of the Orphan's Home Society of New Orleans. This is the first remittance from the country districts. God bless brother Kennedy and his people.

General News.

LONDON, July 12.—His Majesty Abdul Aziz, the Sultan of Turkey, who left Paris yesterday, after a pleasant voyage across the Channel, landed to-day on the shores of England. He was received by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, acting for the Queen, and by His Majesty Ismail, the Sovereign of Egypt, and was by them escorted to the city of London, where he met with an unusually brilliant and imposing reception. The London and Dover Railway station in which he alighted was richly and appropriately decorated, and the streets through which he was to pass were covered with flags, and triumphal arches and festoons of flowers. The entire route of the procession from the railway depot to Buckingham Palace was guarded on both sides by unbroken lines of troops. Behind these vast multitudes of spectators were packed in soled masses on the sidewalks and crowded every window and housetop. When the Sultan accompanied by the King of Egypt and the Prince of Wales passed between the lines of soldiers, the people, struck by the novelty of the spectacle, manifested the most unbounded enthusiasm, and the shouts of welcome, cheering, and waving of handkerchiefs and banners did not cease until the Sultan had entered the gates of Buckingham Palace. This royal residence has been placed in a state of complete preparation for the accommodation of His Ottoman Majesty, and will be occupied by him during his stay in London.

DR. LIVINGSTONE ALIVE AND WELL.—An extra of the Times in India, dated the 14th ult., contains the following letter: "Sir—One of the missing Sepoys, 21st regiment native infantry, of marine battalion, who accompanied Dr. Livingstone's expedition, returned this day from Zanzibar. News had been received from the doctor. He was alive and well, and the havilder, 21st regiment native infantry or marine battalion and the Nassick boys were with him S. Thacker, commanding 21st regiment native infantry. Bombay, May 14, 1867."

Paris annually consumes $30,000,000 worth of mutton and beef, $19,000,000 of bread, $38,400,000 of wine, $2,200,000 of beer, 3,200,000 of chocolate, $4,200,000 of pastry, and spends, besides this, $20,800,000 in restaurants.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, July 16.—The bill relieving certain diserters passed.

The president sent in a message regarding the Russian treaty, asking an appropriation to carry it out. Also regarding a convention between the United States and Venezuela, providing for the settlement of claims of citizens of the United States against Venezuela.

Late Arizona advices report that the Colorado river had flooded the country. Only two buildings in Arizona city remained uninjured. The quartermaster's warehouse at Fort Yuma was destroyed by fire. Loss, $300,000. The Arizona mail carrier was killed by Indians.

FROM AUGUSTA, GA.

AUGUSTA, July 16.—Ex-Governor Johnson has written a letter in which he advises the people of Georgia not to accept the terms of the military re-construction acts. After reviewing the situation, and the terms proposed for the re-construction of the Southern States, he says:

"I never will approve or consent to or accept the poisoned chalice offered to our lips, nor will I advise my fellow citizens to do so. If permitted to take in view a turn of events I should register and I hope every man in Georgia who can will do so, with the view of defeating the scheme for our degredation and the overthrow of republican government."

FOREIGN NEWS.

LONDON, July 16.—Minister Adams, with other members of the diplomatic corps, waited on the Sultan to-day. A delegation of the principal Americans now in London also had an audience.

The reform bill finally passed the House.

FLORENCE, July 16.—Reports received here from Rome represent that the papa government is much alarmed by the Garibaldians. The pope has appealed to France for protection of the holy see.

PARIS, July 16.—In response to an appeal from the pope for assistance against the Garibaldian, Napoleon notified the Garibaldian leaders that the defense of Rome would be composed of the restored batteries of France.

WASHINGTON, July 17, 1867.—The cause of equal rights achieved quite a triumph in the Senate to-day. A bill was passed by a large majority, giving colored men the right to hold office in the District of Columbia. No time was lost in transmitting it to the house, where, an amendment being offered, the bill was immediately appropriately referred.

The universal indignation which is telegraphed you yesterday was felt toward the President for his message of Monday, wherein he assumed the liability of the federal government for the debts of rebel States whose bogus governments were ignored by Congress, found expression to-day. The resolution of censure which I mentioned yesterday was offered and passed in the house to day by a very large majority. The language of the resolution is very bitter toward the President and the doctrine of his message. He is denounced as an ally of rebels, etc.

His friends are now becoming alarmed. The impeachment movement is gaining votes.—[N. O. Republican.

SENATE.

Washington, July 17.—Mr. Wilson proposed the following amendment to the constitution: "No distinction shall be made by the United States, nor any State, among citizens in their civil or political rights on account of race or color." Ordered to be printed.

Bills for carrying out the convention with Venezuela were passed.

A bill providing that no person shall be disqualified by reason of race or color from holding office in the District of Columbia was passed—25 to 5. Nays—Bayard, Buckalew, Davis, Hendricks, and Johnson.

Indian affairs were then discussed until adjournment.

HOUSE.

The secretary of the navy submitted a communication showing that Farragut and Goldsborough are the only naval officers who have been fifty-five years in the service.

Mr. Butler rose to a question of privilege, and made allegations regarding prisoners, when a colloquey ensued.

Mr. Baldwin asked Mr. Eldridge whether he expected the house to take General Ould's statement against the testimony and statements of Union officers.

Mr. Eldridge believed that General Butler himself would not deny that General Ould was a highly honorable and conscientious man. (Sneering laughter on the Republican side.)

Mr. Butler remarked that before the war he thought General Ould a highly conscientious man; but when a man committed treason he was like a woman fallen from virtue—ready for any crime, and from that hour no one knew where to find him.

Mr. Eldridge reminded Mr. Butler that in making that statement he had forgotten the eminent men who had gone into rebellion. Hancock, Adams, and Washington, (hisses) every one of them had been called a rebel, and every one of them had been a rebel (continued hisses) until rebellion became a success.

The following was introduced and passed, under suspension of the rules, by a strict party vote:

Resolved, That the doctrine avowed by the President, that the abrogation of the rebel States binds the nation to pay their debts incurred prior to the rebellion, is at war with the principles of international law, a stab at the national credit, abhorrent to every sentiment of loyalty, and pleasing only to traitors and their aiders and sympathizers, by whose agency alone the governments of said States were overthrown.

The Senate bill conferring on negroes the right of holding office was amended to include the right to serve on juries, and referred to the judiciary committee.

A resolution requesting the President to issue a proclamation directing all proper officers to prevent the invasion of Mexico, was referred to the committee on foreign affairs.

LOCAL.

HEBREW EDUCATION SOCIETY.—This Association had a large and enthusiastic meeting the other evening at the Deutsche company hall, on Bienville street, in this city. The Rev. Henry S. Jacobs, President, stated that the society had purchased lots on Calliope, near St. Charles, for $10,000, on which one-third was paid, cash, and had plans and specifications for a large and commodious school-house at a cost of $25,000

DEATH OF DR JONES IN PRISON.—Dr Jones, one of the three brothers charged with the killing of Cyrus W. Stauffer at Natchitoches, died yesterday morning of cholera in the military portion of the parish prison, where he was confined. Assistant Surgeon Heber Smith, United States army, made application to Lieut. Col. McGonnigle for the interment of the corpse; C. I. McG. referred the matter to Mayor Heath, and the mayor sent to the friends of the deceased to know what disposition they desired to make of the body. The burial, owing to the cause of death, will take place at once.

The committee on health reported that since Sunday morning, two cases of yellow fever had occurred in Jefferson City, (one of them fatal,) one in the Fourth District, (now under treatment,) one in the Second District, (convalescent,) and two cases at the Barracks, (one of them fatal.) Also, one fatal case of cholera in the First District, three now under treatment in the Second District, and one in the Third District, nearly all of which had proved fatal.

Mississippi Items.

CROPS.—The prospects for corn are favorable. Some fields will make nothing owing to poverty of soil or want of work at proper time; but as a general thing the crop will be a good one for this country. Cotton is not doing so well, the abundant rains interfering with the cultivation, and causing grass to grow rapidly.

YAZOO CITY.—Rev L. Baker, of Vicksburg, held a protracted meeting at this place some time ago, resulting in forty-one additions to the church.

EDWARDS DEPOT.—Brother Dimes, a local preacher of Vicksburg, recently organized a new society near this place, on the V. & M. R. R., between Vicksburg and Jackson. They have over one hundred members, and expect many more to join. A new circuit will soon be formed in that vicinity.

JACKSON.—A few weeks ago, Rev. M. Proctor organized a new society of over a hundred members, in the country north of Jackson.

LYNCH.—Not the Judge, but Rev. James, recently appointed by Bishop Simpson Presiding Elder of south Mississippi district, has arrived, and will at once enter on his work. There is much land yet to be possessed in that "Pine Woods" end of the State. D.

FROM MONROE TO SHREVEPORT—TRENTON—POOR ROADS—SPLENDID FOREST TREES—VIENNA—ARCADIAN POVERTY.

Tuesday between 4 and 5 o'clock in the morning, the lumbering hack drove up, to take me on the way to Shreveport. The day was fine but the roads were in a very rough condition. Only 30 miles were made, through a wild pine woods country. Trenton our first stopping place, is on the Ouachita river, and is quite an important cotton port. Several new houses give it a look of enterprise. Dinner was prepared for us at a log cabin hotel where we very amiably paid the dollar charged for our fried pork, onions and coffee. Considerable corn and cotton is up and doing well along the route, occasionally a field of oats and barley was seen, the wood was pine, ash, oak, and some walnut. The pine is magnificent, tall straight kings of the forest, whose "lofty tops seem close against the sky." Buck eye bushes with their clusters of brilliant red berries fringed the road. I saw no Spanish moss after leaving the river. Much of our road was of the corduroy kind, some of it was very rocky, all was rough and hilly, while the neglect of repairs, sometimes made long detours through the woods necessary. Vienna, a quiet little village in the northern part of Jackson Parish, was our lodging place. It is favored with a small church, used by different denominations, and an Academy. The hotel was graced by a piano and some pretty children. Arcadia our next dining place, gave us for our dollar the usual fried pork varied with clabber and hard corn dodger. Two old churches were near by, and a few poor dwellings. Our landlord said court had just closed in Sparta, leaving much business undone, because the only family there could get no provisions to feed the hungry. This parish of Bienville must be rather a poor place, we were told that one white and one colored convict had been sent to the Penitentiary, with sad regrets that now there was but one law for both.

MINDEN—BUSINESS PLACE—VOTE WITH THE NORTH—DIRTY TAVERN—HIGH WATER.

The second night brought me to Minden, a pretty and busy village in Claiborne Parish, on its outskirts are several fine dwellings. In the centre of the place is a beautiful grove of large shade trees, on either side of which are dwellings and stores, some quite new. There is a pretty frame Methodist and a Baptist church, and a large flourishing female academy with a hundred pupils I was told the Sabbath was observed and the churches well attended. I made the acquaintance and enjoyed the hospitality here, of a South methodist local preacher, who was long a member of Conference. Quite a trade exists with southern Arkansas. Homer is only 30 miles north, and is quite a considerable place, yet there is no public conveyance between these towns. Blackburns's paper has quite a circulation here, I found some taken by colored men. The only school for colored children was kept by an old Baptist preacher, who had 30 scholars at $1 each per month. There is a tolerably able newspaper published here, moderate in tone. The registrars had not yet arrived, and no political move had been made. I asked an old colored preacher how they meant to vote, he replied, "we will wait for the North to tell us how" we were driven to the door of a dilapidated tavern, the only one in Minden, in a heavy storm, there was no fire, a miserable table and dirty room. These hotels, all have their toilet arrangements on the front gallery, one tin basin and towel doing duty for everybody. Next day we had a log cabin breakfast, pork and corn-bread, a few miles on the road. We now descend towards Red river and have indications of overflow. The first Bayou we crossed was so deep, that the water nearly reached the seats; near the lake for nearly a mile the road was under water and the stage was conveyed about one and a half miles on a flat boat. Much discouragement was felt by the people on account of heavy rains having been falling for several days, drowning out much of the young cotton and corn.

RED RIVER—BUSY PLANTERS—SHREVEPORT—HIGH PRICES—LAWLESSNESS.

We struck Red river about six miles below the famous raft. The steamboats avoid the obstruction and pass through lakes and Bayous striking the river again above, and passing far up into Arkansas. The country through Bossier is very poor until we enter the river bottoms, when fine plantations and good houses appear. Here again, we observe the beautiful spanish moss draping the trees, imparting to the scene a mournful grandeur. At this point Red river is narrow, but just now very full, causing some fear of last years' overflow being repeated. The planters were very busy, every field having its crowd of laborers, with too often, that un-american sight of women at the plow, sad relic of barbarism, may it speedily disappear. The approach to Shreveport from above is very fine, with its blocks of great stores, warehouses, and imposing public buildings, as the Court House, Churches Hotels. On landing much of the romance disappears, we are reminded of Vicksburg, with its hills, mud, ruins and disorder. Stopping at the Brooks House I was shown to a room with three beds, and then to a table covered with dishes in abundance, but no milk, no eggs, nor a chicken and this with a charge of four dollars a day. The only other hotel here is the better in respect to the table and attention. Shreveport will always be a grand business place. Trade from Texas and Arkansas must flow in there as well as from the river parishes. Lands and rents are very high, everything is costly, except perhaps human life and virtue. Religion has very little power, shooting, drinking, gambling, prevail unchecked. It is said the civil and military officers often take the lead in them.

BROTHER SMALL'S WORK - SHREVEPORT QUARTERLY CONFERENRE—GOOD FREEDMANS BUREAU AGENT—NO PROTECTION.

At Shreveport I found our people had become greatly discouraged, not having had a preacher last year. Some were attending the south church. The organization made by brother Small a year ago was firm, and came together gladly. Brother Small did a good work here, all was confusion after the war, he gathered the people and appointed church officers. As at Monroe, the M. E. South preacher followed, and in the absence of our preacher, called them into his fold. As times were politically and pecuniary, they could do no better than accept the temporary shelter, but now opportunity serves and they joyfully use their liberty.

The Quarterly Conference was held Saturday evening at the house of brother Boyd. Eight members were present, two were granted local preachers license, and three exhorters. Five trustees were elected, able men, having property. These brethren passed a good examination and bid fair to improve. Several of them own houses, others are trying to buy land, good wages are paid, and they are saving their money. I am sorry to say there is an indisposition to sell land to colored people. Saturday night I preached in a school house kindly offered to us, so long as we would want it, by General Flood of the Freedman's Bureau. We are indebted to him for many kindnesses. He has shown himself a true friend to the colored people and loyal to his country, amid enemies and great difficulties, even the government officers here do not support him and do nothing to prevent outrages upon the Freedmen, so strong is the disloyal influence in the place. There are many excellent loyal citizens here in business, and a republican 150 strong. No public movement Club however has been made, and will not be until adequate protection is assured.

SABBATH SERVICES—ECCLESIASTICAL LIBERTY—GOOD SCHOOLS—SHREVEPORT CHURCHES.

On Sunday the people came in a body from the South church, our sunrise meeting was delightful, the first held here, the precious methodist hymns sounded sweetly in the early morning and astonished the citizens. At 9 o'clock the Sunday school was organized with 60 scholars and 5 teachers 3 colored and 2 white. This school bids fair to prosper. Brother Boyd is the superintendent. At 11 o'clock there was preaching, a crowded house. At 3 o'clock love feast, a very happy time, one sister said, "not long since I had to take my hoe Sunday and go to the field, now I can go to the house of God." All rejoiced at the glorious liberty God had given them, ecclesiastical as well as political, here was none to make them afraid, all were friends. At night a local brother preached. It was a good day. We have many excellent members, and a valuable official board. The circuit has 140 members, a good day school is in operation with 26 children, and Sunday school with sixty. Besides our organization the colored people have two churches, a Baptist and an African Bethel, both neat buildings. The whites have several good churches, Episcopalian, Baptist, Roman Catholic and South Methodist. The latter is rather a dilapidated building, and efforts are being made to repair it. The preacher is said to have recently published a discourse, proving slavery to be the normal condition of the negro race, yet he has hoped to retain these people in his church and under his ministry. Shall we surmise for what purpose? I hear that he was much excited over the stampede made by them at our late quarterly meeting, and doubtless our church is doomed to some persecution. The material of which it is composed however is good, having been tried in the fire. They are in earnest to build and will be a prosperous church. In all our Southern work there is not a more urgent call for aid to build, than comes from this place.

REGISTRATION—VOTE FOR LINCOLN—MARRIAGE FEES—STEAMBOAT DELAYS.

The Registrars are busy here, and have excellent quarters in the Court House. Their Chairman is Capt. Miller one of our Advocate publishers, and they get through much business daily. It was here that the old colored man after getting his papers, endeavored to get from the Registrars some information how he should vote and failing said, on leaving the room "well I mean to vote for Abe Lincoln any how." Great efforts are made to avoid the inevitable Republican rule. Parties are going through the country, circulating reports detrimental to the "Yankees" informing the laborers that the U. S. Government will tax them $5 to $10 a head, if they register, put them in the army send them to Cuba, etc. I was sorry to find here as at Alexandria hindrances to the marriage of Freedmen. The clerk makes a charge of $5 and on visiting him to have the fee lessened, I not only met ill success but rudeness. Surely some legislation is needed to meet such cases. In leaving Shreveport I experienced some of the glorious uncertainty of steamboat traveling, going on board at the hour advertised for starting and not getting off until nearly 24 hours after, when we sped pleasantly down the river.

ITINERANT.

Intelligence from our Mission Rooms.

AFRICA.—Bishop Roberts writes: "Peace, if not satisfactory prosperity prevails throughout the conference. The brethren generally are laboring assiduously at their posts, looking to the great Head of the Church to bless their labors. God has been pouring out the Spirit at Millsburg, recently which has resulted in the addition of eighteen or twenty to the Church on probation."

EMIGRATION.—Our colored friends in America are leaving for Liberia in larger numbers than for many years past.

BUENOS AYRES.—We have now another young man in our midst who was born again in our mission in Buenos Ayres. He was connected with the Sabbath-school of the mission, and was engaged in other labors for the promotion of the cause of Christ among the people. His object in coming to these northern states, is to secure through our colleges and theological institutions a more complete armor, on the right hand and on the left, for the successful prosecution of the work of God in South America. Will not the friends of missions in all their supplications at the throne of the heavenly grace, remember the schools of the prophets? for to a very large extent these are to furnish the soldiers for Christ, by whom we hope to win the nations to him.

THE ORPHAN ASYLUM, NEW ORLEANS.—Respecting this asylum Dr. Newman writes: "The day brightens with us. The city council voted me this week three thousand dollars for our asylum. Three months ago they would have voted that sum to have me leave. But the Lord is changing the hearts of men. Governor Flanders, the successor of Governor Wells, is a liberally educated man, and our warm friend."

LIBERIA.—Our last letters from this mission are dated May 3. Under this date Rev. Phillip Gross, who is presiding elder of Montserrado District, writes: "The second quarterly meeting was held at my station; the Lord was with us, and the meeting was protracted over a week. Twenty-four souls were converted, ten of whom were natives. When I left the meeting there were sixteen still seeking religion. Since then I have learned from Brother Fuller that many have been converted and joined the Church."

OUR GERMAN MISSIONS.—Beginning in 1836, they have reached a state in their progress which challenges the admiration of the entire Church. Look at some of the features of this work in America:

Presiding elders' district, 17; pastoral charges and circuits, 260; self-sustaining charges, 100; missionary charges and circuits, 160; total, 260. Amount of missionary money appropriated to them, $47,000; amount raised among themselves and sent to the missionary treasury, $16 000; amount actually expended upon the German missions, $31 000. All this German work forms four annual conferences. Value of churches and parsonages in the United States, $1,000,000; German Colleges, 2; German orphan asylums, 2; one German weekly paper; one German sunday-school paper circulating 32,000 copies. In addition to these papers a series of books embracing hymn-book, discipline, biographies, histories, catechisms, etc. with 106 tracts, 50 tracts for children, and 60 hand-bill tracts. Amount given per member to the benevolent movements of the Church last year, $6 55/8.

ONE HALF MILLION.—A matter that may well awaken some concern. A pastor who has just entered upon his new field writes: "We have full one half million of money in the Church and congregation, and only thirty-one dollars was paid for the cause of missions last year; now I am bound, under God, and with your co-operation, to more than treble it this year. I intend to introduce the Missionary Advocate into each family, and I will see that a good use is made of them."

"JESUS WILL GO WITH ME."—A little girl four years old grew ill. One day her father was sitting beside her little bed, and she turned to him with the question:

"Papa, does the doctor think I shall die?"

Her father with a very sad heart told his little daughter the truth. Then her face grew very sad, and she mused awhile on the dark graves she had sometimes looked down into, where the people were buried.

"Papa," said she, tearfully, "the grave looks very dark. O, it is very dark, indeed. Papa, won't you go down with me into it?"

The strong arm she had been accustomed to lean on seemed to her a safe guard in every hour of dread and danger.

With a bursting heart, her father told her he could not go with her till the Lord called.

"Papa, won't you let ma go with me?

If she could nestle close in that loving bosom, and feel those loving arms around her, the grave would lose its gloom. The same answer almost broke the father's heart to give. She turned her face to the wall and wept. The dear lamb had been taught of Jesus, and she poured her heart out to him with joy-lighted face and said:

"Papa, the grave is not dark now Jesus will go with me."

WHEDON'S

Commentary On The Gospel.

VOLUME II.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

From the Episcopalian.

This volume completes the authors's exposition of the four Gospels. It is now designed to go through the whole New Testament in the same way, and possibly the Old. If even the New Testament is finished after the author's plan it will form an admirable work, and supersede the use of Barne's Notes except among his partisans. It combines all the latest researches in biblical criticism, including the studies of Lange and others of the same class, and is characterized throughout by careful, patient study, and by great clearness and vigor. The style is at the same time popular, and to no class will the volume prove a valley of dry bones, as is however, often the case with many works on the same subject.

From the Biblical Repertory and Princeton Review.

It is a matter of gratulation that so many distinguished men of all denominations are turning their attention to the preparation of commentaries on the Holy Scriptures. This volume is written in a clear, terse, and forcible style. There is very little waste of words. The explanations are concise, to the point, and evangelical and edifying. It bids fair to be a very valuable work.

From the Boston Review.

We hail all such evangelical efforts to simplify, explain and diffuse the scriptures among the masses. Such unpretending, yet really very valuable volumes are our best defense against the skepticism and irreligion of the age, and that scholarly, insinuating, and undermining influence that we import from many of the German critics. This volume reminds us strikingly, in form, method, and style, of Barne's Notes, and will be eminently serviceable to the large communion that rejoices in the name of its distinguished author.

From the New Englander.

It seems to be prepared with much care, and exhibits the same result of scholarly investigation to a greater degree than its unpretending character would lead one to antic pate. Sabbath school teachers and others who desire brief and concise annotations on the Gospels, to aid them in their studies and instructions, will find much in this work that will be useful to them.

From the Christian Inquirer.

It is a learned book, gathering up an immense mass of illustrative facts and incidents from all sources, and arranging them in admirable order.

From the Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Whedon's Commentary on the Gospels, which recently made its appearance, is an able and timely production. The author is at present the editor of the Methodist Quarterly Review, and, as an original thinker and vigorous writer as no superior. He possesses the qualifications of a commentator and the public appreciate his volumes because they contain new ideas, fresh from the laboratory of a cultivated mind. For advanced Bible classes they are unsurpassed, and the Sabbath-schools, recognizing their importance, are introducing them into their course of study. No instructor of youth should be without them as they shed new light upon many interesting incidents in the life of Jesus.

From the Canada Christian Advocate.

We regard this second volume as fully equal to the first, and both together as being a most valuable and seasonable exposition. It will be a companion to the Bible in many houses, and will enable we trust, many, many thousands to feed upon the blessed word with increasing profit and relish. It was not uncalled, and it will not be unwelcomed or unprized. Its "popular use" will be another important instrumentality in educating the church, and raising the intelligence of religious professors to something like what the times require. It will be found a valuable assistant to teachers and members of Bible classes. We wish the author health and leisure to complete the commentary on the entire New Testament.

From the Independent.

Dr Whedon has won a marked place in religious and theological literature by the strength and polish of his pen. His commentary on Matthew and Mark attracted no small attention from its style, no less than its treatment of the topics of the text. It is less discursive and less accumulative than Lange, whose work is a thesaurus as much as an original effort. Yet it is hardly less sagacious and profound. Though brief it is not shallow. Compact with thought often strikingly expressed, it gives the essence of the Gospel in its vitals. He has expounded Luke more ably than Osterzee: though John seemed by him the crucial test of the volume, as it really is of the Bible. Many passages merit quotation, whether of the thought or the expression, for which, however, we have no room. His argument, in chapter ix, against Hume's famous doctrine on miracles, is one of the briefest and best we remember to have seen. Clergymen and Sunday school teachers will find much nourishment in this series of volumes that is intended to include the whole of the New Testament.

PEMBERTON'S

"Carbolic Acid Disinfectant."

This Powder is a compound of Carbolic Acid Copperas, etc., possessing the properties of destroying contagion, decomposing pestilential effluvia, noxious exhalations, and neutralizing strong and offensive odors; removing the effluvia from sick rooms, sewers, cesspools, sinks, privies, etc.

It far surpasses the Chlorinated Lime in its actions and effects, and is certainly the best disinfectant now in use. Thoroughly disinfecting the atmosphere, electrifying the oxygen and rendering the respirable air both healthy and pure, being entirely free from all injurious effects on the throat and lungs, which so frequently attend the use of deodorizers

City of New Orleans.

Be it known that this day, before me, Ferdinant B. Earhart, Notary in and for the city and parish of New Orleans, State of Louisiana, aforesaid, duly commissioned and sworn, and in the presence of the witnesses hereinafter undersigned.

Personally came and appeared, the parties hereinafter named and undersigned, who declared that they have resolved themselves into a body corporate, in law, under the provisions of an act of the legislature of the State of Louisiana, and entitled "An Act for the organisation of Corporations for Literary, Scientific, Religious and Charitable purposes, to wit:

To nurse the sick and bury the dead, and to make fast in love and union towards each other, so far as it lays in their power, and they have adopted the following Articles of Incorporation.

ARTICLE 1st.

The corporate name of this Association shall be the "Zion Sun Society No. 2."

ARTICLE 2nd.

The legal domicil of this Corporation shall be located in the City of New Orleans, Parish of Orleans.

ARTICLE 3rd.

The officers of this Association, shall be a President, Vice-President, Secretary and Treasurer, also a Board of managers, six in number, which said officers and board of managers shall be elected at the general meeting of the Association,

ARTICLE 4th.

Until their successors are duly elected, the ollowing persons, shall be the officers and members of the Board of managers of this Association.

Pres dent—Frederick Reels. Vice-President—William Finney. Treasurer—William Finney. Secretary..-George Smoot.

BOARD OF MANAGERS.

William Finney;	Frederick Reels,
Joseph Goulds,	Samuel Hopkins,

ARTICLE 5th.

It shall be the duty of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Board of Managers to form such By-Laws as may be necessary for the success and Government of the Association.

ARTICLE 6th.

The officers of this Association shall be elected annually and serve until their suecessors in office are duly inaugurated.

ARTICLE 7th.

The entire business affairs of this Association shall be conducted by the Board of Managers, of which the President shall be Ex-Officio the Chairman.

ARTICLE 8th.

ARTICLE 9th.

The Association shall not hold property of a value exceeding three hundred thousand dollars.

ARTICLE 10th.

This Association shall continue in legal force, and corporate existence for twenty years from the date of this act of incorporation after which time has expired the within named corporators or their legal successors, shall have power to reorganize this Association for another given period of years, but in the event that it is desired to dissolve this Association before the expiration of the time for which it is created, liquidators shall be elected to settle up the entire business of the Association, to pay all its indebtedness, sell all property and divide the proceeds if any among the regular members of good standing, whose names are on the rolls of the Association, and who are not indebted to the Association in any manner whatsoever.

This done and passed, in my office, in the city of New Orleans aforesaid, in the presence of Thomas J. Earhart, Edward H. Morrow, domicilated in this city, who hereunto signed their names, together with the parties, and me, the said Notary, on this thirtieth day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty seven.

[Signed]

MEDICAL.

DR. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,
127 CARONDELET STREET,
Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings!—happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of dis ease, Chronic, and Acute

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient, that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years, in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient, if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the Institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet Street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city ☞ Consultation free—stamps not "forgotten." [feb83]

MASON & HAMLIN,

MANUFACTURERS OF

CABINET ORGANS,

ALSO

PORTABLE ORGANS,

ADAPTED TO SECULAR AND SACRED MUSIC, FOR DRAWING-ROOMS, CHURCHES, SUNDAY AND DAY SCHOOLS, LODGES, &C., &C.

Uniting to a considerable extent the capacity of the Piano-Forte with that of the Pipe-Organ, and costing much less than either.

They occupy little space; are elegant as furniture; not liable to get out of order, and are securely boxed, so that they can be sent anywhere by ordinary freight routes, all ready for use.

Forty Styles, plain or elegant cases; one to twelve stops; Prices, $75, $90, $110, $125, $130, $1 0, $ 50, $160, $170, $200, $225, $250, $300, $435, $540, $550, $600, and upwards.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs were introduced four years since, and are a great improvement upon the melodeon, Harmonium, and other reed organs, greatly excelling them especially in the excellent quality and variety of their tones; in power and quickness of action, and capacity for expression,

THEIR SUCCESS HAS BEEN ENTIRELY BEYOND PRECEDENT,

and proves how greatly such an instrument was needed. Again and again the manufacturers have been compelled to double their manufacturing facilities, until they have been increased six-fold. From the most eminent of the musical profession, the most distinguished pianists, organists, composers, and musical directors, the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs have received an amount and degree of commendation never before bestowed upon any similar musical instrument. More than two hundred and fifty of the most eminent musicians in the country have given written testimonials to the value of the improvements contained in them, and that they excel all other instruments of this class.

FIFTY-TWO GOLD OR SILVER MEDALS, or other highest Premiums have been awarded to Mason & Hamlin for the important improvements effected by them, and for the

SUPERIORITY OF THEIR INSTRUMENTS TO ALL OTHERS.

Constantly exhibiting their instruments in competition with others, they have been awarded the highest premium in every instance, but three or four.

For churches, sunday schools, etc., the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs are the instruments long wanted, of the very best quality, abundant power, but too expensive, nor liable to get out of order.

For private use, in drawing-rooms, &c., they are not less desirable, and are finding a place in the musical families of the principal cities.

They are adapted to a wider range of music than the piano, being fitted for all sacred music and for much secular music, while their quickness of action is such that the most lively, rapid music can be played on them. Then their cost is greatly less, as well as their liability to get out of order.

BRIEF EXTRACTS FROM OPINIONS OF DISTINGUISHED MUSICIANS.

I should think they would become very much sought after as parlor instruments as well as for public performance.—Sigismond Thalberg, the world-renowned Pianist. Sure to find its way into every household of taste and refinement which can possibly afford its moderate expenses. Far superior to everything of its class I have seen.—L. M. Gottschalk, the eminent Pianist. Such pure musical tones, promptness and smoothness of action and fine variety of effect, I have not found in any other instrument of the class.—C. B. Mills, the eminent Pianist. Really so excellent that there can hardly be much difference of opinion respecting them.—William Mason, the eminent Pianist. The best instrument of its class with which I am acquainted, and worthy a place in every drawing room. Harry Sanderson, the eminent Pianist. In every respect far superior to everything I have ever seen of the kind, whether in Europe or America.—Geo. Washbourne Morgan the eminent organist, N. Y. I can only reiterate what so many in the musical profession have said, that for equality, promptness and exquisite tone, they are unequalled.—John H. Wilcox, the eminent Organist, Boston. Surpasses everything in this line I have ever seen, whether French or American.—Jon Zundel, the eminent Organist, N. Y. The best reed instruments in the world are made in the United States, and your Cabinet Organs are greatly superior, and by far the best made here.—Max Maretzer, Musical Conductor, N. Y. Far surpasses all other similar instruments, which have come under my observation.—Carl Zerhan, Musical Conductor, Boston. Exceeds in my estimation every other instrument of this general class. Thos. Hastings. I can recommend them with confidence.—Lowell Mason. As soon as the people become acquainted with the superior merits of your instruments, your only trouble will be to supply the demand.—Wm. B. Bradbury. I have never seen anything of the kind which interested me so much.—Geo. F. Root. Exciting much interest in musical circles, and already becoming the fashion. N. Y. Home Journal. The highest accomplishment of industry in this department. This is not only our opinion, but the unanimous verdict of the organists.—Boston Advertiser. A glorious instrument for the temple service, so readily secured as to be available for any congregation, and effective and beautiful as to meet the desires of the most refined and fastidious.—N. Y. Observer.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs must not be confounded with other reed instruments, from which they vary essentially, their superiority being largely derived from PATENTED IMPROVEMENTS, which cannot be employed by other makers. Among them are,

The AUTOMATIC BELLOWS SWELL, patented, a most important invention, and greatly the best swell ever devised being much more effective and easily used than any other. The variety and beauty of effect of which it is capable, can not be appreciated except from actual use. The many attempts to imitate or find a substitute for this swell, prove its value. None of them, however, approach it in excellence and simplicity.

IMPROVED SELF-ADJUSTING VALVES patented, secure much more perfect action, durability, and freedom from liability to get out of order.

WOOD'S OCTAVE COUPLET patented, in effect nearly doubles the power of the instrument in which it is used.

NOISELESS SAFETY VALVES patented, prevent the hissing sound often heard.

The IMPROVED COMBINATION REGISTER patented, gives great facility in drawing stops.

Echoes from the Past.

There are echoes sounding from realms of the past,
That memory catches with care;
And a shadow dark o'er the heart is cast,
As the tones, now in sadness recalled, are the last,
That faintly are borne on the air.

O! to those last words, how foundly we cling!
And the hurridly spoken "good-bye,"
As those voices familiar again to us bring
The look well remembered, the tears that spring—
Prompts an almost unconscious sigh.

We realize not how the false and the true
Of the past and the present blend;
Till we see in distant perspective view,
A roseate tint, or a sombre hue,
Which the years that are gone must lend.

In this picture, before us, by memory traced,
And by Fancy's pencil retouched,
How the light and the shade in contrast are placed,
How the rich warmth of color by darkness is graced,
So simply the drawing is sketched!

And thus do the sunshine and shadow play
Over every landscape of earth;
'Mid the gloom of our sorrows, a brighter day
Comes chasing with gladness the clouds away!
Bringing joy to the desolate hearth.

And now as we list for the murmured farewell,
As we live, again, in the past;
And see each loved form, as by magic spell,
The heart throbs, in quick pulsation, tell
That the treasured words are the last.

Yet we know there's a clime of cloudless skies,
And it seems not far away,
That the flowers we, here, have so learned to prize,
Transplanted, in fairer tints shall arise
To fresh bloom in its perfect day.

There's no severed ties in that "better land,"
And our jewels one by one.
Are gathered there, by Our Father's hand,
And set in His love's encircling band
We shall see— when life's work is done.

The Old Mother's Request.

Written on one of the every day instances of kindness, that so distinguished the noble life of our lamented President.

BY LU BILLINGS SPALDING.

An old mother stood at the President's door,
Her cheek was haggard, her raiment thin,
And she spoke with a shoke in her broken [voice—
And said, "Is the President in?

The old mother sat by the President's side,
And told her sad story of want and woe.
She said, "I have two boys, who fight for their [flag,
But one of two, I'm needing so."

"For I'm old, Mr. President, lame and old,"
And she stretched forth her thin, withered [hand,
And dashed a tear from her dim. dim eye,
Then patiently crossed it again.

The President looked on that bowed, old form,
And a sigh broke heavy and low;
And the care ploughed lines of his sallow cheek,
Were lit with a pitying glow.

And his great, good heart with kindness moved,
As he looked on that troubled brow,
And he said, "I will give you your eldest boy,
To care for, and comfort you now."

Then, the old mother's tears fell fast with joy,
And she crept to the President's chair,
And tenderly smoothed with her boney hand
His iron grey, bristling hair.

Softly, that old hand went up and down,
Over the President's head,

Just as his own mother once had done,
That mother that slept with the dead.

And those broken blessings breathed in tears,
Were more to his noble soul,
Than words of popular applause,
Or hoards of paltry gold.

The President sleeps his last long sleep,
His great life passed away;
But his memory will live in the nation's love,
When his heart has gone to clay.

How to Begin the Day, or Taking Time to Pray.

BY MRS. PHEBE PALMER.

'I think you could not have taken time to pray this morning.' These words were said by my own dear friend to a little girl she had taken to perform light service in the household. On the day referred to, the child had been unusually neglectful, and things connected with her little every-day duties seemed to have taken a disastrous turn, and as the hours of the day were thus wearing away amid childish petulances, my friend thus kindly reproved her youthful charge by saying, 'I think you could not have taken time to pray this morning.'

The child looked embarrassed, and then frankly acknowledged that such had been her hurry that really she had not. The next day as the hours flew swiftly and pleasantly by, unusual prosperity seemed to mark all the ways and doings of the child. The change was too manifest to escape the observation of the christian lady. Toward evening the little girl exclaimed.

'Mrs. B. have you noticed how nicely everything has gone on to-day?'

My friend had with grateful feelings noted the difference, and was glad to say, 'Yes indeed.'

'Well I took time to pray to-day,' said the child.

May not some of our readers, who long since passed the days of childhood, thus account for some unprosperous, unhappy days, when both spiritual and temporal prosperity seemed wanting?

Instead of commencing the day in a spirit of sacrifice. and devoting its first hours in devotion to God, by offering that which costs something in ease, the hour has been sacrificed to the indulgence of flesh, unmindful of the command: Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness.' That is, give the service of God, and the homage due to him as your King and Lawgiver, the prior claim on your time. Show him how much you honor Him by sacrificing the first fruits of each new day. And then after having all things adjusted, and all your redeemed powers afresh presented to the Lord of the universe, through the blood of the everlasting covanant, you may expect that all needful for life and godliness will be added.

O take time to pray! Don't let the world and the flesh get such a mastery over you that you cannot get the choicest part of the day for uninterrupted fellowship with God. You need strength with every new day, for new and untried emergencies. Your entire Christian course ought to be onward and upward Each day you may be passing a way that you have not passed heretofore. New tests of faith and new experiences in the Divine life and just what you ought to expect, are every day you will need a fresh supply of grace to glorify God in your body and spirit by serving your generation according to his will.

Never,unless physical disabilities prevent, partake of temporal food until your spiritual nature has first been refreshed with the bread of life. It is written, 'Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.' Honor the God of the Bible by making it your first book in the morning and your last book at night. If possible read at least a chapter on your bended knees each morning, pleading that the same spirit that moved holy men to write the mind of the Spirit may be given to open the Scripture to your understanding. Thus may you be enabled to begin each day in getting nearer to God, knowing more of the mind of the Spirit, and better fitted to walk worthy of him unto all pleasing.

Luther in his most pressing labors felt that the time spent in communion with God was greatly important. When most pressed with his gigantic toils from the heavenly Master he would say, 'I have so much to do that I cannot get on without three hours a day of praying.'

General Havelock would rise at four, if the hour for marching was six, rather than lose the precious privilege of communion with God before setting out.

Daniel, though a man of great business, being charged with the concerns of a mighty realm, found time to retire three times at least daily, for prayer and fellowship with the King of kings. David, amid all his diversified cares, found time to get alone with God at morning, noon and night. On another occasion he says, 'seven times a day do I praise thee.'

Sir Matthew Hale says, 'If I omit praying and reading God's word in the morning, nothing goes right all day. Alas! how many who desire to please God and live holily before him, serving their generation according to his will, make many failures by not beginning the day right, or in other words, 'taking time to pray.'—Zion's Herald.

Thus far three newsboys and a broken-down lawyer have been recruited in New York for the filibustering expedition against Mexico.

Ecce Deus. Essays on the Life and Doctrines of Jesus Christ, with Controversial Notes on "Ecce Homo.'. Boston, Roberts Brothers, 1867.

I sent you a notice some months ago of Ecce Homo The present work from the same press has excited scarcely less interest. So much alike are the style and logic of the books that many have conjectured that they are from the same pen, presenting different phases of the same subject; but no one can hold such a conjecture long, after considering the "Controversial notes" at the end of "Ecce Deus," which display a mind more acute than that which produced "Ecce Homo," and completely contradict and overthrow some of its most important positions.

One of the most able chapters is that on "Eternal Punishments," in which the author labors to prove that eternal punishment, is not only agreeable to reason and justice, but absolutely necessary from the nature of the mind.

His method of disposing of annihilationism is so fallacious as to be amusing.

"It has been suggested that annihilation would better harmonise with the divine attributes than the infliction of eternal misery. This however is a sentiment rather than an argument. God does not inflict the eternal misery; he simply points it out as the resultant of certain courses. Men often complain as if the misery were superimposed by God: it is not; it comes out of the man; not from God. God says to his moral creatures, "You are immortal; right means immortal glory; wrong means immortal misery." In this representation on the part of God there is nothing arbitrary—it simply points out the inevitable operation of cause and effect. When a parent warns a child to beware of the fire, he does so in love, not in anger; he does not inflict the pain of burning; he merely points out that such pain will be the result of disobedience. So with God; he does not inflict the punishment; the punishment is the effect of a cause. It is easy to pronounce the term annihilation, but has its meaning been fully considered? There need not be any hesitation in reverently declaring that God cannot annihilate a moral agent If he could, would he not have annihilated the devil, that vexed his beloved Son in the wilderness? So far as we can gather from the sacred writings, what has been the attitude of God in relation to the devil? He has degraded his position in the universe; he has taken away the lustrous robe with which he was originally clothed; he has caused him to wither into the most awful and repulsive deformity. On every side the most tremendous pressure has been brought to bear upon him; but no force can touch the life; diabolism is nothing but abused divinity, and can God be annihilated? All moral creatures are such by virtue of a divine element in their nature But cannot God withdraw this element? Let us pause. What would be made of it after he had withdrawn it? Could he absorb the poisoned element which for a life time has been given up to the devil?"—p. 219

Was there ever such nonsense penned by such a writer? A part of God's nature can be put into a creature, and there sin and become a devil—but it can neither be abstracted nor annihilated! Divinity can be diabolized but not extinguished ! ! Is this nonsense or is it blasphemy?

The chapters on the "Relation of the Cross to the Law and to Practical Morals" are admirable. T.

Siege of Vicksburg—The "Flying Dutchman"—A run for Life—Cure for Rheumatism—A Fatal Charge—The Sound of Musketry—Voices hushed in Death.

We were now closing in upon Vicksburg. On May 18th, between 3 and 4 P. M., the first gun was fired. Then came the hurry and bustle of getting ready for a fight. The troops were ordered to the front, and the wagon trains sent to the rear. Arrangements were made for a supply of water, hospital tents were erected, but saddest and most sickening of all were the ambulances moving forward to receive the wounded.

Night found us once more on the eve of an expected battle. But we were too tired with marching to think much of the morrow. At dawn we were surprised to find the enemy had contracted his line of defense, leaving the immediate front, the ground for which we had contended in the winter, in our possession. The "boys" were not slow in making an "advance" upon the enemy's camp, capturing, thereby, corn-meal, etc., which made a delightful repast for men who had eaten nothing but mulberries for supper. During the morning we moved slowly around to the right, and at noon came in full view of the grand old Father of Waters, which we hailed with delight as flowing from "God's country." Cautiously extending our lines and coming into the bottom land, we felt comparatively secure, having a range of hills between us and the enemy; but suddenly there came such a whistling and shrieking of the messengers of death over our heads as caused us great surprise, to say the least. What could it mean?

As to myself I was walking leisurely along, not dreaming of present danger, and had just arrived opposite a depression in the hills, when the firing commenced. I was dumbfounded at hearing the balls around me and over my head, but a glance toward the hills explained all. There was the "Flying Dutchman," as he was called on top of the hills, driving his artillery forward with the speed of Jehu in order to get it in position nearer the river. He accomplished the feat without a scratch, and immediately opened a furious fire upon the enemy, seemingly determined to give him as good as he had received himself. Meanwhile our regiment was ordered to occupy some rifle pits left vacant by the rebels. Ascending the hill, we passed near the Dutchman's battery over a level space in plain view of our foes, and disappeared as soon as possible into the rifle pits. The shells from the rebel guns fell around us uncomfortably near, and one I remember exploded directly over my head, making a vivid impression of its capacity for mischief. I had no particular business there, and was meditating on the expediency of retreating,when the ground around the pit was literally plowed with grape and canister. I concluded to bear the ills I had rather than fly to others that might be worse; fully convinced that rifle pits are not the safest of places when near a battery commanded by a furious, "Flying Dutchman."

The most we could now do was to hold our own. The taking of Vicksburg had become simply a "question of time," but that "time" seemed to stretch out indefinitely toward the "dog days." Accordingly by the 22d of May, our generals, especially the impetuous Sherman, were anxious to make one grand assault and capture the place without further delay. In the morning there was a fog, but the sun soon drove it away, and at noon it was quite hot. The position we were to attack lay considerably to the east, and in marching over the steep hills many became much heated and some were sunstruck,though,strangely enough, none of the cases resulted fatally.

After marching down a ravine we were halted and given to understand we would soon be under fire. While resting,the bullets began to whistle in front of us, striking trees and giving fair warning that there was danger ahead. After resting awhile, an officer of high rank took our company commanders aside to instruct them where they should lead their men. They returned to us with sober faces, and with their fingers marked upon the ground the course we were to take. All things being in readiness, the command "forward, march," was given. Moving down the ravine we suddenly emerged from the dense woods to an open plane, in full view of the enemy on the hill, directly in our front.

"Now, boys," said an officer, who had imbibed somewhat of the ardent, "run for your lives." The command would have been of doubtful import, had he not shown by his own movements that he meant for us to go forward. "Moving forward" toward huge cannons belching forth fire and smoke, and among bullets pattering the ground like large raindrops falling on a dusty road, and moving, too, as fast as human legs could carry us,did not seem much like running for life. Yet it was true, nevertheless, and the fastest runner was most likely to get through safely.

"But I can't run," said a rheumatic soldier, who had lain aside his crutches on that morning in order to enjoy the "fun."

"Very well, then," was the provoking reply of the officer, "walk, then; take your time for it!"

But among all that multitude I think there was not one who did not make "good time."

After running some distance we found a temporary shelter in a slight turn of the hill to our left. Here a small squad rested for some time after the regiment had passed on. But it was by no means a safe retreat, and besides duty compelled us forward. In a few moments we were again facing the music, but being few in number, the rebels did not trouble us much with their big guns. Not knowing where the regiment had gone, and seeing some soldiers in advance behind a hill,we shaped our course in that direction. We were emphatically on the broad road to destruction, and would soon have reached that destination; but hearing a voice to the left, "Come this way," we turned our heads and our steps in that direction. Had we persisted in our course, we could have found no shelter in less than a quarter of a mile. The soldiers we had seen had taken their position the night previous. Turning up the ravine which came into the one we had been in at a right angle, we soon came to our regiment, which was now in a safe place.

The rheumatic soldier was there, having made the distance at a two-forty pace,keeping well up with the regiment. It was said he never used his crutches afterwards, and was not again troubled with rheumatism. But we were not yet in position to do execution. We had to cross a hill and pass to the foot of the one on which were the enemy's fortifications, before we could make the contemplated charge. Over the hill we went, meeting a shower of bullets; then down again, rolling and tumbling in great confusion. It is a difficult feat to run down hill gracefully and rapidly, without falling. Alas! how many fell to rise no more, while others stumbled and fell only to rise and at it again. It might be expected that those who escaped death and found shelter at the foot of the hill were in poor condition for making a charge. But it was made, and a fatal one it was.

It was the duty assigned to that part of the army to which we belonged, to capture a fort which had proved especially troublesome to our advance. But its capture was an almost impossibility. Even those who reached it, and but few did, could scarcely have gone into it had there been no opposition.

While the charge was being made I had an opportunity of listening to the awful grandeur of a heavy musketry fire as it resounded among the hills. First came the rattling sound I had heard before; then the roar as of cannon, except that it was continuous. I knew the charge was fearful from the whiz of bullets passing over my head and striking the trees on the other side of the ravine till scarcely a twig was left untouched; but the continuous roar that burst upon us was awful beyond anything I had ever imagined.

Commingled with it was the sound of human voices. At first there was cheering by our soldiers as they passed on to the conflict. Then the roar of the musketry eclipsed for a time all other sounds; but when it became less violent, I could hear above the din of the battle other voices and other soldiers cheering, or rather yelling, and then I knew the day was lost. Ah, how many voices were suddenly hushed forever! how many loved ones at home were, in that short hour, bereaved, that the futility of attacking impregnable fortifications might be once more impressed upon the minds of our generals.

Drink, But Remember.

If you think it is your duty to drink intoxicating liquor, by all means do so On no account violate your conscientious convictions,but while you raise the cup to your lips,remember that this draught represents the death of some starved brother; for the food of at least 6,000,000 persons is yearly grasped by the maltster and the distiller, and its nourishment destroyed.

Remember that so long as you are in health, these liquors are unnecessary; 2,000 medical men have asserted it, and hundreds of thousands of teetotalers have proved it.

Remember that most persons who act as you do, injure their health and injure their lives by so doing.

Remember that, not drunkenness alone, but drinking, fills our jails, our penitentiaries, our poor-houses, and our lunatic asylums; employs our coroners and our hangmen; and works mischief incalculable on all ranks and both sexes, of which no human institution takes cognizance.

Remember that drinking retards education,industry,sanitay reform,and every branch of political and social improvement.

Remember that multitudes yearly die a drunkard's death, and go to meet a drunkard's doom.

Remember that every year multitudes fall from your "moderate" ranks, to recruit the wasted army of drunkards.

Remember that every drunkard once tried to follow the example you set; and, on trial, fell from his slippery ground nto the whirlpool of intemperance.

Remember that if you sanction the custom, you are answerable for its fruits.

Remember that the weak and tempted ones look to you; and that, under God, it depends on you whether they be drunkards or sober men.

Remember that "to him who knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin"; and that there is a woe for that man through whom offence cometh to the little ones.

Remember that you cannot be neutral, and there will be a day when you will be unable to plead ignorance.

Remember that all this weight of responsibility rests with you, as you raise that cup, if you think it right; but we envy not your conscience.—London Temperance Star.

Original Letter of John Wesley.

The Centenary of American Methodism has brought to light many interesting facts in the early history of our Zion, and many valuable relics of bygone years. Among the latter is an original letter of Rev. John Wesley, written in 1787 to Miss Betsy Padbury, of Whittleberry, England. The Wesleyans at that place were making an effort to build a chapel, and the parish minister headed a mob and would tear down at night what was put up in the day-time. Miss Padbury wrote Mr. Wesley asking his advice in the matter and the following is his reply:

LONDON, October 29th, 1787.

MY DEAR BETSY: I love to see anything that comes from you, although it be a melancholy subject. Nothing can be done on the Court of King's Bench till the latter end of next week at the soonest, and till then, I am trying all milder means which may possibly avail. if nothing can be done this way, we can but fight at sharps then. But prayer and fasting are of excellent use, for if God be for us who can be against us? Probably I shall visit you this winter, I always am my dear Betsy,

Yours most affectionately,

J. WESLEY.

This letter was given by the original receiver to her niece, Mrs. Anne Partridge, now over eighty years old, whose father was one of Mr. Wesley's local preachers. Mother Partridge now lives in Union, Erie county, Pennsylvania, happy in the enjoyment of the Christian's faith and hope, and strong in the love of Wesleyan Methodism.

Though blest with but little of earthly treasures, she has made a Centenary offering of great value by donating this letter to Allegheny College. It will hereafter form an item of no small interest among the many attractions of its library and cabinets.

Meadville, Pa., April 27th 1867.

The Czar For Ireland.

Among the most remarkable of all the diplomatic notes of the current year, is the one that has been recently addressed by the Czar of all the Russias to his ambassadors to the United States, France, and England, relative to the unfortunate state of affairs existing in Ireland, and suggesting a joint inquiry into.those affairs by Russia, France, and the United States, in conjunction with Great Britain. That the ruler of Muscovy, the lord of anywhere from sixt to seventy-five millions of people, ninety-nine hundredth of whom are little better then barbarians, should thus step forward to teach enlightened England a lesson in civilization and humanity, is a little more than wonderful. It is true that western Russia has made great advances towards refinement within the last quarter of a century; but it may be fairly believed that her constantly increasing power and the continually strengthening temptation to make that power felt, have full as much to do with this intervention as the pitch of Russia's civilization. England may be astounded at this new attitude of Alexander III. It was all well enough to consent with courtesy to follow Russia's lead in negotiations, in favor of the Cretans, with the grand Turk; but the dignity of John Bull must be wofully affronted by this direct declaration of Russia that outside parties must help Great Britain to govern Ireland decently, as she has for so long a time declined to do. The treatment meted out to the "sick man of Europe" was eminently proper. But a similar prescription for sturdy John Bull comes a little unexpected.—N. O. Crescent.

IMPORTANT LETTER.

BEREA, Ohio, July 15, 1867

DEAR BROTHER NEWMAN:—I have bought the Darby plantation of seventeen hundred acres, in St. Mary's Parish, La., five miles above Franklin on the Teche, for $20,000. I have deposited the money in bank and sent my son to perfect the title. There is a fine site of thirty or forty acres on the banks of the river, comprising some fifteen or twenty buildings, which the brethren of the Mississippi Mission Conference can occupy for religious education as soon as they choose, provided, no distinction is made on account of sex or color. When a corporate board is organized by said conference, I will deed the above named site, and secure to said corporation enough educational capital to make $20,000 worth. I also purpose to spend one half of my time in the future on said plantation, in trying to start an institution that may be a blessing to the people.

If the above facts can be of any use to the public, put them in you paper; if not, put them in the basket.

JOHN BALDWIN.

The above letter speaks for itself God bless the noble giver! The whole Church will rejoice in this great benefaction. Our Conference will take formal and suitable action in the matter at its next session.—ED.

The Two Types of Humanity

Man is peculiar in his organization In him the material and the spiritual, the earthly and the heavenly, the vile and the good are strangely blended But as of two diseases implanted in the same system, one will obtain the mastery, and as in the struggle of opposing principles, one class will triumph at the expense of another, so the whole human family may be divided into two classes according as the material and earthly, or the spiritual and heavenly assume the habitual control of their action. These two classes, between whom the line of demarkation is clearly and broadly drawn, are each fully symbolized in their distinctive character and final tendencies by two great representative types. As Sinai dark, frowning, lightning scathed and thunder-rocked, was the standing symbol of the law, while Zion in her milder loveliness, typified the church; as Moses, with a veil upon his face, represented the privileges of the former dispensation, while the christian, standing with open face, represents the full privileges of the latter dispensation; as Hagar, the bond woman, answers to the covenant that gendereth to bondage, while Sarah, the free woman, answers to the Jerusalem above, which is free and is the mother of us all, so the first man, Adam, is the recognized type of those that are earthly, sensual, mortal, while the second man the Lord from heaven, is the permanent type of quickened, purified, obedient, redeemed humanity.

By the first of these representative characters was sin, with all its terrible results, introduced into our earth Back to this saddest era of our world may be traced the triumph of fleshly appetites over spiritual affections; the subjection of man's higher to his baser nature, and the perversion of noble endowments to minister to sordid interests. As we look over the faded glory which marks the desert of this world, we remember that instead of the thorn we might have had the bloom of Eden's rose; instead of arid wastes, the perennial verdure that lined its crystal streams; instead of the dwarfed shrub or unsightly tree, the golden fruits and shaded retreats of its blissful groves. But for sin the primeval garden would have expanded till it covered the earth and remained till now, fresh as in the morning of its glory. Sin only has blighted the scene. But more terrible than the curse which fell upon the ground, is that which has fallen upon the human form. Had he not sinned Adam would be living still, and all his race would be rejoicing in a life that feared no death. But he, our first great head transgressed, he took of the forbidden fruit and by consequence became sensual and mortal and has turned to dust. The first man with his sin, his prevarication, his attempt to cast blame upon his partner, condemned to toil and sentenced to death, is the representative of humanity in its lower aspects, and we, born in his image, are all heirs with him of sin and woe and death.

But a new representative has appeared for humanity. Though fallen, man is capable of a nobler destiny; he may be rescued from his dark fate, and our second Adam has interposed to deliver us from the woes brought upon us by he first. He is the restorer of humanity, and is the complete contrast to the first representative type of man. The first man was of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven. The first was natural, the second is spiritual. The first introduced sin, the second has brought in everlasting righteousness. The one became corrupt, following after "the wisdom which is from beneath," and impressing his own character upon all his race, the other remained "holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners" and made provision for the sanctity of all believers. The first brought in death, the second the resurrection. The first stands at the head of a wicked and suffering world, the second at the head of a redeemed and rejoicing world. The first is an example copied by all subsequent transgressors, the second is a finished model for regenerate redeemed humanity.

To Christ then we turn as our great head and perfect example. In his complete self control we have a pattern of self-government. In his perfect obedience to law, we have the condemnation of all lawlessness and an example of cheerful obedience. In his disinterested devotion to the good of others, we have clearly traced the 'more excellent way,' in which we should always walk In his constant reference to great principles, great ideas, great purposes; in his nobly directed activities, in the complete absence of selfish ends, we have illustrated the grand aims of life, a constant regard to which so ennobles man In his endurance and final triumph we have the sure guarantee that virtue shall crown its votaries with unfading laurels, that every barrier shall give way before the advancing christian, that all enemies shall be subdued, and even death itself must die.

Then let us copy our divine exemplar, and though we yet bear many of the marks of the first Adam, though earthy even in our best moods, though mortal and tending to the grave, yet may we remember that "as in Adam all die even so in Christ shall all be made alive.' We look to the day "when this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality," and then, when rising in exultant deliverance over all the evils of the fall, we shall join the general shout, "Death is swallowed up in victory."

A NEW CHURCH.—An organization embracing nineteen members was formed on last Sabbath, in the Fourth city District, at the corner of Jackson and Fulton streets, with Rev. A. C. McDonald pastor in charge. A Sabbath school of about fifty members had been organized three weeks previously. The new society anticipate a rapid increase of members, and propose to take steps immediately either to purchase a church or buy lots and build. We wish them great success.

"Honor to the Dead."

"The Mass for the repose of the soul of "Maximilian 1st Emperor of Mexico— "Imposing and affecting ceremony— "General Sheridan refused to assist."

The first words of the caption, are the heading of a long article in the Times of the 20th, giving a minute description of the ceremonies of the 19th at St. Louis Cathedral in honor of the death of the Arch-Duke Maximilian. As a suggestive indication of the sympathy existing between the partisans of despotism in the old world and those of the aristocratic slave-holders' rebellion in this land, we present to our readers the salient points of these ceremonies as noticed by the Times. The mourning powers were represented by "the flags of Austria, Mexico, France, Belgium and Spain, drooped sorrowfully around the bier."

Just scan that group reader, and reflect what ideas and principles are represented by the rulers of that group of mourning governments. The consuls of these powers are among the mourners. Next come the "foreign residents, Austrians, French, Spanish and Germans," so says the Times. Next come "Imperialist officers in full uniform." Next "the bronzed and battle-scarred heroes of the lost cause in picturesque regimentals" These are the mourners. "Austria, France, Belgium and Spain,' epresented by their flags and their "consuls in uniforms" foreigners from these countries, "Imperialist officers,' and "heroes of the lost cause"

Now note the reverse! "Strange to say no United States uniform was present." General Sheridan was invited to assist at the ceremony, but declined attending on the ground that he was altogether opposed to Maximilian."

The Times has taken the pains to draw this contrast, to note, not only those present, but the absent. In its peculiar style, adopted since the Military Bill became a law, forgotten however for a few days after the publication of Attorney General Stanberry's late opinion, but suddenly resumed a few days since, which might be termed, the style oppressive, it suppresses any comments that may have been struggling for utterance. We presume its emotions, faintly shadowed forth in that softly whispered 'strange to say," are unutterable—just now. We make none either. The picture drawn by the Times, of the mourners, and those who refused to mourn, is its own comment. France, Belgium, Austria and Spain, "Imperialists," and "heroes of the lost cause" on one side, and on the other, General Sheridan, the army and navy of the United States, and the loyal people of New Orleans.

We have only to remark one incident made prominent by the Times. It is he manifestation again on the part of General Sheridan, of that unerring intuition and penetrating sagacity, which whether their exercise be the selection of men, the execution of a military movement, the transaction of affairs of state, or the declining or accepting of overtures, political, social or otherwise hat like this have a political bearing, have always hitherto led him to take the right step at the right time.

Also the same feature in his character, that in his brilliant military career gave that dash and elan to all his movements which made him irresistible to the foe, and the idol of his army, gives in civic affairs a tone and an edge to his public papers, that cut right down to the marrow, and discern the substance from the shadow, the pretense from the reality, the simulated from the true motive, and the "bad man" from the honest one. The real reason why he does or does not do a thing, is always given with a plainness of speech, that goes right to the understanding of the people, and makes the recipient of his censure decidedly uncomfortable.

If we have not misread history, it is in qualities like these, that the statesmanship of the highest order consists. In this day of rhetorical essayists inflated humbugs, blustering braggadocios, plotting Catalines, and mercenary calculators, who hold for sale to the highest bidder, the most vital interests of the country, we predict for the man who possesses these qualities and will exercise them, the highest eminence, and the most enviable renown. The people of the republic thank General Sheridan for his pointed and fitting rebuke to the Imperialist conspirators.

DEDICATION.

The Poet Street Methodist Episcopal Church was dedicated to the worship of Almighty God last Sabbath afternoon at 3 o'clock. The name of this appointment in the conference minutes is Greatman street, but a change of the location is the reason for the change in the name. The edifice was purchased from the German Presbyterians at a cost of $4000. It is of wood, clean and neat, eligibly located, and is capable of accommodating from three hundred to four hundred persons. In the rear of the building, there is sufficient room for an addition to the church, or for a parsonage. The neighborhood is good, thickly settled, and the Dauphine street cars run within a block of the church. This section of New Orleans is mostly inhabited by French and Germans, and persons of color; of the latter, the number is large, and as a rule, they are thrifty and intellectually above the average. The catholics are strong in this part of our city; but we have now three churches north of Canal street, one of which has been built and another purchased since the organization of our mission in the southwest.

The Rev. Evans Green, the pastor of this church, was a student in our Theological Institute. Although he was not one of our best students, yet he is one of the most laborious and successful preachers in the conference. In building up his charge, and in the purchase of this church, he has been called to contend with difficulties, which would have discouraged most men. But he had faith in God, in the church and in his own pious efforts, and the Lord has crowned his endeavors with success. He has been greatly successful in the conversion of souls, and has added largely to the number of his flock.

The day was beautiful and more people assembled to witness the dedicatory services than could be accommodated with even standing room within the church. The large congregation present was composed of a well dressed and intelligent-looking class of persons A portion of the Wesley chapel choir was in attendance, and sang with great fervor; there were also present representatives of several of our benevolent societies, whose neat appearance attracted general attention. Among the other visitors, were Mayor Heath, Col Ketchum, of Maj. General Howard's staff, Judge Fisk, captain Armstrong and Dr. Harris.

The religious services were introduced by Rev. N. L Brakeman, the presiding elder: Rev. Henry Green followed in an earnest prayer, and the editor of the ADVOCATE preached the dedicatory sermon, which was on conversion. Then followed the subscriptions and collection for the new church. This part of the programme was admirably conducted by brother Brakeman, who by solemn appeals and pleasant remarks succeeded beyond all expectation. The Mayor started the subscription with $25,00, and this with smaller sums footed up to about $250,00. In conclusion we may add that this was one of the most pleasant and interesting dedicatory services we have attended in New Orleans. The Lord bless the Poet street M. E. Church!

President.

N. L. BRAKEMAN,
Secretary.

☞ Mr. John Baldwin Jr. has been in our city for a few days, and also has visited the plantation recently purchased by his father.

☞ The last re-construction bill is General Sheridan embodied in national law.

☞ In company with Rev. Mr. Brakeman we visited this week the future location of our Institute, but did not return in time to report in full for this issue of the Advocate.

☞ Mr. James Lynch, formerly of the A. M. E. Church, and late editor of the Christian Recorder, has recently joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, and been appointed by Bishop Simpson, presiding elder of South Mississippi. We commend Brother Lynch to our brethren in Mississippi, and pray for his success in gathering the people into the "Old Church".

General News.

NEW YORK, July 19.—The constitutional convention to-day adopted a resolution declaring negroes entitled to the same rights and privileges as whites by a vote of 58 against 4.

San Francisco, July 19.—The Republican State convention nominated John Bidwell for governor. The resolutions favor impartial suffrage.

Southwest Pass, July 19.—The U. S revenue cutter Wilderness, Captain Freeman, seventy-five hours from Vera Cruz arrived last evening.

The Wilderness arrived off the port of Vera Cruz at 7 P. M. on the 14th inst. A delegation of Mexican officers boarded the vessel and Mme. Juarez was warmly welcomed to her native land.

On the morning of the 15th the harbor was alive with boats, dressed in the national colors On shore, bands were playing, and guns, fire crackers, horns, etc., were making the air ring out a welcome to the party.

The mole, castle and public and private buildings were dressed with flags At 7 o'clock the party embarked in small boats and were rowed to the land, where they were received in true Mexican fashion by Gens. Benevides and Zeraga, and a host of officials.

A national salute was fired, the troops were drawn up in lines and falling in, escorted the party to a magnificent private residence selected for their special use.

In the evening the city was brilliantly illuminated and a grand display of fireworks took place in the plaza. The distinguished party were to leave by special train on the morning of the 19th for the City of Mexico.

President Juarez arrived at the capitol on the 14th inst. He emphatically declines re-election and has ordered a new election. He will retire to a hacienda in the mountains.

General Vidaurri was shot on the 6th inst.

Marquez is believed to be hiding in the City of Mexico. He will be shot as soon as captured.

It is reported in Vera Cruz that Santa Anna still lives.

Everything is quiet in Vera Cruz The city is perfectly healthy. There are no cases of yellow fever, and have been none during the past four weeks

The Austrian sloop of war Elizabeth is receiving Austrian refugees on board. She has no communication with Mexican officials except through the United States gunboat Tacony and United States consul Saulnier.

The Wilderness brings important dispatches for the British, French and Austrian governments, as well as for our own.

The Mexican government is preparing an address to the world in which they expect to justisfy themselves for the execution of Maximilian.

It will treat of the killing of 63,000 Mexicans, for defending their native soil and cite precedents which they think will prove clearly that their acts are within the range of propriety, and further, will produce documents which will throw new light upon their acts.

Some of the ablest men of the republic are now engaged on the work which will attract much attention.

The following vessels were in the port of Vera Cruz on the 15th inst. Austrian sloop-of-war Elizabeth, French sloop-of-war Phlegeton, United States sloop-of-war Tacony, French steamship Sonora from Panama, American schooner A. Keen, British schooner Constance, Belgian schooner Fenel.

SENATE.

Washington, July 19.—The house amendment allowing negroes to serve on juries was adopted.

The joint resolution from the house nullifying the decree of the court of claims was severely denounced by Mr. Trumbull.

Mr. Sumner introduced a bill to strike out the word white from the naturalization laws. Referred to the judiciary committee.

The vote was read and the bill passed notwithstanding, by a vote of thirty to six. Nays: Bayard, Buckalew, Davis, Hendricks, Johnson, and Patterson, of Tennessee. The chair announced that the bill was a law.

The reconstruction appropriation bill was passed over the veto.

The senate passed a resolution to adjourn to-morrow at three o'clock to the first Monday in December, by twenty-two to fifteen, the latter figure representing the impeachment element. Senate adjourned.

HOUSE

WASHINGTON, July 19.—The assassination committee was allowed to take evidence by sub-committees and administer oaths.

A special committee of five was appointed to investigate the paymasters department. The preamble to the resolution alleges fraud.

The veto was received. The message covers three column and argues elaborately the inconsistency, unconstitutionality and tyranny of the act.

Immediately after the reading of the message, the impeachers made a strong effort. Mr. Boutwell. Mr Butler, and others characterized the message as defiant. Mr. Stephens said they were arguing that matter in vain. There are unseen agencies at work; there are invisible powers at work in this country which will prevent impeachment- I repeat any attempt to impeach the president will be vain and futile. Mr. Wilson, chairman of the judiciary committee, denounced Mr. Stephens insinuation, asserting that no amount of political pressure should turn him aside from the discharge of his duty to law and fact. (Applause from the Democratic side.) Mr Stephens, without reply, demanded the vote, and the bill passed 109 to 24.

CINCINNATI, July 19.—The Commercial's Leavenworth dispatch says the Indians captured a train near Fort Loonel.

Bishop Lawry, ten priests and six Sisters of Charity were among the passengers. The men were killed and probably mutilated, and the women abused. An escort tried to overtake the train and protect it, but arrived too late.

THE WEATHER IN NEW ORLEANS.

The weather in this city for several days past has been excessively warm, on the 20th, 21st and 22d, the thermometer reached 94 degrees in the shade, and on the 23d and 24th 96 degrees.

SUDDEN DEATH OF A CITY OFFICIAL.—Captain Henry Myatt, warden of the City Workhouse, was taken suddenly ill with a congestive chill at eleven o'clock Tuesday, and at one o'clock only two hours after, died. The deceased was thirty-three years of age, and leaves behind him several children.

DIED OF HIS WOUNDS.—We are credibly informed that Mr. David Conner, who was shot on Royal street, on Sunday the 14th inst, by Special Officer Elmore, died yesterday from his wounds at his residence on Calliope street, near Hercules.

A LARGE HAUL OF STOLEN PROPERTY.—Officers Ryan and Allen found, yesterday by virtue of a search warrant at the residence of a colored man named R. C. Baylor, 117 St. Jean street, a quantity of stolen property belonging to the United States Marine Hospital, consisting of sheets, spreads, pillows, pillow-cases, clothing thread, knives, spoons, plates, gold buttons, a musket and sword, cartridges, in short, a little of almost everything. Baylor has been arrested, and will be brought up this morning before the recorder, and his efforts in the house furnishing way will then be ventilated.

A CONTEMPLATED ESCAPE FROM PRISON.—Davis, the noted rogue who assisted Watson in the Lilienthal jewelry robbery, on Canal street, and who while temporary confined recently in the First District lock-up, escaped, and was recaptured, has been at his old tricks again in the parish prison, and it is in a great measure due to the vigilence of officer Roux that this dangerous man is not once more at large in the community. On Monday, while making the rounds of the prison preparatory to some contemplated repairs, officer Roux saw Davis, who was in his cell, make a quick movement, as if concealing something beneath the flooring. A search revealed a leaden key, fitting and opening the door of the cell. Where the materials for making this came from or how the prisoner managed to work upon it without detection, are question for the curious. He has since been placed in handcuffs and in another cell where his chances of escape are few. He will bear watching however.

FIFTH DISTRICT COURT.

Mark Hoyt vs. Francis J. Herron, United States Marshal, et als.—Plaintiff sues for the recovery of $100,000 and $120 per day while certain property claimed by him remains in possession of the Marshal. This suit is againt the Marshal and his surities, and relates to acts done in his official capacity acting under orders of federal court.

SUNSTROKE.—As some colored troops were marching down Camp street yesterday afternoon, one of the men fell in the street senseless and inanimate from the effects of a sunstroke. The troops had been marched from Greenville during the heat of the day. Dr. Maas was called to his succor and administered to his wants. A lady whose sympathies were kindly aroused for the poor sufferer procured ice and other articles for his relief.

WEEKLY MORTUARY REPORT.

The total number of deaths in this city during the week ending Sunday morning, as officially reported by the secretary of the board of health, was 151, of which number 2 were drowned, 1 took poison, 10 died of cholera, 2 of yellow fever, 1 of delirium tremens, 1 of intemperance, 20 of consumption, 11 were stillborn, and the balance died from various ordinary diseases. 34 were under 1 year. 35 between 1 and 10, 5 between 10 and 20, 16 between 20 and 30, 15 between 30 and 40, 15 between 40 and 50, 15 between 50 and 60, 5 between 60 and 70, 6 between 70 and 80, 1 between 90 and 100, and 4 whose ages were not reported. 100 were white persons, 50 were colored, and 1 not classified. This is an increase of twenty-three deaths over the preceeding week.

DEATH OF JUDGE JONES.—Robert Byron Jones, better known as Judge Jones, who was arrested recently at Natchitoches, brought to this city, and confined in the military prison, on a charge of having been implicated in the murder of Cyrus W. Stauffer, died of cholera, on Sunday evening, at No. 191 Baronne street, where he had but a few hours before been removed from the prison. His brother, Dr. Jones, died, it will be remembered, of the same disease a few days previously. Both were but little over thirty years of age, and both leave families. Judge Jones was buried on Sunday.

SENTENCED.

Theodore Coppersmith, Adolph Whitman, and Thomas May, the three men who kidnapped Miss Emily Goddard on the night of the 13th of June last, and committed a rape on her person, received their sentence on Saturday, to hard labor for life in the state penitentiary, by Judge Casabat of the second judicial district court, Parish of Jeffers n. The convicts left for their destination Sunday, on board the steamer Iberville. Special officers Dumas and Hurst deserve great credit for bringing these outlaws to justice.

REGISTRATION.—The number of those registered in Calcasieu parish up to the 15th instant comprised 44, white and 190 colored voters. Total, 631.

REGISTERS REPORT, Parish of Terre Bonne, La., from May 1st to July 20th 1867. Number of white citizens 860; number of colored citizens, 1558; Total registered, 2418; number of white citizens who signed their names, 398; number of colored citizens who signed their names, 16, number of foreigners registered, 20; number of foreigners not naturalized, white, rejected, 9; number of foreigners not naturalized, colored, rejected, 3; number of application to register if permitted to do so, 23.

CHOLERA IN LOUISIANA.—The Iberville South of the 20th says:

We are informed that several cases of cholera- or a disease closely resembling that malady, have occurred this week on the plantation of Sosthene Allain, Esq., quite a number of which have resulted fatally. We have not heard of the disease as existing in any other locality in this vicinity.

The Concordia Intelligencer of the 19th says:

We have been informed by J. D. Miller, of this place, that cholera had made its appearance on Black Hawk plantation, forty miles below Vidalia. Up to the latest accounts there had been twelve deaths, and it is reported as being of a most malignant type, killing the patient in about four hours.

HOMICIDE.—A homicide took place last Friday, 19th instant at Magnolia, Miss A man by the name of Adam Wild, who is said to have been a very turbulent and troublesome man, assaulted Dr. W. L. Beall. The latter armed himself with a double-barreled shot gun, and being again assaulted by Wild, shot him in the head, blowing off, we are told, the whole top of his head. Dr. Beals immediately surrendered himself into custody, but a jury of inquest assembled to deliberate upon the cause of the death of Wild, have returned a verdict declaring that Dr. Beall killed him in self-defense.

AUGUSTA, July 22—The wheat yield is larger than for many years. The corn crop is abundant. Recent rains have secured the older corn, while the younger promises finely. Cotton is three to four weeks late, but the plant is good and bolling well, giving a favorable prospect.

A colored man named Jerry Larkin, was shot and killed in this city on last Tuesday by Geo. P. Shedd, City Marshal. A coroner's inquest was held over the body, and a verdict of justifiable homicide rendered.--[Meridian (Miss.) Messenger.

THE DILLIGENT HAND.—"Through the diligent distribution of the Missionary Advocate our missionary collection was increased more than one hundred per cent.; five years ago it paid $6; last year, with many less numbers, we raised $75."

A MISSIONARY HELPER.—Rev. Elbert S. Todd, under appointment as a missionary to China, was married on Tuesday June 11, to Miss Emma Shaw, of this city, in the Eighteenth-street Church. Rev. Bishop Janes, was assisted in the marriage ceremonies by Rev. Dr. Durbin and Rev. Dr. Harris.

REPUBLICANS PROSPEROUS—CHRISTIAN LIBERALITY—NEW METHODIST CHURCH.

At Grand Ecore, again I met kind christian friends, whose hospitality was most welcome. An invitation to preach had to be declined, as the time would not permit. At Natchitoches a surprise awaited me; from a building facing the river most conspicuously hung two large U. S. flags; while around the gallery was stretched a canvass with letters upon it a foot long—"Union Republican Club." Wonderful! Here is no fear, no shame, but loyalty unabashed. The bold course of the Republicans here gives them the respect of all, and greatly encourages their friends. This Radical organization is said to number fifteen hundred. Many copies of the N. O. Republican are taken in the place, and the N. O. ADVOCATE still sheds its pure light around. Last week a Mass Meeting was held; all was quiet, the best of order prevailed. It is said ten or twelve thousand people were present. Judge Bullard, President of the Club, made an address. Rev. Mr. Hayward, our preacher, and others spoke. Brother H.'s speech is said to have been modest and loyal. Candidates for Convention are nominated and the canvass has begun. What a lesson for laggards. Commendable diligence has been used in the church; the new house was in a good state of forwardness, and is ready for the Quarterly Meeting. Citizens are contributing to aid in building; one merchant gave $50; his goods will sell all the quicker, for we do not mean to forget our friends. I paid the builder the missionary appropriation of a thousand dollars, and our people have, of their poverty, subscribed $...00; only $200 more is needed, and citizens are giving it, as the preacher and people are in much favor for their uniform good behavior and industry.

NATCHITOCHES QUARTERLY MEETING—CIRCUIT STATISTICS—SABBATH SERVICES.

Our religious services commenced with preaching on Thursday night, concontinued Friday night and Saturday morning. Much interest prevailed at these meetings, and on Saturday several mourners were forward, deeply anxious. The fast day was well observed. On Saturday, May 25th, the 2d Quarterly Conference of the year was held in the new church The house was covered and enclosed, but unfinished. A floor was hastily laid, the School benches brought in, and the business transacted. Nine official members were present; others were hindered by the weather While we were in session, rain, hail and wind beat fearfully upon the house. Two new members were received, D. Phaunor, local preacher, and Alfred Hasen, exhorter. Two more were recommended to the Biblical Institute, J. W. Wesley and E. Turner. No complaints. Two hundred and ninety members and probationers reported, three Sunday-schools, one hundred and seventy scholars, three day schools, 125 scholars, five conversions, fourteen baptisms, three marriages, one death. Five trustees were elected. There is a large increase of members and Sunday scholars. Some valuable appointments were taken in At one place a preacher with about one hundred members were received. Bro. Hayward has been around his circuit with excellent effect. The Sabbath services were unusually interesting; we were favored with fine weather, and our house was crowded. The sun-rise meeting was excellent; at 9 o'clock the children and their parents gathered; singing, examination and a lecture filled the hour. The children are learning, and many adults attend the school. At 11 o'clock the love feast was held. This was Methodism, in its glory. How could we give up our love leasts. At its close thirteen were received into full membership, one by letter, forty-four on probation, three were baptized. At 3 o'clock preaching and the Lord's Supper, it was a time of the visitation of the Most High. Bro. Hayward preached at night, and the meeting closed with rich tokens of God's favor, and promise of future prosperity to this earnest, working church.

DECORUM IN WORSHIP—CROP FAILURE—EDITORIAL MEANNESS.

Our people at Natchitoches propose to go on with their improvements, build a parsonage, fence their lot, and make the school house more comfortable. With a little effort and proper accommodations, the day and Sunday schools could be doubled in numbers. All seem anxious to learn. Their testimonies in love feast were short, sincere, devout; no long dreams or incoherent talks. The sacrament was taken with humility and decorum. A set of Clark's Commentary's was ordered by the official board; and if God gives them temporal prosperity, this will be central influence for good to a large district.

Much rain has fallen of late, and apprehensions are felt that the crops will again be destroyed. Some of our brethren have planted largely on shares, and a failure will sadly distress them; one has one hundred acres in cotton, and one hundred and ten in corn; another has eighty acres in corn and cotton; others have smaller crops. May the destroyer be rebuked for their sakes. I was told of a mean trick by the editor who made our people pay twice for their land. An offensive article on the colored race appeared in his paper; a colored man in the place wrote a reply, but was refused its publication unless $37 50 was paid. The subject was presented in our church, when $25 was collected and paid over to the editor, who gave his receipt. I have the precious document in my possession. See in what hands are the newspapers in our country parishes. Men who use the sacred power of the Pen and Press to degrade a class who are denied the privilege of reply; Franklin, Opelousas, Alexandria, Natchitoches—who next? It is to be hoped the list is full; already a change is taking place in the tone of some country papers, and others are taking the field to labor in the organization of our new South.

FREEDMEN'S SCHOOLS—FAITHFUL AND FAITHLESS OFFICERS—WAR MEMORIES.

Several additions have been made to the Government schools, under Major Cromie and his faithful assistant, Mr Miller. The friends of order and loyalty will rejoice that Major C., like General Flood, at Shreveport, has had the area of his command enlarged. Loyal, faithful officers of the government need no commendation; their works praise them—freedmen's schools. Regard for law, respect for the government, the confidence of loyal white and colored men—this is better than newspaper euology. With such a man the ignorant freedmen, even when wrong, does not get a curse, and the planter a smile. His head greatness is not a coffee-house, and his mouth a whisky still. It is amusing to see some of our Registrars and other officers discriminate on the color question, and say to the colored man "stand up," "take off your hat," "get out," and to the white man, "walk in," "take a chair," can we do anything for you?" Some have been known to allow these nabobs to insult them and the government to their faces. Leaving Natchitoches, my route lay through Gen. Morton's last camp ground; all around were memorials of the war, bedsteads, tentpoles, bridges, breast-works, and, saddest of all, graves. A little nearer Grand Ecore, a place was shown which gave Gen. Bank's a great reputation as a backwoodsman. He made a clearing of several miles square in a very few hours, skilfully ditching the tract at the same time. Reaching Red River and a steamboat, I was soon on the way to Alexandria, and other Quarterly meetings.

ITINERANT.

Mississippi Items.

We went from Jackson to Meridian July 9th. Notwithstanding the poor appearance of the country, the crops are looking remarkably well. The abundant rains have been favorable for the sandly pine lands, and the fields give indications of the general industry of the laborers. Vegetables are plenty, and the prospects are good for a large cotton crop.

We found brother Adams and his church in the enjoyment of prosperity. The membership has increased this year from about one hundred to two hundred and fifty, and the new charge of Enterprise numbering two hundred members has been organized during the year; giving us in all an increase of three hundred and fifty in this section of the country, the present year. Misses Jarvis and McClelan are still in their schools. As a general thing the schools have closed for the summer, but they have remained at their posts and continued their work.

On Wednesday night Mr. Langston made an able and interesting address to a large audience of both white and colored people. Mr. L. is not only a brilliant speaker, but his addresses are full of earnestness, and strong common sense. We held quarterly meetings on Wednesday and Thursday. On Friday went to Marion where we had a good congregation, and preached and administered the sacrament, and brother Adams preached in the afternoon. The people here have bought a lot and paid for it, and erected a temporary house for school and church purposes, and are trying to build a better church. They have done well and we hope to be able to give them some assistance. They have a day and Sunday-school and a large night school.

On Saturday morning we went to Enterprise. A number of the brethren were at the depot to meet us. They had provided a good home for us during our stay, and our physical members seldom have been better cared for. The church is enclosed, and a temporary floor and seats provided, and is quite comfortable for warm weather. If completed it would be the best church building in the district. It is 40 by 60 feet, weather-boarded and a neat cornice. The work is very well done. Brother Jones the pastor has not only preached, but has worked on the house and with brothers Steward and Morgan, carried the work forward with commendable energy and perseverence. There is only a debt of fifty dollars to be provided for, but it will require three or four hundred dollars more to complete the house.

Notwithstanding some showers, we had large congregations and a good time. The Sunday-school is large, but they need better instructed teachers. A day school is much needed. Any good teacher in want of a school during the summer months might do well here. They can support a school without foreign aid. On Monday at the request of many of the people we gave them a talk upon the duties, privileges, and responsibilities of citizenship. A very full audience of colored people and some white ones, gave close attention to what we had to say.

Taking all together we were much pleased with our first quarterly meeting at Enterprise, and shall feel that a pleasure is before us when the time comes to visit them again. The colored people are working well, many of them farming on their own account; crops are fine; the feeling between the white and colored people very good, and, so far as we can see, the future is hopeful for the religious and temporal prosperity of the people.

NUMBER XX.

Mama was seated in her easy chair with her glasses on, and busily engaged arranging her basket, as we entered the room saying," It is your turn Mama to go on with the story this evening" when she replied gently, "I think your Pa will interest you while I mend these garments." We shall be so happy to hear him only we feared he was too excited and tired from the labor of the day, having been in the forest with the woodcutters and in falling an immense tree, it fell in a direction they had not anticipated, and it came almost within a hair-breadth of crushing him beneath its ponderous weight. Tears of gratitude not only bedewed papa's eyes, but filled all of ours as he tremblingly said,—"My children I have been very near to death's portal to-day, but God in his infinite goodness saw fit to spare my life, and now after reading from his holy word, we must kneel and thank him for his mercy. Then I will again recall some of the incidents of my past life, and relate them to you." The incense of grateful hearts went up to God as we laid our offering upon the family altar, that evening, thanking God that we were not thus suddenly compelled to seek the blessing of the widow and fatherless.

"I think my children," resumed Papa, "that where I left off before, I was still in ill health, but having very nearly recovered, I again took an effective relation, and at the next conference we were appointed on B— circuit away off on the H— mountains. I had traveled this circuit once before, in the early part of my ministry, but now it was a much longer and more tiresome journey to reach it. When the appointments were read at the conference, one of the ministers said to me, after having paced the floor in an excited manner, "What will my wife say when she learns how far we have to move, and how do you manage to console your wife under such circumstances?" I said, I never think of it, for she is always ready to go whenever the Lord sends me, and not a murmur have I ever heard escape her lips. He sighed and said, "Would to God that all minister's wives were thus wedded to the great interests of our Itinerant work."

It was several mortal days before we reached Albany where we found this good brother, his wife and family snug in their parsonage home and nearly settled, certainly without any cause of complaint, while we had a long and tedious ride up the mountain before we reached our home. It was nearly dark when we arrived at the summit, or at least our destination, only to learn that there was no parsonage. A good brother allowed us to occupy part of his house until I could find another.

These were two laborious years, with but few comforts and many things to contend with. Miriam had been a great help to her Mother, but now Edith and the older boys could take her place, and we obtained a situation for her to teach on the circuit not far from us, at one dollar a week, which was considered a large salary for a lady, and one so young as Miriam. She came home frequently, and as the roads were often too bad for a wagon, she would ride on the same horse with Olin. One morning the noble large black horse who had never been guilty of a malicious act, stood waiting at the door for the youthful teacher, and brother escort. Fisk who was then quite a large boy was playing near him, when suddenly he caught him between his teeth and tossed him high in the air, we were all terrified, fearing he was killed; but after recovering the fright he was found not be much injured except that he bears until this day the marks of the teeth, and will no doubt as long as he lives.

I think I have never endured more severe winters than in that mountain home. On one cold stormy day in January, Agnes looked out of her mild blue eyes upon us, and became one of our number. As she grew her hair curled all over her head like a little fairy, and your precious mother said of her, as of all the others, we cannot part with one of them for each brings so much Love with them.

The formation of the rocks and soil on this mountain was very peculiar, shells were frequently found imbedded in the stones, and there were many evidences that at a very remote period this must have been the bed of the sea, or thrown up by some volcanic action. How wonderfully God thus writes up the history of the earth, leaving these hieroglyphics for us to decipher.

I was again very ill on this circuit, but had so far recovered that at the conference, at the end of the two years, I was appointed to Saratoga circuit, which was now much less in extent than when I traversed it years before when Edith was born. Nor did we live in the same place, the parsonage was at Old Stillwater. We now had a family of nine children, and any one could easily imagine it was no little care for us both when it came moving time, more particularly for your Mother; but she was always cheerful as an angel, and never thought her lot a hard one. While in this home, the black winged messenger for the first time knocked at the door of our home, calling for little Beatrice, then five years old. We have many times told you of our sorrow at parting with her, and you are familiar with the fragrance of her loveliness; for although her beautiful little form was hidden from us, yet she has seemed to live in spirit with us. One year after Beatrice had left us, you Evangeline was given to us to join the unclasped hands of the family circle, and to grow up in the place of the precious flower our heavenly Father had allowed to bloom for a few brief years with such sweetness in the garden of our hearts affections, and then transplanted it to bloom forever in the Garden of Paradise, to be an angel, and with the angels sing. Papa paused as if he caught a glimpse of her radiant form. When I interrupted the silence that followed, by saying, then I must have made my appearance among the family group on the last circuit you traveled and in the last parsonage you occupied, consequently I belong to the regular succession which by the way Misses Cora and Minnie cannot boast of. "This is true my child" said Papa, "for when those two conference years ended, my health would not allow me to assume the duties of another charge, and then I selected a small home located at a place called Quaker Springs, not far distant, and there we moved after conference. In some respects it was a pleasant place, but neither myself nor your Mother exactly liked the associations of this locality, as our numerous family were rapidly growing into manhood and womanhood and would be more or less moulded by the society around them. Consequently we did not remain there quite two years. While we lived here, on one bright autumn morning, Cora came to us, and we gave her one of Beatrice's names when hers was recorded on the Record in the old family Bible. During those two years and a few that followed them, we were more indebted to the kindness of some tried and true friends, who knew our peculiar circumstances, than we had ever been methinks during all our previous ministry; but our heavenly Father, who has said, not a sparrow falls to the ground without his notice, cared for us. When we left that place we removed here, where we have lived ever since, except that we have been blessed with a more comfortable house to live in. The old red house still in our rear will ever be remembered as the birth place of you Minnie, our twelfth and last born treasure; but by the way a child of the next generation Fisk's little girl Mary was also born there not many years ago was she not? "Papa then remarked to Mama saying, can it be possible that we have had twelve and only three now remain, and can it be that we shall ever be left alone?" Minnie threw her arms around their necks and declared she would never leave them, sealing this loving vow with a kiss.

You remember dear Minnie, the first lines of the Angel of the Vale recorded my recollections of you, a wee thing in a cradle-bed just opening your bright little eyes to this world; and since that I have transcribed imperfectly some of the leaves in Pa's and Ma's Life in the Itinerary, and thus we have lived over a brief part of their eventful career, but the volume is not ended; there are leaves on which will be found many a tear drop, partly it may be erased by the mellowing hand of time, and there will be cord after cord of heart-strings snapped assunder by the ruthless pale hand.

Will you peruse them with me sister mine, though tears again fill our eyes, and we feel anew the heart-strings snap one after another?

EVANGELINE.

Tamaulipas.

We hear, by way of the Southwest Pass, that the military authorities of Tamaulipas, have declared that State independent of Mexico; and that Gomez and Canales utterly ignore Juraez, and will proclaim allegiance to themselves or Ortega. They are preparing forces to attack Tampico.

It is more probable that these ex-Liberals will set up their own standard than that they will attempt to do anything for Ortega, unless it should shortly appear that Ortega has some show for making headway against the de facto president, Juraez.

Cortina and Beriozabal were reported, by the telegrams of yesterday morning, as getting ready for a contest for the possession of this same State of Tamaulipas.

When we hear of Tamaulipas we shall soon hear of other Mexican States. The Mexican civil war is a chronic affair. There is no such thing as law in that country. Its present possession by such bloodthirsty miscreants is a desecration of one of the most glorious parts of creation, That Juarez will be able to keep his domain in order there is no possibility of a chance. Europe has tried to establishlish a stable government among these children of the sun, and has relinquished the effort in despair. How much better would it not have been for the world if, when General Scott entered the city of Mexico, the military authority of the United States had been established there permanently? It may go there again. But the United States is hardly spoiling for a fight.—[Exchange.

Carving Character.

Did you ever watch a sculptor slowly fashioning a human countenance? It is not moulded at once. It is not struck out at a single blow. It is painfully and laboriously wrought. A thousand blows roughcast it. Ten thousand chisel-points polish and perfect it, put in the fine touches, and bring out the features and expressions. It is a work of time; but at last the full likeness comes out, and stands fixed and unchanging in the solid marble. So does a man carve out his own moral likeness. Every day he adds something to the work. A thousand acts of thoughts, and will, and efforts, shape the features and expressions of the soul. Habits of love, piety, and truth habits, of falsehood, passion or goodness, silently mould and fashion it, till at length it wears the likeness of God, or the image of a demon.

ORDER FROM GENERAL SHERIDAN.

Registration in the State to Close on the 31st Instant.

Information Wanted.

I wish to obtain information respecting my friends in Virginia, from whom I was separated more than forty years ago. My mothers name was Nelly, and she belonged to Mr. David Burrowkin. Her husband's name was Harrison Glover. My sisters were Maria, Venus, and Betsy. My brothers, Edmond, Simon, Amos and Hendersen They lived on a plantation near Smithfield. Va., on which was a distillery. Address Matilda Jefferson, care of United States Treasurer, New Orleans, La.

Information is wanted of John James Spencer, a freedman, supposed to be in New Orleans formerly from Prince Edward Co., Va. Any one knowing of his whereabouts please inform Rev. Geo. W. Honey, Lock Box No. 3P. O. Galveston, Texas.

Letter from a Postmaster in favor of Jonas Whitcomb's Remedy for Asthma.

MONROVIA, Ind., April 20th, 1856.

MR. JOSEPH BURNETT: DEAR SIR: I am now nearly out of WHITCOMB'S REMEDY FOR ASTHMA. I would not be without the medicine for any consideration. Before I commenced taking the medicine, I was totally unfit for business two-thirds of my time. But now I can attend to business all the time. When I have symptoms of Asthma, or even an attack, a few doses subdue it at once.

Very Respectfully,
JOHN McLELLAND.

WHEDON'S Commentary On The Gospel.

VOLUME II.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

From the Episcopalian.

This volume completes the authors's exposition of the four Gospels It is now designed to go through the whole New Testament in the same way, and possibly the Old. If even the New Testament is finished after the author's plan it will form an admirable work, and supersede the use of Barne's Notes except among hi partisans It combines all the latest researches in biblical criticism, including the studies of Lange and others of the same class, and is characterized throughout by careful, patien study, and by great clearness and vigor. The style is at the same time popular, and to no class will the volume prove a valley of dry bones, as is however, often the case with many works on the same subject.

From the Biblical Repertory and Princeton Review.

It is a matter of gratulation that so many distinguished men of all denominations are turning their attention to the preparation of commentaries on the Holy Scriptures. Thivolume is written in a clear, terse, and forcible style. There is very little waste of words. The expositions are concise, to the point, and evangelical and edifying. It bids fair to be a very valuable work.

From the Boston Review.

We hail all such evangelical efforts to simplify, explain and diffuse the scriptures among the masses. Such unpretending, yet really very valuable volumes are our best defense against the skepticism and irreligion of the age, and that scholarly, insinuating, and undermining influence that we import from many of the German critics. This volume reminds us strikingly, in form, method, and style, of Barne's Notes, and will be eminently serviceable to the large communion that rejoices in the name of its distinguished author.

From the New Englander.

It seems to be prepared with much care, and exhibits the same result of scholarly investigation to a greater degree than its unpretending character would lead one to anticipate. Sabbath school teachers and others who desire brief and concise annotations on the Gospels, to aid them in their studies and instructions, will find much in this work that will be useful to them.

From the Christian Inquirer.

It is a learned book, gathering up an immense mass of illustrative facts and incidents from all sources, and arranging them in admirable order.

From the Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Whedon's Commentary on the Gospels, which recently made its appearance, is an able and timely production. The author is at present the editor of the Methodist Quarterly Review, and, as an original thinker and vigorous writer has no superior. He possesses the qualifications of a commentator, and the public appreciate his volumes because they contain new ideas, fresh from the laboratory of a cultivated mind. For advanced Bible classes they are unsurpassed, and the Sabbath-schools, recognizing their importance, are introducing them into their course of study. No instructor of youth should be without them, as they shed new light upon many interesting incidents in the life of Jesus

From the Canada Christian Advocate.

We regard this second volume as fully equal to the first, and both together as being a most valuable and seasonable exposition It will be a companion to the Bible in many houses, and will enable we trust, many, many thousands to feed upon the blessed word with increasing profit and relish. It was not uncalled, and it will not be unwelcomed or unprized. Its "popular use" will be another important instrumentality in educating the Church, and raising the intelligence of religious professors to something like what the times require. It will be found a valuable assistant to teachers and members of Bible classes We wish the author health and leisure to complete the commentary on the entire New Testament.

From the Independent.

Dr Whedon has won a marked place in religious and theological literature by the strength and polish of his pen. His commentary on Matthew and Mark attracted no small attention from its style, no less than its treatment of the topics of the text. It is less discursive and less accumulative than Lange, whose work is a thesaurus as much as an original effort Yet it is hardly less sagacious and profound. Though brief it is not shallow. Compact with thought often strikingly expressed, it gives the essence of the Gospel in its vitals. He has expounded Luke more ably than Oosterzee: though John is deemed by him the crucial test of the volume, as it really is of the Bible. Many passages merit quotation, whether of the thought or the expression, for which, however, we have no room. His argument, in chapter ix, against Hume's famous doctrine on miracles, is one of the briefest and best we remember to have seen Clergymen and Sunday school teachers will find much nourishment in this series of volumes that is intended to include the whole of the New Testament.

PEMBERTON'S "Carbolic Acid Disinfectant."

This Powder is a compound of Carbolic Acid Copperas, etc., possessing the properties of destroying contagion, decomposing pestilential effluvia, noxious exhalations, and neutralizing strong and offensive odors; removing the effluvia of sick rooms, sewers, cesspools, sinks, privies tc

It far surpasses the Chlorinated Lime in its actions and effects, and is certainly the best Disinfectant now in use. Thoroughly disinfecting the atmosphere, electrifying the oxygen and rendering the respirable air both healthy and pure, being entirely free from all injurious effects on the throat and lungs, which so frequently attend the use of deodorizers.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic, and Acute

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient, that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years, in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient, if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the Institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet Street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city

MASON & HAMLIN,

MANUFACTURERS OF

CABINET ORGANS,

ALSO

PORTABLE ORGANS,

ADAPTED TO SECULAR AND SACRED MUSIC, FOR DRAWING-ROOMS, CHURCHES, SUNDAY AND DAY SCHOOLS, LODGES, &C., &C.

Uniting to a considerable extent the capacity of the Piano-Forte with that of the Pipe-Organ, and costing much less than either.

They occupy little space; are elegant as furniture; not liable to get out of order, and are securely boxed, so that they can be sent anywhere by ordinary freight routes, all ready for use.

Forty Styles, plain or elegant cases; one to twelve stops; Prices, $75, $90, $110, $125, $150, $1 0, $150, $160, $170, $200, $225, $250, $300, $435, $540, $550, $600, and upwards.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs were introduced four years since, and are a great improvement upon the Melodeon, Harmonium, and other reed organs, greatly excelling them especially in the excellent quality and variety of their tones; in power and quickness of action, and capacity for expression,

THEIR SUCCESS HAS BEEN ENTIRELY BEYOND PRECEDENT,

and proves how greatly such an instrument was needed. Again and again the manufacturers have been compelled to double their manufacturing facilities, until they have been increased six-fold. From the most eminent of the musical profession, the most distinguished pianists, organists, composers, and musical directors, the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs have received an amount and degree of commendation never before bestowed upon any similar musical instrument. More than two hundred and fifty of the most eminent musicians in the country have given written testimonials to the value of the improvements contained in them, and that they excel all other instruments of this class.

FIFTY-TWO GOLD OR SILVER MEDALS, or other highest Premiums have been awarded to Mason & Hamlin for the important improvements effected by them, and for the

SUPERIORITY OF THEIR INSTRUMENTS TO ALL OTHERS.

Constantly exhibiting their instruments in competition with others, they have been awarded the highest premium in every instance, but three or four.

For churches, sunday schools, etc., the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs are the instruments long wanted, of the very best quality, abundant power, not too expensive, nor liable to get out of order.

For private use, in drawing-rooms, &c., they are not less desirable, and are finding a place in the musical families of the principal cities.

They are adapted to a wider range of music than the piano, being fitted for all sacred music and for much secular music, while their quickness of action is such that the most lively, rapid music can be played on them. Then their cost is greatly less, as well as their liability to get out of order.

BRIEF EXTRACTS FROM OPINIONS OF DISTINGUISHED MUSICIANS.

I should think they would become very much sought after as parlor instruments as well as for public performance.—Sigismund Thalberg, the world-renowned Pianist. Sure to find its way into every household of taste and refinement which can possibly afford its moderate expenses. Far superior to everything of its class I have seen.—L. M. Gottschalk, the eminent Pianist. Such pure musical tones, promptness and smoothness of action and fine variety of effect, I have not found in any other instrument of the class.—S. B. Mills, the eminent Pianist. Really so excellent that there can hardly be much difference of opinion respecting them.—William Mason, the eminent Pianist. The best instrument of its class with which I am acquainted, and worthy a place in every drawing room Harry Sanderson, the eminent Pianist. In every respect far superior to everything I have ever seen of the kind, whether in Europe or America.—Geo. Washbourne Organ the eminent organist, N. Y. I can only reiterate what so many in the musical profession have said, that for equality, promptness and exquisite tone, they are unequalled.—John H. Wilcox, the eminent Organist, Boston. Surpasses everything in this line I have ever seen, whether French or American.—Jos Zundel, the eminent Organist, N. Y. The best reed instruments in the world are made in the United States, and your Cabinet Organs are greatly superior, and by far the best made here.—Max Maretzek, Musical Conductor, N. Y. Far surpasses all other similar instruments, which have come under my observation.—Carl Zerhan, Musical Conductor, Boston. Exceeds in my estimation every other instrument of this general class. Thos. Hastings. I can recommend them with confidence.—Lowell Mason. As soon as the people become acquainted with the superior merits of your instruments, your only trouble will be to supply the demand.—Wm. B. Bradbury. I have never seen anything of the kind which interested me so much.—Geo. F. Root. Exciting much interest in musical circles, and already becoming the fashion. N. Y. Home Journal The highest accomplishment of industry in this department. This is not only our opinion, but the unanimous verdict of the organists.—Boston Advertiser. A good instrument for the temple service, so readily secured as to be available for any congregation, and effective and beautiful as to meet the desires of the most refined and fastidious.—N. Y. Observer.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs must not be confounded with other reed instruments, from which they vary essentially, their superiority being largely derived from PATENTED IMPROVEMENTS, which cannot be employed by other makers. Among them are,

The AUTOMATIC BELLOWS SWELL, patented, a most important invention, and greatly the best swell ever devised being much more effective and easily used than any other. The variety and beauty of effect of which it is capable, can not be appreciated except from actual use. The many attempts to imitate or find a substitute for this swell, prove its value. None of them, however, approach it in excellence and simplicity.

IMPROVED SELF-ADJUSTING VALVES patented, secure much more perfect action, durability, and freedom from liability to get out of order.

WOOD'S OCTAVE COUPLET patented, in effect nearly doubles the power of the instrument in which it is used.

NOISELESS SAFETY VALVES patented, prevent the hissing sound often heard.

The IMPROVED COMBINATION REGISTER patented, gives of great facility in drawing stops.

Poetry.

Now I Lay Me Down to Sleep.

In the quiet nursury chambers,
Snowy pillows yet unpressed,
See the forms of little children
Kneeling, white-robed for their rest,
All in quiet nursery chambers
While the dusky shadows creep,
Hear the voices of the children—
"Now I lay me down to sleep."

In the meadow and the mountain
Calmly shine the winter stars.
But across the glistening lowlands
Slants the moonlight's silver bars
In the silence and the darkness,
Darkness growing still more deep,
Listen to the little children
Praying God their souls to keep.

"If we die"—so pray the children,
And the mother's head droops low;
(One from out her fold is sleeping Deep beneath the winter's snow,)
"Take our souls:" and pass the casement
Flits like a gleam of crystal light,
Like the trailing of his garments,
Walking evermore in white.

Little souls that stand expectant,
Listen at the gate of life;
Hearing, far away, the murmur
Of the tumult and the strife:
We, who fight beneath those banners,
Meeting ranks of foeman there,
Find a deeper, broader meaning
In your simple vesper prayer.

When your hands shall grasp this standard,
Which to-day you watch from far,
When your deeds shall shape the conflict
In this universal war,
Pray to Him, the God of battles,
Whose strong eye can never sleep,
In the warring of temptation,
Firm and true your souls to keep.

When the combat ends, and slowly
Clears the smoke from out the skies,
Then far down the purple distance,
All the noise of battle dies,
When the last night's solemn shadows
Settle down on you and me,
May the love that never faileth
Take our souls eternally.

For the New Orleans Advocate.

SERMON.

Preached in Marais St. Church, New Orleans, June 30th, by Rev. Scott Chinn, (colored.) 2d Kings 5:12. Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel? May I not wash in them and be clean? So he turned and went away in a rage.

The excuse which Naaman made to the prophet, is the excuse of all unregenerated men and women in this God-forgetting world. I don't care who they be, if they are not converted, if you approach them on what concerns their eternal happiness, they are bound to make an excuse. You all that have been awakened, know this. All have an excuse to put between themselves and their maker.

Go to your nearest friends that you want to do well, and point them the way to get out of the net of the devil, and they have got some excuse, some other way to get out.

God's way of saving men is a nice way; a clean way. You don't have to clean away the rubbish, the Lord does it. Naaman's way was different. As I look over this congregation, I see so many Naamans, I dont know which to take hold of. Now this Naaman in the text was a mighty man in the sight of his master. He was a great general. But he was a leper. He was covered with sores from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot. You might give medicine to those lepers of the East, but it would do no good. And so it is with the sinner.

I know something about this leprosy. When I was a boy I tried to be well mannered, and I had married a good Methodist girl, and was much thought of, my friends tried to help me, but could not get the leprosy off of me. None but the Lord could do it. Naaman was a nice, genteel man; but when he came into company, he was disgusting by his leprosy. Now he had a little Israelitish maid in his family that he had taken captive, and she saw that Naaman was a leper, and she said to her mistress, "Would God my Lord were with the prophet, that is in Samaria! for he would recover him of his leprosy."

She had the religion of Jesus Christ in her heart, and she wanted to see Naaman cured, if she was his captive. So if you should not have all your rights, you have a free spirit to love your enemies. I suppose if we were to be taken now to Cuba, and there be made slaves, it would take our best religion to help us to love those men. But let us love, and let us teach our children to love our enemies.

"Tis love that drives our chariot wheels
And death must yield to love."

When I saw that I had the leprosy, I could'nt eat nor sleep, I rose up before day to go and pray.

There was an old cook woman, a Baptist woman, that before I was converted I hated as bad as I did the devil. But when I found peace I wanted to see her worse than I did any one else.

Well this Israelitish maid loved her master, and as she looked at him, and saw him almost dead, she wished that he could see the prophet of Israel, and he would cure him. So one of his officers who heard it, said to Naaman, "That little maid you captured says there is a prophet in Israel that can cure you of your leprosy." Now many of you, if you see a person all sores, from the crown of his head to the sole of the foot, you'd be crawfishing all the time to get out of that place, you would'nt go near him.

Well, Naaman concluded to go. So he took great presents, and went in grand style. He wanted all to know that he was a great man. He acted like some persons in protracted meetings. He went to the King instead of the Prophet. He brought a letter from the King of Syria. But the King, when he read the letter, rent his clothes and said, "Am I God, to kill and to make alive, that this man doth send unto me to recover a man of his leprosy?" So Naaman, through his pride and desire to show off, failed. He then went to the Prophet where he should have gone in the first place, and where the maid told him to go.—He thought it was best to go to the King, to some one else than to the one to whom he was directed. He acted foolish in this.

And now, sinner, do you know you are the biggest fool in the world? I thought I was rather a smart boy. I never knew I was such a fool till I sought religion.

The Prophet told Naaman to dip seven times in Jordan. O, sinner, you go and dip in the pool till God washes you!

Naaman said, I've been to the King and to the Prophet, and the Prophet didn't come and get down to me, but sent his servant out. So he turned away in a rage.

But his servants said to him, "My father, if the Prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldst thou not have done it? How much rather then when he saith to thee, "Wash and be clean."

"Turn the chariot round," says Naaman, "I'll go and wash." So the sinner finally cries, "Well, anything—if there's any religion to be had I'll have it."

So Naaman goes to Jordan. I think I see him getting out the chariot, with his big red-topped boots, like our ancestors used to wear. They help him out and he goes down to try the water. Angels are hovering near the scene, as they are around this place now. He goes down again, and a third time. Six times he goes down, and the last time he is as leprous as ever. But the Prophet said seven times. The seventh time he goes down full of sores, but as he comes out his flesh is whole and fresh as a child's.

O glory! Well, when I was filled with the leprosy of sin, and the Lord suddenly healed me, I didn't know what to do. I felt so good and so free I thought I was a white man, and I rolled up my sleeves to see. The trees seemed to bow to me, and I thought I was in a different world, and that the sun did not shine as it always had.

Naaman thought that his rivers were just as good as Jordan to wash in. But they were not. He wouldn't have been healed by washing in them. It was not God's plan. Only by following out God's plan could he be healed.

And so, sinner, only by following God's plan can you be healed. So don't try to make out the way for the Lord to save you. But like Naaman, turn immediately about, and go and do the bidding of the Lord, and be saved.

Lament of the Abyssinian Captives.

The following touching lines, written by Consul Cameron, one of the captives still held by the King of Abyssinia, will commend themselves to our readers, and particularly to all Mr. Cameron's fellow Scotchmen. The bird alluded to is the little cardinal, smaller than our wren. It is found in hundreds about the country in Abyssinia. It has a soft, mouse-colored coat, dashed with deep crimson, which changes at certain seasons for a mixed blue. The last amusement of the Abyssinian captives was to make a fountain (a very pretty one) for these birds, which are quite as tame and pert as our robins; and nothing could be pleasanter than to see them crowding to their bath, and fluttering and trimming their plumage in the water, of which they are exceedingly fond. They are, at least, prettier and more delicate pets than spiders and mice, which have so often furnished a resource to the listless prisoner, deprived of any outlet to the "besoin d'amis." The fountain has, on advice, been broken, lest the ingenuity displayed should excite too much admiration, and be pressed into State service. But a stone basin has been set instead for the favorites, and they are duly fed. They are so tame now that one can almost catch them with the hand:—

THE BONNIE WEE BLUE BIRD.

Ballad written in prison, on 12th November, 1866.

Hey! bonnie blue birdie, noo, whither awa',
Wi' a' yer gay plumage sae kempit an' a'?
I'm gaun to my sweet luve wha ca's frae you tree—
Sae ya'll bide but a blink, I'll be back in a wee.

But tell me, fair stranger, or e'er I may gae,
What 'tis gars ye loe a' the little birds sae?
Ye've bigg't wi' yer ain hands this fountain sae bricht,
An' feed us wi' sma' seed frae morning till nicht.

Ah! bonnie wee bird—but this heart it might break,
Did I tell a' the thochts that such speerins awake;
But bathe in my fount still, and fill your peak, free,
A' my guerdon's to watch the, and feel ye loe me.

Kind stranger, ye're heart-sick, come fly to yon tree,
And list to a sang frae my ain luve an' me!
Ah! simple wee birdie, that wad I richt fain—
But our thochts they hae wings, 'tis our bodies are nane.

The bird and the bee may wander still free;
And fill a' this soft air wi' sweet melodie;
But we wha are wingless, in chains we maun grieve,
And sigh for our ain land frae morning' till eve.

CHARLES DUNCAN CAMERON,

British Consul in Magdala Prison, Abyssinia.

Grumblings of D. H. Hill

[From the N. Y. Post.]

The "fighting rebels" in the Southern States are those who make the least ado about reconstruction measures. One of them has written a letter to the Columbus (Ga.) Inquirer, in reply to the grumblings of the late D. H Hill. He says:

"You keep throwing up to us secesh that 'we are the most submissive of all.' We know we are, because we recognize the right of the North to alter, to make and unmake, their own Constitution equally with the South; and because we pride ourselves on our honor and chivalry, and are not going to retain the stakes after we have put them up to the sword and lost. So far from being ashamed of our submission, we pride ourselves upon it, as the highest evidence we can transmit to posterity of our high sense of honor—that we submitted as none but gentlemen can to an unconditional surrender, withholding nothing, not even a bar of gold left hid in the camp, and claiming nothing—not even life—for if we are not slain, like Maximilian, it's not because our lives are not forfeited by an unconditional surrender, but because the character of our adversaries is different. We are not a lawyer, but we never heard of a powerful nation going to Vattle or Blackstone to ask what to do with their prisoners; they have generally acted according to their interests and fears."

There is a snap to the following from the same letter:

"Does Mr. Hill forget, when he is asking us to play 'the mule,' that he is talking to a nation of gentlemen, who disdain, after surrendering up everything to their conquerors, depending on their magnanimity, to beg even for life or property? We are glad Mr. Hill is getting ready to fight. He did not fight for our Southern Constitution. But when he gets ready to die for the Yankee Constitution that we left, he will find that the South cannot be whistled to the battle field by any one that did not bear her own beloved banner to her sacred fields of freedom."

The Seven Ancient Wonders of the World.

These were, 1st. The brass Colossus of Rhodes, one hundred and twenty feet high, built by Cares, A. D. 288, occupying twelve years in making. It stood across the harbor of Rhodes sixty-six years, and was then thrown down by an earthquake. It was bought by a Jew, from the Saracens, who loaded nine hundred camels with the brass.

2d. The Pyramids of Egypt. The largest one engaged three hundred and sixty thousand workmen thirty years in building, and has stood at least three thousand years.

3d. The Aqueducts of Rome, invented by Appius Claudius, the censor.

4th. The Labyrinth of Psammeticus, on the banks of the Nile, containing within one continued wall one thousand houses, and twelve royal palaces, all covered with marble, and having only one entrance. The building was said to contain three thousand chambers, and a hall built of marble, adorned with statutes of the gods.

5th. The Pharos of Alexandria, a tower built by order of Ptolemy Philadelphus, in the year 282 B. C. It was erected as a lighthouse, and contained magnificent galleries of marble—a large lantern at the top, the light of which was seen nearly a hundred miles off; mirrors of enormous sizes were fixed round the galleries, reflecting every thing on the sea. A common tower is now erected in its place.

6th. The walls of Babylon, built by order of Semiramis, or Nebuchadnezzar, and finished in one year, by two hundred thousand men. They were of immense thickness.

7th. The Temple of Diana, at Ephesus completed in the reign of Servius, 6th king of Rome. It was four hundred and fifty feet long, two hundred broad, and supported by one hundred and twenty-six marble pillars, seventy feet high. The beams and doors were of cedar, the rest of the timber of cyprus. It was destroyed by fire, B. C. 365.

"How Long Will it do to Wait."

I copy the following story from an admirable work just published by the American Tract Society, entitled Records of S. V. S. Wilder, hoping it may accomplish two ends—introduce to your readers a most excellent book, and lead some hesitating, delaying soul to an immediate surrender to Christ.

Dr. Nettleton had come from the evening service, in some country town, to his home for the night. The good lady of the house, rather an elderly person, after bustling about to provide her guest with refreshment, said, directly before her daughter, who was in the room: "Dr. Nettleton, I do wish you would talk to Caroline. She don't care nothing about going to meeting, nor about the salvation of her soul. I've talked and talked, and got our minister to talk, but it don't seem to do no good. I wish you would talk to her, Dr. Nettleton." Saying which, she soon went out of the room.

Dr. Nettleton continued quietly taking his repast, when he turned round to the young girl and said:

"Now just tell me, Miss Caroline, don't they bother you amazingly about this thing?"

She, taken by surprise at an address so unexpected, answered at once,

"Yes sir, they do; they keep talking to me all the time till I am sick of it."

"So I thought," said Dr. N. "Let's see, how old are you?"

"Eighteen, sir."

"Good health?"

"Yes sir."

"The fact is," said Dr. N., "religion is a good thing in itself; but the idea of all the while troubling a young creature like you with it, and you in good health, you say. Religion is a good thing. It will hardly do to die without it. I wonder how long it will do for you to wait."

"That's just what I've been thinking myself,' said Caroline."

"Well," said Dr. N., "suppose you say till you are fifty. No, that won't do; I attended the funeral the other day of a lady fifteen years younger than that. Thirty? How will that do!"

"I'm not sure it will do to wait quite so long," said Caroline.

"No, I do not think so either; something might happen. See now, twenty-five? or even twenty, if we could be sure we would live so long. A year from now; how would that do?"

"I don't know sir."

"Neither do I. The fact is, my dear young lady, the more I think of it, and of how many young people, as well apparently as you are, do die suddenly—I am afraid to put it off a moment longer. Besides the Bible says: Now is the accepted time. We must take this time. What shall we do? Had we not better kneel right down here and ask God for mercy through his Son Jesus Christ?"

The young lady perfectly overcome by her feelings, knelt on the spot. In a day or two she by grace came out rejoicing in hope, finding she had far from lost all enjoyment in this life.—Watchman and Reflector.

From the Watchman and Reflector.

Paul's Quotations from the Greek Poets.

The only remaining passage of classic literature quoted by the Apostle Paul, besides the two already commented on (Acts 17: 28; 1st Cor. 15: 33) is Titus 1 : 12. Here, as in the first of the cases previously considered, the words are formally introduced as a quotation: "One of themselves, a prophet of their own, said, 'Cretans are always liars, evil beasts, lazy gluttons." This quotation is from Epimenides, a Cretan poet, who lived about 600 years before Christ. It forms a perfect hexameter line. According to Jerome, the passage occurred in a poem on Oracles, which is now lost. Kallimachus, who lived about three centuries later, quotes the first part of the line in his hymn to Jupiter. It was a sorry compliment which Epimenides paid to his countrymen, to call them ever-everlasting liars, ferocious brutes, and lazy gluttons; but it seems not to have been, like David's denouncing all men as liars, a hasty and unjust charge, uttered in a moment of excitement and irritation; for the Apostle adds, "This testimony is true." And this inspired endorsement agrees with many ancient testimonies. Plato says the Cretans were infamous for every kind of impurity. Polybius says, "They were nurtured in seditions, murders and intestine wars." Another ancient writer, the author of a Greek dictionary, says, "The three worst Ks (Cs, we should say, according to our modern way of spelling the names) are Cappadocia, Crete and Cilicia." Indeed, 'to play the Cretan' came to be a euphemism for lying; Cretizein—pseudesthai; just as we might say, 'to Munchausen.' Let us hope the Cretans have reformed since then. At any rate, let us give them our sympathy and encouragement in their brave and determined attempt to free themselves from their Turkish tyrants, who are indeed fierce brutes "and lazy gluttons," whom no civilization can tame or ennoble. Let us feed and clothe their naked and starving families. Gen. Demetrius Kalerges, who is coming to bespeak our friendly interest for them, in their heroic struggle, though a Cretan, has shown himself a brave, patriotic and freedom-loving man.

But why does Paul call Epimenides a prophet? Not merely because, according to the common opinion of the ancients, all true poets have something of the prophetic gift (the Romans used to call the poet "vates," a prophet); but because this poet in particular had the reputation of foretelling the future. Cicero and Apuleises both ascribe to him, in express terms, the gift of prophecy. Plato calls him "a Divine man." And Diogenes Laertius says, "It is reported that the Cretans offer sacrifice to him, as to a god. LANDOR.

From Enterprise we proceeded to Macon where we held a quarterly meeting Wednesday and Thursday, 17th and 18th. The preacher in charge there left his work some time ago, giving as a reason for so doing, the statement that his life had been threatened if he preached there any more. We made some inquiry among the brethren there about the matter, but found no one who seemed to think there had been any serious danger. The opinion of all seemed to be that brother Jones was very timid or that he wanted an excuse to leave Macon and go back to New Orleans. The Mayor of Macon, Dr. Dent, is regarded by our people as a true friend to them, and would have given them any necessary protection. We received many courtesies from various white citizens there after they became acquainted with the object of our visit, and we are not disposed to write Macon down as a very bad place.

We had good congregations and pleasant meeting while there. We got their title to a church lot completed, and contracted for the building of a church 35 by 55 feet; planked on sides and rear, and weather-boarded in front, with plain cornice. The whole without seats, will cost about $1200.

Brother Wesley Jones from Columbus is supplying the place of the former Jones, and is doing well. They now number 140 members and probationers, and are about to organize at an old church in the country, where they now have a good congregation, and the owners of the house have given them written permission to use it.

The country around is one of the finest portions of the State. Crops are splendid; many are saying the country will have corn enough to last two years. Cotton is doing finely, and the present dry weather is just what the planters want. Vegetables are plenty and of good quality.

Friend Etheridge of the hotel gave us good living, and discounted our bill one dollar a day on his usual rates. That rather improved our usual good nature, and we felt feeling very kindly towards Macon and its people of both colors, and with good hopes for the future of our church there.

We find our work becoming more pleasant than on the former round. Living is much better, and a little cheaper, but lest some of your readers should envy us, we will say that the heat has been very severe. Labor abundant enough to keep us busy.

Mosquitoes thirst for our yankee blood, and fleas and bed-bugs seem to have entered into an alliance with them, for the purpose of divesting us of all that is mortal. Notwithstanding we are holding our own; having excellent health, and flesh enough for the state of the weather, and are rejoicing in the progress of the Redeemers Kingdom. Friday afternoon we took the cars again for Columbus. Up to Artesia, where the switch for Columbus leaves the M. and O. R. R. the country is fine and well cultivated. The crops abundant. Transferring baggage and self to Columbus train we spent an hour in the pleasant business of see-sawing back and forth on the switch. This like other good things did not continue always, and at last we started and went to Columbus.

We found brother Ryan and family well, and his church prospering. Brother R has gained the confidence of all classes and has many friends among the white people. His congregation is large and we do not often see a more respectable looking body of colored people. There is a great call for our preachers in the surrounding country, but they seem to be doing all they can, and cannot meet the demands of the people. If we could go out among the people and give them a clear understanding of it, we might soon have a thousand members in this county alone.

In political sentiment the freedmen are very well united, and having a large majority in the county can elect such candidates as they may unite upon. D.

BATON ROUGE, La., July 22, 1867.

Editor of the N. O. Advocate:

DEAR SIR:—Believing that our friends in New Orleans would like to hear from this point of the vineyard, I have concluded to give you a few items. Our church here is under the charge of the Rev. James Hayward, a good preacher, an exemplary christian and a true and faithful laborer in the Vineyard of the Lord, and he has been the humble instrument in the hands of God of adding many souls to the fold of Christ, since he came amoung this people. The congregation have purchased a bell for the church, and are now very anxious to raise funds to have their house of worship completed before cold weather sets in, but times are so dull and money so scarce, that I am afraid they will not succeed, though they seem to be very sanguine in regard to obtaining the requisite means for this purpose. There is a good deal of interest shown here, touching matters of religion, especially if they relate to the welfare and prosperity of the "Old Mother," as the M. E. Church is designated here by its members. Brother Hayward has formed a choir, composed of the following named persons, members of the society: Mrs. Mumford, Mrs. Buggs, Mrs Hayward, Miss Fannie Arbough, Miss Amanda Tillottson, Miss Emma Murphy, Miss Mary Murphy, Miss Mollie Arbaugh and last though not least by any means, Mr. Eli Buggs. Our Sabbath-school has an average attendance of about 60, many of them are good readers.

I should like very much to procure some catechisms for my class of boys, as I know they have not had an opportunity to study these little books heretofore.

The Superintendant of this school, Mr. M. Wight, Jr., is very energetic in his endeavors to make it a prosperous one. I have organized a Temperance Society here among the freedmen, it is known as the Lincoln Temperance Society, No. 1 of Baton Rouge, La., quite a number have united with us and signed the pledge of total abstinence, and I heartily wish that some of the Anglo Saxons around here would come in and do likewise. We have had some very pleasant temperance meetings at the "Little Bethel" during the last month. The Lincoln Society has among its members some of the good citizens of this place, it can boast of such men as John Mathers, Joseph Israel, Elder Dowdey and many others, I am happy to state, "too numerous to mention." I feel very much interested in this cause, and wish to see it prosper, and I want to labor among the colored people here and do them all the good I can. And I intend to, God being my helper.

Very Respectfully,
Your ob't. servt.

OUR TRIP.

In our last issue, we intimated that we had visited St. Mary's Parish, and promised our readers a more complete report. It was a glorious day when we started, and the whole trip was full of interest and enjoyment. Our journey was by rail from Algiers to Berwick's Bay, and thence by steam up the Atchafalaya, and thence up the Bayou Teche to Franklin. Our traveling companion was one of the veterans in the war for the Union; indeed he was one of those heroic chaplains who believed in the Cromwellian creed—"trust in God and keep your powder dry." He is well known to our readers by the nom de plume B. In the dark days of the rebellion, he had marched with our gallant host along the whole length of our route, and hence was well posted in every historic spot. With a good memory and fine conversational powers, he kept our curiosity on the alert, by anecdotes of the campaign, and allusions to the scene of many a conflict. Now he showed us where his regiment encamped; now he pointed to the tree under which some of our brave troops, who had been captured by the rebels, were compelled to dig their own graves and then were shot; now he designated a house where he had dined and written telling letters for Northern eyes; and anon he described the field where host met host in death-grapple for freedom against slavery. Our friend had a keen eye for aligators and could descry one far in swamp lifting its head above the waters or sunning itself on some fallen tree; besides, he was a sure "mark," and could come nearer to the head of one of these amphibious creatures of the sunny South than any other man who ever cracked a rifle at a "rebel." Reader, when you travel always have a companion with you who knows the route.

At Lafourche Crossing there came on board another friend, with well-filled saddle-bags, who is known to our readers as "Itinerant." He was the more welcome as we were to be his guests. He, too, was full of "incidents by the way." But his were stories of the late flood, which had been more devastating than war. Every inch of the road was familiar to him, and many were the tales of woe he had to relate.

It was midnight when we reached Franklin on the Teche, and the goodly "Itinerant" escorted us to his hospitable home. It was too bad to rouse his "beloved" from her slumbers, but she came, smiling like one from "pleasant dreams." B. and I were tired, and we soon forgot the world with all its cares. The morning dawned, blushing like a maiden for her bridal hour. The matin notes of the leafy songsters awoke us from our slumbers, and soon we were walking the long, broad avenues of Franklin. This is a charming village, on the navigable Teche, and contains eighteen hundred inhabitants. There are there many embowered residences, where plenty waits on virtue and where life is full of repose. This hamlet is well supplied with churches, and our own is neat and airy as one could wish. "Itinerant" purchased it for our people, and the night we were there it was filled with earnest worshipers. This is one of the strongest points on the Opelousas District, and its strength is not yet matured. More Advocates are taken here than at any other point in Western Louisiana. Indeed, "Itinerant" has the banner district this year, he having obtained the largest number of subscribers for the Advocate in the Conference. This accounts for the prosperity of his district, and the following figures illustrate the fact: During the last six months he has had an increase of 1,717 members, 22 Sunday schools, 1,206 scholars, 142 conversions, and added to our church property $5,300.

It was a genuine delight to get a "home-made breakfast." "Itinerant's" wife is not only one of the best of wives and most devoted saints, but one of the best cuisiniers among our Southern acquaintances. May her table never grow less! At her quiet home we met Mrs. R——, one of those heroic women who devote themselves to teaching, and who, notwithstanding opposition from the whites, still hold on their way.

About 9 A. M. we started for the "Darby Place." We were nine: three preachers, one lawyer, one merchant, one driver and three horses. Two of the latter were gray and the other bay. The bay was young and fractious, but we had a brakeman along who hitched up the fiery steed. The merchant is the son of him who had purchased a location for our Institute, and who had come to consummate the bargain. Resembling his honored father in many things, he is intelligent, generous, business-like, and has faith in the future. The lawyer is to the "manor born," yet has so far conquered his prejudices as to treat Northern gentlemen with respect. Knowing every body and every thing in his native parish, he is no less communicative than wise. He is just fat enough to be good-natured and habitually obliging.

An hour's ride brought us to the "Darby Place." Located on the Teche, and bi-sected by the Opelousas Rail-Road, it is one of the finest plantations in St. Mary's. Consisting of 2,000 arpents, with a half mile front on the Teche, there are about forty acres included within the parish road on the west and the bayou on the east. Within this enclosure is a fine old family mansion, surrounded with fig and orange groves, while beyond, extending to the river, are massive oaks and pecans, spreading shadows the diameter of the largest of which measured ninety feet. This beautiful spot is designed for our Institute and other educational departments which may hereafter be established. This is a noble gift, and the name of the donor will be held in lasting remembrance by the Church and the friends of education. On the other side of the parish road is the farm proper. Here are splendid acres of rich cane and corn land, while on the farthermost part are the woods of valuable timber. Amid the oak and cypress trees flows a small bayou, where the aligator basks in the sunshine and the garfish floats lazily along.

Such, briefly, is the chosen location for our future halls of learning in the Southwest. Healthful, beautiful, valuable, it is not inferior to Plato's Academic grove. And from this consecrated spot, what influences may not go forth to affect the opinions and destinies of mankind. Taught in the sciences, skilled in the arts, learned in theology, how many men and women may, in the coming years, issue from these classic haunts to educate the common mind and train souls for heaven.

Questions for the Constitutional Convention.

We are pleased to notice of late in the columns of several Southern cotemporaries, some indications for which we have patiently waited. We have waited till they should give up a vain battling against issues that have been sternly and irrevocably decided against them, and should turn their attention to the many pressing questions of the hour. With the war slavery fell, and with it fell caste and proscription on account of color or race. Citizenship, suffrage, and absolute equality before the law were the logical, inevitable results of the destruction of slavery. But up to a late day a majority of the Southern press have been engaged in bitterly contesting one or the other or all of these results. Many of them even now go so far as to say with the Mobile Register, that African suffrage will only last during the continuance of military rule, and that all action under the Reconstruction laws shall "be undone and repudiated."

All this struggle against accomplished facts is as idle as it would be to contend that the blacks are still slaves. It is worse than idle, for blending with the senseless spite of the mob and the "groundlings" against the negroes, it has led, and will lead again to mobs and murders, and these lead to white disfranchisement and prolonged military rule, neither of which are desirable in themselves. It would not be hard, we think, to prove to the satisfaction of a reasonable man that had the Southern people frankly and heartily accepted the abolition of slavery with all its just and necessary consequences, granted suffrage and every other civil and political privilege to the colored people, remodelled their vagrant and labor laws accordingly, and faithfully executed the Civil Rights Bill, the Southern States would now have been represented in Congress, the levees been built, the cotton and sugar taxes removed, and railroad and manufacturing enterprises been much more widely extended in their limits. We believe there are many Southern journalists who will now admit privately that this would have been the wisest and the manliest course for the Southern people But the South was not alone in what now appears as blindness to the real situation. The North shared her delusion. Reproaches would therefore be as unjust as impolitic.

Let us turn to the questions of the present. We ask the wise and able minds who give tone and direction to the press of the South, whether with or against us in politics, to take up in earnest the many and grave questions which will soon come before the Constitutional Conventions of these States. We will indicate some of these, reserving a more extended discussion for the future.

The representation question. In New York and England the ablest minds are engaged in a deep and exhaustive discussion of the true method of securing the proportionate representation of minorities. Several new plans have been proposed. In these discussions the true principles of representative government have been elaborately examined by the foremost statesmen of the world, and new light has been thrown upon the subject. It appears to be unanimously agreed, both in this country and in England, among those who have examined the subject, that our system of representation contains some features which are vicious in theory and dangerous in practice, and liable to become the more dangerous the wider the basis of of suffrage. Among these vicious results, rank par eminence, the caucus, the convention and lobby. These parasitical "institutions" have to such an extent absorbed the legitimate functions of the people, that it cannot be said with truth that the people nominate or even elect a single officer of importance. Every prominent position is to all intents and purposes filled by the choice of irresponsible bodies unknown to the law, whose nomination is the real election. The subsequent voting of the people is practically a farce. It is this state of things which has made politics synonymous with corruption, and has driven men of chrracter and first class ability from the lists. This it is that has thrown the government of large cities into the hands of "rings," and made the "thug" and "plug-ugly" controlling powers in elections.

If Louisiana, in her Constitutional Convention soon to be called, shall, with the blind mediocrity of '64, content herself with a third rate copy of some old constitution, with all the defects of the past and with no provision for the new wants of the present, we may look to see, with extended suffrage, an era of extended rascality and fraud.

The question of a broad, universal, and thorough system of common school education, is another topic which must be taken up and discussed most thoroughly before the public, if the next ten years of Louisiana are to be prosperous. There is no subject so vital to her interests. There is none, we are persuaded, on which her people need more enlightenment. In most of the Western States, whose public schools are universities, besides those of Louisiana, they are still behind those of the East and of Germany. In this State our public school system bears the same comparison to that of any well regulated country, that a log cabin does to a cathedral. The State should educate her children, and she should do it more thoroughly and efficiently than any one else. The private school is the rich man's school—the ecclesiastical school is the churchman's school—but the common school is the poor man's school. Our system—if it can be called a system—needs better teachers, higher salaries, the introduction of all the modern helps to learning, more wholesome houses, more cheerful grounds, and in fact it needs almost every important essential of a good school system.

The question of Labor as connected with the cotton and cane culture, is another vital question. Nothing is more evident than that the successful culture of these staples under the present system of labor, is doomed to failure. The market price of cotton will not pay expenses of production to the large planters, and if the culture is abandoned to small farmers under the Northern plan, half of our cotton and cane fields will lapse into wildernesses before capital enough can accumulate in the new hands to cultivate them. Some, as a remedy, advocate a return to the old system of slavery under the disguised forms of Coolie labor, apprenticeship, vagrant laws, and physical compulsion to compliance with contracts. To say nothing of the unsatisfactory nature of these substitutes for slavery in a financial view, it is simply enough to state that they are utterly at variance with the feelings of our people now, and are impracticable.

Instead of a return towards the old system, we believe the path of Louisiana's redemption lies in an advance to a new one. We think the right step is indicated in the late speech of one of her ablest sons, Thomas J. Durant. And we do not hesitate to affirm that her cotton and sugar production will remain problematical until some practical and far seeing agriculturists shall apply to it the principle of co-operative labor upon the broad and equitable basis of giving to each man the whole of the profits of his labor. The idea that capital virtually owns labor, and must command it at the lowest wages and the greatest profit to itself, consistent with the supply and demand, prevails North and South. It must eventually yield to a better one everywhere. It must speedily be abandoned in Louisiana, if we are to look for prosperity. A condition of things prevails here favorable to a reform. The lands are in the hands of the non-laborers. The work of the laborers is too expensive to hire, and they are as rapidly as they can commencing to work for themselves, which will make it continually more expensive.

Let the land owner and the laborer unite, not in putting capital against labor, but let capital sell to labor at low and fair rates what it has to sell, and abandon all claim to any other share in the profits of labor, and let the laborer have, not one-third, or one-half, but the whole of the proceeds of his labor. Let the laborer then work with his hands, and the capitalist with his gins, his mills, his stores, each in co-operation with the other, but each receiving the whole profits of his labor, and we predict that the man who first colonizes his large plantation on this principle will be one of the wealthiest men in Louisiana.

THE NEXT PRESIDENT.

Already the politicians are busy arranging the programme for the coming presidential campaign. Senator Wilson of Massachusetts is pushing forward General Grant as a candidate, and is energetically testing with his political batteries the utility of his inventions, and though urging the merits of the commander-in-chief as a candidate, it is known that he aspires to see his name put up as Vice President. Mr. Wilson is a very shrewd man, and there is much to be said in favor of his scheme. General Grant has both indirectly and directly stated that he would accept the position of president if he were called by the voice of the people, to perform the functions of that high office, and he has furthermore said that he could have no objection to the name of the Massachusetts Senator, if placed second on the ticket. Mr. Wilson shows some wisdom in aiming for the second place only, his energy in framing and urging war measures during the rebellion, gave him a very good position in the party that carried the war to a successful end. He knows as well as any man in public life, how all the machinery of parties is worked to the best advantage, and furthermore, he is geographically well located, if the other candidate come from the West; for as New England ideas have triumphed in the contest, that has so recently changed the political atmosphere, she will hardly be disposed to waive her claim to a place on the presidential ticket. Then again the circumstances by which he is surrounded will go far to favor him. He will have the opposition of the conservatives, who cling to the dead past, and which opposition moves the masses in his favor, and who always vote for a man of limited abilities, provided he be in sympathy with them. Just now in the Eastern states, the radicals are agitating the temperance question, and upon this point he is all right, and moreover he has just united with the Orthodox church, which act will strengthen him with all bodies of christians throughout the country who believe they have a duty to perform as christians in voting. Besides Massachusetts has a growing man in Mr. Boutwell, who would undoubtedly be elected to fill Mr. Wilsons place were the latter elevated to the vice presidency. On the other hand General Grant would receive the largest popular vote of any man that could possibly be put forth; his election though not satisfying the extreme radicals would effectually destroy the democratic party and would secure the country and the union for another four years against its internal foes. By putting the General forward, he having led the union army, the issue would naturally be between the supporters and the enemies of the country, and the issue would have to be more squarely met with him as a candidate than if it were otherwise. In this view it seems that General Grant is particularly valuable as a candidate. He is unfitted by education and habits for the responsibility he offers to assume, but we have had worse president than he is likely to make.

He already knows the value of silence, and has probably learned that stubbornness, no matter what it may have been in the days of Jackson, is not now a trait needed in the chief executive. The life of the country is with the Republican party, which if kept in power will eventually bring us through all our troubles. Now as the people have determined to do their own thinking, make their own laws, in short govern themselves, it does not matter much who is president. Then if we can save the country (i. e.) the party, by electing Grant let us by all means unite and vote for him as the man. He can hardly accept the presidency without suffering in the estimation of Americans. The position he now holds is a very proud one, and one that ought to satisfy any reasonable ambition. The moment he becomes a candidate all his past errors will be unearthed, his military renown questioned and brobably his fame blackened. But he does not look upon the matter in this light, and is willing to stand the reverses of political life, if he can serve his fellow countrymen. Congress has recently taken power away from the president and put it into his hands thus showing the growing confidence of the country in him. There may be some minor objections, but circumstances and expediency seem to indicate that general Grant will be the next president of the United States.

THE MASSACRE.—That foul, most inhuman and damnable massacre of July 30, 1866, was a death blow, aimed at Southern loyalty, and especially at the freedom of our colored people. With this understanding, the loyal people of New Orleans, assembled in large numbers, in the very hall where the murders were committed, and there commemorated the tragical event with ceremonies, the most imposing. The large hall was draped in mourning, and in the centre aisle stood a lofty catafalque. Rev. Mr. Maistre conducted the religious services, and Hon. Rufus Waples and Rev. Dr. Smith pronounced the funeral orations. The oration by Mr. Waples, was a most magnificent effort. The audience was sensibly moved when he alluded to Horton, Dostie, and other victims, and his references to Mr. Johnson were well-timed. It is a sad comment upon our courts, and our military authorities, that up to this time, none of the murderers have been arrested, though several of them have been identified; we hope, however, that the widows and orphans of the dead, and those victims who have survived the deadly assaults, will bring suits against the city of New Orleans, for the losses which they have sustained.

THOMSON BIBLICAL INSTITUTE.

Another year has rolled away, and again the students of our Institute have passed their annual examinations and entertained the public with literary exercises. Fourteen young men have been in attendance during the past term of seven months. All of them were once slaves, and but few of them could either read or write, when the term commenced; but possessing good natural gifts, they have applied themselves with assiduity, and their improvement is alike credi table to themselves and their teachers. Fortunately they have had in Rev. A. C. McDonald, one of the best of teachers; indeed, too much cannot be said in paise of his painstaking to prepare these young men for the Christian ministry. Himself a graduate of Asbury University, he has quietly consecrated himself to this good work. Fully competent to fill a position in our older institutions, he is content to devote his talents and life to this apparently humble duty. Intelligent, accurate, patient and devout, he is filling his responsible position with honor and success.

The annual examination of the students took place on the evening of July 29 and 30th, in the First Street Methodist Episcopal Church, in the presence of a large audience, Rev. Messrs. Newman, Brakeman, Diossy, Green, Chinn and Baker, and Hon. Rufus Waples were present. The students were examined by Brother McDonald in spelling, reading, arithmetic, grammar and Watson's Institutes—First part. Their spelling was good; in English grammar they were very good; and in Watson's Institutes, they evinced careful reading, and very fair understanding of their author. It is scarcely creditable, that young men, who six months ago could neither read nor write, can understand Watson; yet we will venture the remark, that their examination in this study will compare favorably with that of first year conference candidates.

Wesley chapel was filled to overflowing on the evening of July 31, by the members of our church, to witness the literary exercises of the students. Rev. Dr. Newman, president of the Institute, presided. After singing by the choir, prayer was offered by Rev. A. Ross. The President then congratulated the audience on the occasion; commended the Institute to the prayers of the church, and reminded the students of their indebtedness to the Missionary Society, for the advantages which they are now enjoying.

John Lea, was announced and read the following essay:

Moral Agency of Man.

Ladies and Gentlemen:

The Theological System of the Holy Scriptures, teach us that man is a moral agent. This, however, may be very familiar to you, consequently my essay will present nothing to you that is new. But I would respectfull, inform you, that a few months ago, I took my seat in school for the first time in my life, and previous to that time I knew nothing about the moral agency of man. But in a short period, I have been fully convinced, that all men are moral agents. He then, is a moral agent who is capable of performing moral actions, and this includes all men, that dwell on the face of the earth. God has designed it, and every individual that reads his word and believes in Him, and keeps his commandments, and has faith towards His Son, our Savior Jesus Christ, must acknowledge it, we find then by investigation, that the moral agency of man is a principle on which much depends. While we sojourn on earth in our probation, we are under great responsibilities.

So we say then in the first place, that it is the chief pleasure of God for us to know his will, and to keep His commandments, and in this has He taken great pains in making out the right way for us to walk in. And his way is so plain, that the most ignorant man or woman cannot err or mistake the way. And for this cause, He has established for us, a sure foundation, and it is established at an inestimable price. It had to be paid for with something more precious than gold and silver, yes my brethren, for this sure foundation our Saviour shed his precious blood. So then as it could not be bought with money, the precious gift was extended to all mankind, without respect to person, both rich and poor, learned and ignorant

We then, at once see, that every man is a moral agent and must be held responsible for all he says or does, so then according to the Holy Scripture, all nations both great and small must stand before God in judgment, to give an account of the deeds done in the body, whether they be good or evil. It is then highly necessary for us to study the word of God, and try to make ourselves true to the trust which he has conferred upon us. And use every effort that's in our power to carry out his principles among men, and by so doing, to make ourselves for Him faithful and successful agents.

No man is obliged to learn and know everything; this can neither be sought nor acquired, for it is utterly impossible; yet all persons are under some obligation to improve their own understanding, otherwise it will be a barren desert, or a forest overgrown with weeds and brambles universal ignorance or infinite errors will overspread the mind which is utterly neglected and lives without any cultivation.

Skill in the sciences, is indeed the business and profession, but of a small part of mankind, but there are many others placed in such an exalted rank in the world, as allows them much leisure, and large opportunities to cultivate their reason and to beautify and enrich their minds with various knowledge; even the lower order of men have particular callings in life, wherein they ought to acquire a just degree of knowledge.

It is also found among all races of mankind, that when men become civilized it is natural to form society, which shows that all men are moral agents. For the common duties and benefits of society belongs to every man living, as we are all social creatures. And even our native and necessary relations to a family, a neighborhood, or a government, obliges all persons without respect to color or race, to use their reasoning powers upon a thousand occasions. These considerations are very weighty, and are powerfully felt by the late freedmen of the South. We learn by early history of the United States, that the people being oppressed, resolved to be free, and that they obtained their freedom after a long and bloody war. But we regret to say, that after they had gained their freedom, they held part of the inhabitants down in slavery, which slavery has caused rivers of human blood to be shed upon this continent.

But we can, now cheerfully lift our voices to heaven and rejoice to say that God has forever removed slavery from the borders of the United States of America; yes my brethren slavery with all its chains and fetters is buried forever, so we confidently at last, say, our country is free, and every man that treads the soil of this continent is a free moral agent.

We also learned, that we had in the revolutionary war, some very great and successful leaders, as Generals Washington, Green, Warren, Putnam and Gates. And though these great men gained our independence they did not give to their country liberty, peace and freedom of speech. Consequently they passed into eternity, leaving part of their brethren in slavery. For I am a man born and raised in the United States, a country that was said to be free; but to me it seemed to be the most miserable, and hateful country that was upon the face of the globe.

The people say that General Washington had made the country free, but I was a man in the country without freedom. The people said that there were free schools in the country, and I was in the country, one that had anxiety to learn, but was not permitted to own Webster's elementary spelling book. And from my earliest recollection, I have witnessed one continual scene of bloodshed and barbaism among my people, until the capture of the great rebel and slave-holder, Jefferson Davis.

Who then can say that this was a free country? but I will refer and direct your attention to several other brave true hearted, great and prominent men, whom God raised up to take the handcuffs, fetters and leg chains off his people, and tell them to go in peace and be free.

Now, the men that we refer too, are President Lincoln, Generals Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and Thomas. They are indeed mighty champions, yes they are "indeed mighty champions, and they have immortalized themselves with us forever. The task was indeed very great; and for such a task it must require true hearted, brave, and impartial men; men, who cannot be turned aside from their purpose, though all the hearts of the wicked be combined against them. Now, these were just the men.

They cheerfully stemmed the flood, sailed through the bloody seas, came out victorious, triumphed over a most desperate foe, and gave freedom to four millions of their brethren. Mighty men indeed, the chief of whom could not seal our freedom with anything more precious than his own blood. Brethren what more can be said of these things? Let us lookfor a moment and see the effects of Abraham Lincoln's proclamation for freedom. This great man truly loved us for he laid down his own life for us, yes my brethren President Lincoln loved us with the greatest love, for it is written in the gospel, that greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends, and we can this day boldly stretch forth our hands, confidently lift up our voice and exclaim to the world, we are free!

So we see what great things the Lord has done for us. He has opered the way for the exercise of free moral agency. Let us now throw aside all treachery and prejudice, and let us now unite, in love and harmony, esteeming each other as men and women, knowing that our Creator is no respector of persons, but will save every one in his everlasting kingdom that does his will.

We are then all moral agents, and it is of infinite moment that every one of us should set about his work in earnest. Seeing that we are here for a short time on probation, let every one of us prove to be faithful servants to God, seeking his kingdom and righteousness, and rejoicing in the strength of our salvation, that we may be received at his right hand in glory.

JOHN LEA.

Fletcher T. Chinn, recited a piece on "Love of Country" which was well received

Felix Lander, delivered an oration in French, on the "Catholic and Protestant religions" which the audience cheered, and which will appear next week. This was followed by a discussion between Abraham Hilton and Amos Gunby, on the question—"Resolved, that it is inconsistent with the character and position of the Christian Minister to engage in political discussion." Mr. Hilton took the affirmative and made the following points: 1. The Christian minister shou'd not engage in political discussions because he has pledged himself to preach the gospel: 2. It would be a violation of his ordination vows, which do not authorize him to engage in politics: 3. The minister represents Christ among the people, and he should be in such a position as to be able to reconcile brethren who have political differences.

Mr. Gunby took the opposite side and argued that such discussions were not inconsistent in the minister: because 1. Moses gave a political government to the Jews, and Paul gives political instructions in his letters: 2. The minister lives under political law, and should therefore know that law, and teach it to the people: 3. Political ministers can do a great deal of good and we are bound to do all the good we can.

S. H. Scott, followed with an oration on "The Methodist Episcopal Church," which will appear in our next issue. Professor A. C. McDonald then delivered an address on the advantages of a liberal education, which was well received by the whole audience, and which the Professor is requested to furnish for publication in the ADVOCATE.

Col. Ketchum, of General Howard's staff was called out and made a timely speech, he was followed by Thomas Keith, who caused much merriment.

The audience was dismissed with the benediction, by Rev. N. L. Brakeman.

Editorial Items.

☞"B." AND "D."—Several gentlemen of Macon, Mississippi, have addressed a lengthy communication complaining of an article, published in the ADVOCATE, July 15th, and signed "B." In reply we respectfully refer these gentlemen to an article in this week's ADVOCATE, headed "Mississippi Items," and signed "D," which we are sure will give entire satisfaction, and which will render it unnecessary to publish this too lengthy communication. "D" speaks well of Macon.

☞Rev. James Lynch, late editor of the Christian Recorder, was received by the Erie Conference at its session last week as elder from the African Methodist Episcopal Church. This is the first instance, we believe, in which an elder from that church has been received by any of our conferences into full membership, and with the recoguition of full orders conferred by the authorities of that Church. At the close of the session Brother Lynch was transferred to the Mississippi Conference, and appointed presiding elder of the Natchez district.—N. Y. Advocate.

BISHOP AMES.—The Western Christian Advocate of July 25th, has the following:

"We heard," said Dr. Poe, addressing Bishop Ames, as he walked into the book concern last Thursday morning "that you had been taken by the Indians. "Yes I heard the same," replied the Bishop, "but knew the report was false as soon as I heard it." The Bishop is direct from Colorado City. He had with him a huge stick resembling the solidest hickory, but really only papaw, presented by brother Brockunier, which he carried with him from Wheeling, Virginia, all the way Rocky Mountainward and back. It was a companion and solace in the cars, on the boats, in the stages, and at stations. The Bishop's health is excellent. He left Thursday evening to visit a step-daughter residing in the neighborhood of Linwood, six miles out of the city, and started Friday, we believe, for Baltimore. He attends, as his next Conference, the Cincinnati, which meets at Urbana, August 28th.

For six months past the Bishop has been almost constantly absent from his family, visiting the churches, preaching on special occasions, attending official business meetings of various kinds, etc. The genuine Bishop finds his office no sinecure.

POST OFFICE ADDRESS.—The P. O. Address of Rev. N. L. Brakeman, is New Orleans, Box 692. His correspondents will please send all their letters and communications to him, direct and not to the care N. O. ADVOCATE, or any other parties.

THE FIRST CABLE DISPATCH.—It is said that the first news dispatch sent to Europe by the Atlantic cable comprised a report of the massacre in New Orleans on the 30th of July 1866. It was not a creditable opening for this community, but we can assure our English cousins that we have reformed within the past twelve months.

NUMBER XXI.

"The beautiful—the beautiful
Are faded from our track,
We miss them, and we mourn them,
But cannot lure them back;
For an iron sleep hath bound them
In its passionate embrace,
We may weep, but cannot win them
From their dreary resting place."

"The love that survives the tomb," says Irving, "is one of the noblest attributes of the soul." If it has its woes, it has likewise its delights. There are at times voices from the tomb sweeter than song; there are remembrances of the dead from which we turn even from the charm of the living.

I remember gazing intently into a pair of celestial little eyes as they opened for the first time on terrestrial scenes—and with enthusiastic admiration, I watched the tiny rose bud for a few brief weeks as it unfolded its heaven perfumed petals to the sunlight of earth,—and reflecting a moment on the love that I felt glowing around my own heart toward this little immortal, I exclaimed in my enthusiasm, "Who can fathom the depth of a Mother's love?" The pure joy that filled the heart of Florence and her beloved at the birth of this their first born treasure, scarcely knew any limit; but like unto all of earth's pleasures, it was short lived. You remember, Minnie dear, the gloom that shaded our hearts when the intelligence reached us that little Lucy was dead—and you and Cora hastened to their Parsonage home, only to look upon the little waxen casket sleeping in its coffin-bed. With bitter tears yet with holy trust the fond parents surrendered their cherub babe to the guardianship of angels, whispering amid their tears,

"We know she is safe on the further side,
Where all the ransomed and angels be;
Over the river, the mystic river,
My childhood's idol is waiting for me."

A hemorrhage of the lungs was only another fearful indication that the young Itinerant might ere long plume his own bright wings to fly away, and thus renew the guardianship of their earth-born treasure. During his brief ministry he had already filled several appointments with great success, for his whole soul seemed to be in the work, and many who may shine in his crown of rejoicing, can recall the zeal and ardor with which he unfurled the banner of the cross. The first great trial of his christian life was at the session of Conference, when his physician had informed him that his health would not allow him to take an appointment that year. Every effort was made to stay the hand of the destroyer by the counsel of celebrated physicians, and traveling to different localities, and anon seeking quiet and rest. But when the Autumn leaves were falling an unnatural glow began too tinge his cheek, which we knew too well was the seal placed there by the pale messenger.

One morning Papa awoke and remarked to Mama, "I have dreamed a very singular dream, and somehow it leaves the impression on my mind that our dear Judson will not live long, and that I shall be the next to follow him. In my dream I was out on a calm and beautiful evening, and looking into the western sky, I saw this wonderful phenomenon; two moons were in the firmament; with wonder I stood awile and watched their courses as they were not far apart, until one disappeared, gently sinking beneath the western wave, and the other was rapidly going down as I awoke."

For awhile hope and fear struggled for the ascendency, for with him, we could not indulge the thought that his life-ministry was completed. During the winter illness that followed he appeared more like a seraph than an inhabitant of earth. On his pale brow was the image of the heavenly, while the hectic flush on his palid cheek reminded us that death loves a shining mark, and that an arrow was pointing to his heart. But the angel of death was to him the messenger of the spirit's life sent to unlock the prison house of the soul, and bring to light ineffable, a glorious immortality. At times he even longed for the dull fetters binding him to earth to be broken, that he might join the general assembly and church of the first-born in Heaven, who are led by the great Shepherd into green pastures and beside the living waters.

It was in early spring-time, just as all the trees on all the hills were opening their thousand leaves, that the last moment came, and loving friends stood watching his dying face to catch the bright serephic gleam that on his features played. We thought he had passed the river, when he recovered a little, and said, "why, O why do they delay?" Then as if he heard the dip of the golden oars, or caught a gleam of the snowy sail—he exclaimed "hallelujah! hallelujah! they have come"—and at that moment his lyre on earth rested. But list! the new song with its triumphant strains trembles between the air of earth and heaven, as he touches the strings of his golden harp; and are our mortal ears too dull that we cannot hear?

Only twenty-six bright years had woven their circlets around his youthful brow, but his work was done. His name is still enshrined in the most sacred memories, and the flowers, dear Minnie, pressed between the leaves of this mystic book, we are perusing, emit the most precious odors of his purity and lovliness.

O, is it not a noble thing to die,
As dies the Christian with his armor on!"

How many are willing to brave a long life of conflict to have their names on the scroll of fame, or to listen to one tone from the silver trump—but—

"What are all
The trumpetings of proud humanity,
To the short history of him who made
His sepulchur beside the King of kings."

Our home had changed dear Minnie, Olin had married again, and built him a house on the brow of the hill overlooking the grand old Hudson for miles. The white house where so many of the "lights and shadows" of life had fallen upon our youthful path way, had passed into the hands of strangers, and we were living in a new brick house, built on one part of the old farm, and only a few rods from Olin's. The part on which the dear old homestead stood had been sold, to lighten Papa's burdens in his old age. Strange it did appear in this new house, and yet it was our dear home, for our honored Father and angel Mother were there.

This mysterious book still open before me shows that I had been absent from the family group a half year attending school; and in a brief vacasion came just in time to see dear Judson laid away to rest beside Edith and little Frankie in the country church yard.

Florence in her weeds of mourning, a stricken flower left drooping alone, came back to our home. Weak and worn from constant watching she sank down exhausted, which was followed by fever, and in her delirium she wished and wished for death, to release her from her iron cage, that she might fly away, and be with her noble bird and little birdling, to sing with them in the garden of Paradise. Mama came to her one day as these wild sighs were escaping her lips, and laying her soft hand gently on her fevered brow said, my child, you must not wish for death, God who is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind has done all this, and no doubt for some wise purpose; wipe away your tears my afflicted child, for God has sent you home it may be to care for us in our old age, and watch over us in our last moments, which may not be far in the future. The light will shine when you think what a blessing you may yet be."

The idea that she might live to do good brought back to her the ebbing life, and her spirit revived, as she came from beneath the chasting rod like gold thrice refined, entering again upon life's great duties.

COMMUNICATED.

A Plan for Reclaiming the Mississippi Valley—Re-building the Levees—and Causing the Banks of the river to teem with a prosperous population.

1st. Let the government expropriate the large plantations, on the ground of public utility, and pay the owners their appraised value.

2d. The government could then rebuild the levees, and maintain them in good repair which would so enhance the value, that the plantations could be sold in small lots at an enormous profit.

3d. The government could purchase from all land holders who were willing to sell, and, by division, increase the population, and at the same time adopt a uniform system of levees.

TEMPERANCE IN CONGRESS.—"Ten Minute Speeches" by Hons. Schuyler, Colfax, Henry Wilson, Richard Yates, William E. Dodge, Hiram Price, Samuel McKee, F. E. Woodbridge, J. B. Grinnell, and J. W. Patterson, delivered at the First Meeting of the Congressional Temperance Society, Washington, D. C, with a list of pledged members. New York; S. R. Wells, Publisher, 389 Broadway, N. Y. Price twenty-five cents.

"TEN-MINUTE SPEECHES," on "Temperance in Congress," is beautifully printed on tinted paper, in large, clear letter, and is in every way worthy of the great occasion which called it forth. We would have a copy placed in the hands of every young man in the nation. It would serve to fortify him in resisting temptations, which will soonor or later beset him. Walled in with the best resolutions, he is still liable to fall. This concentrated and powerful appeal will help such a one to keep his resolutions, and must produce conviction in the heart of the skeptic, and hold the convert. Reader, place a copy of "Temperance in Congress" in the hands of the one you love best.

WHEDON'S Commentary On The Gospel.

VOLUME II.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

From the Episcopalian.

This volume completes the authors's exposition of the four Gospels. It is now designed to go through the whole New Testament in the same way, and possibly the Old. If even the New Testament is finished after the author's plan it will form an admirable work, and supersede the use of Barne's Notes except among his partisans. It combines all the latest researches in biblical criticism, including the studies of Lange and others of the same class, and is characterized throughout by careful, patient study, and by great clearness and vigor. The style is at the same time popular, and to no class will the volume prove a valley of dry bones, as is, however, often the case with many works on the same subject.

From the Biblical Repertory and Princeton Review.

It is a matter of gratulation that so many distinguished men of all denominations are turning their attention to the preparation of commentaries on the Holy Scriptures. This volume is written in a clear, terse, and forcible style. There is very little waste of words. The expositions are concise, to the point, and evangelical and edifying. It bids fair to be a very valuable work.

From the Boston Review.

We hail all such evangelical efforts to simplify, explain and diffuse the scriptures among the masses. Such unpretending, yet really very valuable volumes are our best defense against the skepticism and irreligion of the age, and that scholarly, insinuating, and undermining influence that we import from many of the German critics. This volume reminds us strikingly, in form, method, and style, of Barne's Notes, and will be emminently serviceable to the large communion that rejoices in the name of its distinguished author.

From the New Englander.

It seems to be prepared with much care, and exhibits the same result of scholarly investigation to a greater degree than its unpretending character would lead one to anticipate. Sabbath school teachers and others who desire brief and concise annotations on the Gospels, to aid them in their studies and instructions, will find much in this work that will be useful to them.

From the Christian Inquirer.

It is a learned book, gathering up an immense mass of illustrative facts and incidents from all sources, and arranging them in admirable order.

From the Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Whedon's Commentary on the Gospels, which recently made its appearance, is an able and timely production. The author is at present the editor of the Methodist Quarterly Review, and, as an original thinker and vigorous writer has no superior. He possesses the qualifications of a commentator, and the public appreciate his volumes because they contain new ideas, fresh from the laboratory of a cultivated mind. For advanced Bible classes they are unsurpassed, and the Sabbath-schools, recognizing their importance, are introducing them into their course of study. No instructor of youth should be without them, as they shed new light upon many interesting incidents in the life of Jesus.

From the Canada Christian Advocate.

We regard this second volume as fully equal to the first, and both together as being a most valuable and seasonable exposition. It will be a companion to the Bible in many houses, and will enable, we trust, many, many thousands to feed upon the blessed word with increasing profit and relish. It was not uncalled, and it will not be unwelcomed or unprized. Its "popular use" will be another important instrumentality in educating the Church, and raising the intelligence of religious professors to something like what the times require. It will be found a valuable assistant to teachers and members of Bible classes. We wish the author health and leisure to complete the commentary on the entire New Testament.

From the Independent.

Dr. Whedon has won a marked place in religious and theological literature by the strength and polish of his pen. His commentary on Matthew and Mark attracted no small attention from its style, no less than its treatment of the topics of the text. It is less discursive and less accumulative than Lange, whose work is a thesaurus as much as an original effort. Yet it is hardly less sagacious and profound. Though brief it is not shallow. Compact with thought often strikingly expressed, it gives the essence of the Gospel in its vitals. He has expounded Luke more ably than Oosterzee; though John is deemed by him the crucial test of the volume, as it really is of the Bible. Many passages merit quotation, whether of the thought or the expression, for which, however, we have no room. His argument, in chapter ix, against Hume's famous doctrine on miracles, is one of the briefest and best we remember to have seen. Clergymen and Sunday-school teachers will find much nourishment in this series of volumes that is intended to include the whole of the New Testament.

PEMBERTON'S
"Carbolic Acid Disinfectant."

This Powder is a compound of Carbolic Acid Copperas, etc., possessing the properties of destroying contagion, decomposing pestilential effluvia, noxious exhalations, and neutralizing strong and offensive odors; removing the effluvia of sick rooms, sewers, cesspools, sinks, privies, etc.

It far surpasses the Chlorinated Lime in its actions and effects, and is certainly the best Disinfectant now in use. Thoroughly disinfecting the atmosphere, electrifying the oxygen and rendering the respirable air both healthy and pure, being entirely free from all injurious effects on the throat and lungs, which so frequently attend the use of deodorizers.

MEDICAL.

DR. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,
127 CARONDELET STREET,

Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of dis ease, Chronic, and Acute

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient, that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years, in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient, if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet Street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city ☞ Consultation free—stamps not "forgotten."

MASON & HAMLIN,

MANUFACTURERS OF

CABINET ORGANS,

ALSO

PORTABLE ORGANS,

ADAPTED TO SECULAR AND SACRED MUSIC, FOR DRAWING-ROOMS, CHURCHES, SUNDAY AND DAY SCHOOLS, LODGES, &C., &C.

Uniting to a considerable extent the capacity of the Piano-Forte with that of the Pipe-Organ, and costing much less than either.

They occupy little space; are elegant as furniture; not liable to get out of order, and are securely boxed, so that they can be sent anywhere by ordinary freight routes, all ready for use.

Forty styles, plain or elegant cases; one to twelve stops; Prices, $75, $90, $110, $125, $130, $1 0, $150, $160, $170, $200, $225, $250, $300, $435, $540, $550, $600, and upwards.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs were introduced four years since, and are a great improvement upon the Melodeon, Harmonium, and other reed organs, greatly excelling them especially in the excellent quality and variety of their tones; in power and quickness of action, and capacity for expression.

THEIR SUCCESS HAS BEEN ENTIRELY BEYOND PRECEDENT,

and proves how greatly such an instrument was needed. Again and again the manufacturers have been compelled to double their manufacturing facilities, until they have been increased six-fold. From the most eminent of the musical profession, the most distinguished pianists, organists, composers, and musical directors, the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs have received an amount and degree of commendation never before bestowed upon any similar musical instrument. More than two hundred and fifty of the most eminent musicians in the country have given written testimonials to the value of the improvements contained in them, and that they excel all other instruments of this class.

FIFTY-TWO GOLD OR SILVER MEDALS, or other highest Premiums have been awarded to Mason & Hamlin for the important improvements effected by them, and for the

SUPERIORITY OF THEIR INSTRUMENTS TO ALL OTHERS.

Constantly exhibiting their instruments in competition with others, they have been awarded the highest premium in every instance, but three or four.

For churches, sunday schools, etc., the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs are the instruments long wanted, of the very best quality, abundant power, not too expensive, nor liable to get out of order.

For private use, in drawing-rooms, &c., they are not less desirable, and are finding a place in the musical families of the principal cities.

They are adapted to a wider range of music than the piano, being fitted for all sacred music and for much secular music, while their quickness of action is such that the music tively, rapid music can be played on them. Then their cost is greatly less, as well as their liability to get out of order.

BRIEF EXTRACTS FROM OPINIONS OF DISTINGUISHED MUSICIANS.

I should think they would become very much sought after as parlor instruments as well as for public performance.—Sigismond Thalberg, the world-renowned Pianist. Sure to find its way into every household of taste and refinement which can possibly afford its moderate expenses. Far superior to everything of its class I have seen.—L. M. Gottschalk, the eminent Pianist. Such pure musical tones, promptness and smoothness of action and fine variety of effect, I have not found in any other instrument of the class.—S. B. Mills, the eminent Pianist. Really so excellent that there can hardly be much difference of opinion respecting them.—William Mason, the eminent Pianist. The best instrument of its class with which I am acquainted, and worthy a place in every drawing room. Harry Sanderson, the eminent Pianist. In every respect far superior to everything I have ever seen of the kind, whether in Europe or America.—Geo. Washbourne Morgan the eminent organist, N. Y. I can only reiterate what so many in the musical profession have said, that for equality, promptness and exquisite tone, they are unequalled.—John H. Wilcox, the eminent Organist, Boston. Surpasses everything in this line I have ever seen, whether French or American.—Jon Zundel, the eminent Organist, N. Y. The best reed instruments in the world are made in the United States, and your Cabinet Organs are greatly superior, and by far the best made here.—Max Maretzer, Musical Conductor, N. Y. Far surpasses all other similar instruments, which have come under my observation.—Carl Zerhau, Musical Conductor, Boston. Exceeds in my estimation every other instrument of this general class. Thos. Hastings. I can recommend them with confidence.—Lowell Mason. As soon as the people become acquainted with the superior merits of your instruments, your only trouble will be to supply the demand.—Wm. B. Bradbury. I have never seen anything of the kind which interested me so much.—Geo. F. Root. Exciting much interest in musical circles, and already becoming the fashion. N. Y. Home Journal The highest accomplishment of industry in this department. This is not only our opinion, but the unanimous verdict of the organists.—Boston Advertiser. A glorious instrument for the temple service, so readily secured as to be available for any congregation, and effective and beautiful as to meet the desires of the most refined and fastidious.—N. Y. Observer.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs must not be confounded with other reed instruments, from which they vary essentially, their superiority veing largely derived from PATENTED IMPROVEMENTS, which cannot be employed by other makers. Among them are,

The AUTOMATIC BELLOWS SWELL, patented, a most important invention, and greatly the best swell ever devised being much more effective and easily used than any other. The variety and beauty of effect of which it is capable, can not be appreciated except from actual use. The many attempts to imitate or find a substitute for this swell, prove its value. None of them, however, approach it in excellence and simplicity.

IMPROVED SELF-ADJUSTING VALVES patented, secure much more perfect action, durability, and freedom from liability to get out of order.

WOOD'S OCTAVE COUPLET patented, in effect nearly doubles the power of the instrument in which it is used.

NOISELESS SAFETY VALVES patented, prevent the hissing sound often heard.

The IMPROVED COMBINATION REGISTER patented, gives great facility in drawing stops.

ALSIE ARGON.

BY LU BILLINGS SPALDINGS.

Alsie Argon had a lover,
He was brave and he was noble,
And his heart beat true to Alsie,
For he'd loved that maiden long.
But, one morn he came unto her,
In a uniform of blue.
And he said "my gentle Alsie,
I must say good-bye, to you."

Do not look so frightened Alsie,
Surely I'll come back again,
When the bees are on the clover,
And the daisy in the lane.
See! this arm is strong and sturdy,
Shall I bind it to my side?
When my country's cause is calling,
Singing on this crimson tide?

No, my Alsie, I'm no coward,
Give me dear your your gentle prayers
When at night you seek your slumbers,
When all earth to calm repairs,
That, is all that you can aid me,
They will make me strong and true,
And forever Alsie darling,
Will my heart beat true to you."

Not a word did Alsie utter,
But she sank down cold and pale
On the door stone where he'd left her,
Very cold, and very pale,
And she watched him going from her,
Going from her down the lane;
And her eye was full of anguish,
And her heart was full of pain.

Softly, blew the fall wind laden
With the russet's, mellow scent,
And the mellon's creamy perfume
On the breezes softly lent.
But her lambs, her doves, her fishes,
Had no power to charm her heart,
For her soul was with her lover,
It could never from him part.

* * * * * * *

One fall day a slender stripling,
Listed for the fight; he said
He'd a friend, [perhaps a brother,]
That he wished to join he said.
Pale, and golden were the ripples
Of his silky hair so bright,
And his eye was blue and tender,
Full of earnest, wishful light.

So, they took the slender stripling,
And he donned the suit of blue,
Strapped his knapsack on his shoulder,
With a heart so brave and true,
Very slight, and very slender,
Seemed he for a warrior brave,
But his soul was in his purpose,
And his mien was very grave.

And his captain loved the private;
Loved him for his gentle ways;
Spoke him kindly, cheered him onward,
Through the long and rugged days,
For the lad seemed ever near him,
And a mournful wistful light,
Trembled ever in his glances,
Lingered ever in their light.

And at night his weary slumbers
Oft were filled with visions dear,
And a face like Alsie Argon's,
Oft he fancied lingered near—
But the vision ever vanished,
In a pale uncertain shadow,
When in broken slumber glanced he,
Through the darkness settled o'er him.

Madly broke a fearful battle,
Boomed the cannon deep and wild,
While the blackening drift of dying.
Lay along the valleys piled,
Hotly, rattled showers of bullets,
Shrieks of dying, groans of pain,
Surely, never fought a braver,
Or a bolder band than they.

All that day the stripling warrior,
Fought close by his captain's side;
Guarding off the blows that threatened,
Caring naught for else beside.
With his young face grim with powder,
And his pale locks red with gore,
Still, he fought beside his captain,
Bleeding, wounded, oer and oer.

Now and then a look he gathered,
From his leader brave and bold;
And his heart took strength for action,
While he fought with zeal untold,
But alas, a fatal bullet,
Pierced that young and generous heart,
And he murmuered, "Edward! Edward!
Oh, my love, my life, we part."

Then, the captain knew 'twas Alsie,
Alsie Argon, she it was,
Who had hovered ever near him,
His own bride dead in his cause
And he sank down pale beside her,
Strove to staunch the crimson tide,
Called her, by all names endearing,
Called her, his own, darling bride,
But she did not hear his pleading,
Cold, her heart grew in her breast,
And the soul of Alsie Argon,
Fled unto its holy rest.

In the simple, quiet church-yard,
Of her peaceful, childhood's home,
Lies the mound of Alsie Argon,
Over which the sad winds moan,
Kindly, droops the willow o'er her,
And the lilies pure and white
Spill their perfume o'er her ashes,
While her spirit reigns in light.

Martyrs many, know our country,
Who have suffered, fought and died.
But none greater or more noble,
Than this loving little maid,
Manhood suffers through his honor,
Lest his country's pride depart,
Bound within her gentler sphere
Woman suffers through her heart.

THE MASS MEETING

GATHERING OF THE CLANS.

Fifteen Thousand People in Lafayette Square.

SHERIDAN ENTHUSIASTICALLY INDORSED.

PRESIDENT JOHNSON DENOUNCED

The following report of this meeting is from the N. O. Republican.

At seven o'clock last night an immense number of people assembled in Lafayette square in response to the call published in the morning papers, calling for a meeting to give expression of the people of New Orleans regarding the threatened removal of General Sheridan

The stand was well lighted up and ornamented with numerous flags. Seats were provided for about two hundred persons.

At an early hour a large number of people assembled, and the rapid accession swelled the aggregate to at least fifteen thousand.

At half-past seven the meeting was called to order by Henry C. Dibble, Esq., who nominated Hon. Charles Smith for president. The nomination was unanimously concurred in.

The president, Hon. Charles Smith, then announced the object of the meeting to be, to give expression to the feeling of the Union men of New Orleans in regard to the threatened removal of General Sheridan from the command of the fifth military district a man distinguished as a statesman and a soldier, who had fought well and successfully for the liberty we now enjoy.

The president then introduced Judge Heistand, who responded in a very brief address, which was well received by the people. The judge remarked that he was absent from the city when the suggestions were first made to hold this meeting. He could say from his knowledge of General Sheridan, that he did not desire, so far as he was personally concerned, such a demonstration as this. He is a man who performs his duty, regardless of the likes or dislikes of any. But he has been sent here to restore the two States of Louisiana and Texas to the places they occupied before they had been torn in tatters by treason. And he will continue to do his duty until the work is accomplished, unless his hand is stayed by His Accidency. At first General Sheridan did not stand out with that energy that many good Union men wished for. The General's acts were reviewed for his supposed reasons for acting and refusing to act, as explained by the speaker, seemed to be deemed satisfactory by the audience. He claimed that General Sheridan's acts were approved by the legal representatives of the people of Congress, and of the people themselves. He felt authorized to utter the protest of the Southern American people against the removal of General Sheridan by Andrew Johnson.

Rufus Waples, Esq., was the next speaker. He showed that General Sheridan was invested with a two-fold capacity—an officer in the army of the United States and a civil officer under the enabling acts of Congress. He took the position that he could not be relieved from his civil duties, because of the prohibition contained in the tenure of office laws. Congress, has in the opinion of the speaker, enacted many excellent laws, but they have neglected an important part of their duties—the impeachment of the incompetent president. There was abundant reason for impeachment in the notorious fact that he has neglected and refused to execute the laws of Congress. The speaker extended his remarks to some length, and was attentively listened to by the people.

Col. Campbell then read the following:

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, That the congressional plan for the reconstruction of the rebel States, as embodied in the law known as the military bill and the acts supplementary thereto, being the expression of the maturely considered and deliberate will of the people of the United States, has been proven by experience, to have been as wise in conception and beneficient in its practical results as it is unexampled in the history of nations for leniency and moderation toward the late enemies of the government.

That under the opposing policy of the president these States were fast becoming the theatres of tyrannical proscription, endless anarchy and misrule; for the proof of which we refer to the bloody massacres of New Orleans and Memphis, and to the mobs, riots and murders of Union men which so shamefully illustrated the dominance of the rebel factions under the policy '65 and '66.

That among the beneficient results of congressional policy we enumerate the guaranteeing of equal rights, before the law, and the extension of suffrage to all men irrespective of color, the protection of life and liberty, and the rights of a free press and free speech, the making of treason odious, the development of a spirit of hearty loyalty to the United States, and the placing of these States on the road to a speedy resumption of their rights and duties under the constitution.

Resolved, That in view of the rapid and harmonious progress made in the states of Louisiana and Texas in the work of reconstruction under the wise and skillful administration of General Sheridan, and of the prospect before us thereby of that speedy relief which all our interests—material, political, educational and social—so imperatively demand, we, the loyal people of Louisiana do earnestly and solemnly deprecate his removal, and declare that such removal would send a chill to every loyal heart, and revive the hopes of every rebel, and seriously retard the work of reconstruction. And we ask our fellow citizens of the North to let the voice of the people be heard again in its majesty, declaring that their tried and faithful servant in the discharge of his duty, MUST AND SHALL BE SUSTAINED.

Resolved, That in Major General P. H. Sheridan we recognize not only the brave and distinguished soldier, but the practical and far-seeing statesman, and more than either, the honest man; that by his pluck and sagacity in courageously executing the reconstruction laws according to their true spirit and intent, and in removing from office "bad men" and defiant rebels who were impediments to the speedy reconstruction of these States, he initiated the proper execution of these laws throughout the South, strengthened the party of the Union everywhere, and has placed Louisiana and Texas foremost in the path of reconstruction.

Interesting speeches were made by Col, Boyd and Dr. Newman, who were followed by Governor A. J. Hamilton who addressed the meeting in his usual eloquent and effective manner for about fifteen minutes, in which he spoke of the loyal men, women and children of Texas being the friends of Gen. Sheridan, and that their prayers are ascending to heaven for his retention as commander of the fifth military district.

Revelations About Mexico.

Bit by bit particulars relating to Napoleon's attempt to introduce foreign usurpation and misrule into Mexico are becoming known, and the inevitable conclusion at which every one who impartially considers them must be that, to use a familiar phrase, the astute "Nephew of my Uncle" lost his head and went out of his depth when he involved himself in that muddle. Up to that time he had succeeded in everthing that he put his hand to after his election to the Presidency of the Republic, in 1848. He had gained personal and political popularity and favor in France; he had strengthened the friendly relations of England toward that country; he had obtained a renewed lease of office by the coup d' etat of December, 1851; he had been elected Emperor by a vast number of votes; he had conciliated public opinion by marrying a handsome young woman who had no blood-royal in her veins; he had arrayed England, France, and Sardinia against the ambition and attempted autocracy of Russia in the East; he had covered France with glory during that hard strife in the Crimea, wherein her soldiers were reputed to have fought better than their new English allies; he had thrown his shield over Victor Emanuel, and given him that important aid which, wresting Lombardy from Austria, had made that prince King of Italy. But then, on a sudden, came the invasion of Mexico, after which everything went badly, ending with the downfall and death of Maximilian, a man worthy of a better fate, who ought not to have been misled by ambition, as he was.

MM. Thiers, and Jules Favre have plainly stated the facts of this Mexican case. It appears that Napoleon stirred in it as early as 1860, but did not care to commit himself by any overt act, so long as there was a chance of interference by the United States. When the rebellion broke out, in 1861, Napoleon shared in the general European opinion that it must end, after a long contest, in the disintegration of the United States. The rebellion actually began, (he waited until the news of the disaster of Bull Run reached him); Napoleon wrote to Maximilian, offering him the throne of Mexico. After consultation with his near relatives, most of whom thought it a fine chance for him, Maximilian accepted. Some weeks after this, the Treaty of London was signed, whereby France, England and Spain agreed to collect debts due in Mexico, their people solemnly pledging themselves, before the world, not to interfere with the mode of government in Mexico. That pledge was violated by Napoleon, whose legions forcibly occupied the City of Mexico, where, by direction of his officer (Marshal Forey) a mock election of Maximilian, as Emperor, was made. The crown was formerly offered to Maximilian in October, 1863, but he did not accept it until April, 1864, and then, with a saving clause: "Provided that the majority of the Mexican people should declare for me." Without waiting for this, and never asking for it, Maximilian hastened to Mexico. We know the rest.

There were six months between the offer of the Mexican crown to Maximilian and his acceptance. During that time he consulted his family. Most of the princes of Austria, his nearest of blood, advised him to accept. His wife, young and handsome, whom he dearly loved, and who had great influence on his mind, was also in favor of his becoming Emperor of Mexico. He had consultations with his wife's uncles, the Princess of the Orleans' line and her cousins, the Count de Paris, and the Duc de Chartres; also with his wife's cousin, Queen Victoria, of England; lastly, be sure, with that world-wise and veteran politician, King Leopold, of Belgium, his father-in-law. The Emperor of Austria, his elder brother, alone is said to have had a dolorous conviction that it would end badly, and that the old fable of the Dog and the Shadow might be realized. But the majority was in favor of Maximilian's accepting the crown. We dwell on the fact because it shows by what an irresistible fate this unfortunate young man was led to a country where his doom was death. But it was Napoleon who tempted him; in fact, Napoleon and Maximilian were conspirators against the Republic of Mexico long before the tripartite party of London was signed on the last day of October, 1861. As Prince Albert was then alive, consulted by Queen Victoria, his wife, upon all important matters, the chances are a million to one that he, also, knew what was to be the French action in Mexico, and what preferment (?) it was to give Maximilian, his cousin by marriage.

M. Thiers estimates the whole cost of the Mexican adventure at 600,000,000 francs, which is equal to $120,000,000. M. Jules Favre puts it as high as 800,000,000 francs, money as much lost to France as if it had been thrown into the deepest part of the Atlantic. In the reply on the part of the French Government, M. Rouher ingeniously avoided any reference to this matter of expense.

It is said that Maximilian's papers were taken over to Europe by the Empress Carlotta, that they consist of his diary and correspondence, and that they are in the hands of the Duc d'Aumale, Carlotta's uncle, who has some reputation as a man of letters, and is expected to edit and publish them. As Napoleon has prevented the publication and circulation of the Duke's pamphlets in France, and as the Orleans family have a grudge against him, for confiscating their father's property, a racy book may be expected, should it appear. A rumor that Louis Blanc would edit Maximilian papers cannot be correct, for he is equally at drawn daggers with the Bonaparte and Orleans dynasties. We have no doubt that some startling disclosures about Mexico, Napoleon, and Maximilian, will soon be made. Washington Chronicle.

For the New Orleans Advocate,

Two Thousand Miles Away.

BY REV. CHARLES M. GIFFIN.

In our own land, as in no other, we can travel until we grow weary of the journey and sigh for rest, all the while remaining within our own dominions. Since Russian America has become a part of us we can furnish range enough for the most wandering disposition. From New Orleans to St Paul is far enough for one trip. To those dwelling in the petty kingdoms of Europe it would seem impossible that you can ride on palatial steamboats with the speed of a bird and after 12 days of such travel on one river, leave 100 miles at one end and 500 miles at the other end untraveled, and yet all the while sailing under the smiles of our starry flag; such a trip we have taken, and write to-day from St. Paul, the capital of the State of Minnesota. In passing over such a distance it is to be expected we will reach another climate, so we do, but the difference is less noticeable at this season of the year than any other, when the thermometer is 40° below zero, the ground covered with ice and snow, the frozen particles in the air shining in the sunlight like floating brilliants, while all mankind wrap themselves in furs when venturing from their homes, while you have balmy breezes bearing delightful fragrance on their soft hands, flowers opening their petals to the sun that every beam may help to paint their beauty, and you clad in thin clothing, then there is a contrast between New Orleans and Minnesota, now vegetation is thrifty as with you, the mercury rises nearly as high in mid-day as in New Orleans, and we have a nearer approach to your summer than you can have to our winter. One thing here is splendid, that is the cool nights. After sweltering all day, to roll in heated torment through the night, then rise to another day's toils, but poorly prepared by your attempts at sleep, is very different from the cool, almost cold nights here, when the arms of morpheus hold you so snugly that you go forth on the morrow to the needful task "rejoicing as a strong man to run a race." The languid look so often seen in the South, does not prevail here. There is a freshness and robustness noticeable, that is the effect of the invigorating climate. If any who read this article should come here, and meeting the halting wasted form, think they see a contradiction, such will find that these came here as hopeless invalids. Once the sunny south was the resort of those affected with pulmonary diseases.

By two many sad cases it has been found that the moisture of the air is fatal. The balmy breeze may relieve some, but in most cases there is a need of the bracing powers to be found only in a cold clear atmosphere. That it is cold in Minnesota, no one can doubt, who will look at the weather record for a single year. That it is dry can be demonstrated by proper test. You never see mists and fogs, even when it rains it is not wet! We mean there is not that chilly dampness as felt in other places where rain is falling. When the shower is past, the air feels light and inspiring. The atmosphere is clear as a crystal. It is remarkable how far you can stretch your vision on a clear Minnesota morning. Standing on a bluff overhanging the city of Red Wing, I was pointed beyond to a distant range of hills. Down the sides of the lofty bluff on which I was standing, along the valley of the Mississippi in its wanderings, grasping small lakes in the view, on and over and up the side of the hills beyond, my eye passed over twety miles in an air line and rested on a sand pile jetting up from one of the range of hills. On its summit a wooden cross had been planted which has been seen distinctly on very clear days from the bluff where I stood. As I gazed away into the far off, I thought of faith's outlook from whence with clear eye, it overlooks the inviting beauties of the world beneath, that on Calvary it may see the cross with its dying man and be hold in him the power to pardon, and the strength to save, I felt to pray for a clear atmosphere and strong eye that I might ever see him as the Lamb of God taking away my sins

This is a new country, and yet you see much that looks settled and established. It is remarkable how fast the newly populated states put on the appearance of age. You see the first tide of emigration, and can hardly think of change until you look upon a prosperous state beautiful in its development. The chaotic or formation state is soon past, soon the state stands forth equal in rights with her more aged sisters, and in many cases their superior in all that constitutes a vigorous present and promises a glorious future. Emigration is filling the state with citizens, that are to work out its coming greatness. Many of these are Swedes and Norwegians, seeking in this cold section for something that is akin to their ice bound native land. As I saw file after file of the emigrant wagons drawn by oxen filled with furniture and farming implements, I could but sigh that there was not a stream of honest labor pouring into your beautiful country. The once slaveholding states are blind in not encouraging the advent of those who are willing to take ruins, and by toil, build out of them a lovely superstructure. A Macedonion cry becomes the impoverished south, "come over and help us." They need imported capital and vigorous labor although the first be greenbacks, and the second yankee arms. Religion labors under disadvantages in a new country. The settlements are new and far apart, the people poor or limited in circumstances, and worse than all the speculative fever is so high that men run mad about real estate and think nothing about soul bargains. Against these and all oppositions, our Methodism has led the van of other churches, while all have made creditable progress. Between your toils and ours there is sufficient likeness to create a sympathy. We take unused materials to build our prosperity, you take the ruins of the past to construct a blessed future. From two thousand miles away, we hail your toils in the sunny South, recognizing you as our fellows in the labor of love, and pray that you in re-constructing may be as successful as we hope to be in shaping the moral future of this growing state.

ST. PAUL, Minn. July 1867.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 29, 1867.

MY DEAR DOCTOR NEWMAN:

I enclose an article from the "Washington Chronicle," of the 28th which I thought you might like to see. The secret ally of the combination to break up our government, is beginning to feel the recoil of that wicked plot upon his own head, and mark the prediction, "Mexico will yet prove the Waterloo of the third Napoleon." It may be years hence, but it is the begining of the end. Since leaving New Orleans, I have been travelling most of the time in the Northwest. That is yet to be the controlling section of the country. It is six years since I have been in it and the change is marvellous. Towns, farms and great fields of grain are now, where ten years ago, it was virgin prairie.

I think Kansas and Missouri are improving most rapidly in population and Kansas especially is bound to be a great and wealthy State. She has not the mineral wealth of Missouri, but she has an unsurpassed soil, a climate most salubrious, wood in sufficient quantities, and the very best of water, and an abundance of stone underlying her whole formation—and more than all, she has a live active working population. They fought single-handed to make it a free State. And they made it so with a vengeance. It is the most progressive Radical State in the union, and Missouri so long the stamping ground of the Border Ruffian element of the country, with the exodus of one set, and the influx of another set of men is beginning to bear fruits of the atmosphere of Northern ideas which is sweeping down upon her. Dr. this is all God's work. He intends this country, a very garden in richness of soil, for his creatures who earn their bread by the sweet of the brow. In due time the same causes have made Kansas free, and labor honorable, and which are redeeming Missouri from her old curse, will roll onward to the gulf, like the waters of the Mississippi, and the time will yet come when the people of these extreme Southern States will begin to appreciate that it is just as honorable to gain money by labor as it is to steal from some less powerful, or intelligent human being. The day may be far distant, but it is sure to come. Now they are waiting for emigration of the Irish, or the Dutch, or Coolies, or somebody to come and be new "hewers of wood and drawers of water" for them, but they will see the Millenium before any such class will be in sight. The only thing that can save the South is the appreciation among the people that labor is honorable, and if God cannot bring them to that idea any other way he will starve them to to it. I have been upon the wing so much that I am behind the news in regard to New Orleans matters. I hope everything is working for good, and I have faith that it will. There will be some clashing of interests and ideas as to politics, but in the main the result will be progress, and errors will correct themselves in time. Do not faint in well doing, for the end will be sure to compensate for all annoyances. These delays and hindrances to reconstruction are all for the best. They are not defeats by any means, but are, through Providence, legislative Bull Runs, that will save instead of ruin the country.

Your Friend
W. T. Nichols.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 10 1867.

A NEW CHIEF OF POLICE

Headquarters Fifth Military District
New Orleans, La., August 8, 1867.

Special Orders No. 111.

(Extract.)

* * * * *

4. At the request of his honor Mayor Heath, of the city of New Orleans, Thomas E. Adams, chief of police of that city, is hereby removed from his office, and J. J. Williamson is appointed chief of police in his stead.

* * * *

By command of Major Gen. P. H. Sheridan.

Geo. L. Hartsuff,
Assistant Adjut. Gen.

SHERIDAN.

Elsewhere in the Advocate, will be found some account of the public demonstration made on last Tuesday night, against the threatened removal of Maj. General Sheridan from the command of this military district. It was a spontaneous outpouring of the loyal people of this city, which was the more emphatic and eloquent, because it was improvised. The morning papers announced the meeting and thousands responded to the call. Had twenty-four hours been added to the notice, thousands would have been added to the thousands in attendance. But the multitude present and the enthusiasm displayed, indicated the profound feeling on the subject. The voice of the people is, "Sheridan must not and shall not be removed." Some of the city dailies, in the vain attempt to counteract the powerful influence of the meeting, stated, that the audience was colored; this is not true, for there were many white citizens present; yet this is of little importance. It is well known that the majority of the white citizens of our community are in sympathy with Mr. Johnson and not with Congress; and it is equally true, that politically a colored man now counts as much as a white man.

On the adjournment of the meeting, the people repaired en masse, to General Sheridan's residence, and after music by the band and round after round of cheers, the General appeared on his balcony and said: "I cannot make a speech, but I sincerely thank you for this expression of approval of my administration. Your presence affords me great gratification; and as in the past, so in the future, I shall endeavor to discharge my duty with fidelity." These brief words were hailed with enthusiastic cheers by the people who seemed equally gratified that the General had responded to their call.

STANTON.

To what depths has Johnson fallen! The American people refuse to honor him; Congress no longer trusts him; his own cabinet decline to respect him. Poor Johnson! "How have the mighty fallen!" How he has missed his history! He has reached the vanishing point of nothing.

But Stanton—brave, patriotic, faithful Stanton: friend of Lincoln; trusty guardian of the people's rights; how he has stood like a wall of brass against the besotted degeneracy of Johnson.

The President informs his Secretary that "considerations of public interest will persuade me to accept your resignation, if tendered;" but his Secretary replies, "considerations of public interest have prevailed with me to hold this office for months past, and considerations of public interest will prevail with me, to hold it till the assembling of Congress." Heroic man!

The Tribune and the Levees.

The most sensible article we have seen upon this important subject, in the columns of the New Orleans press, appeared in the Tribune last week. The suggestor of the temporary nature of the levee system, and the increasing danger with every year resulting from the gradual rise in the bed of the river caused by forcing the deposits of the freshets to be deposited there instead of over the surface of the adjoining lands, is worthy of more serious attention than it has hitherto received. Its remarks upon the system of dykes and of diverting and carrying off the excess of waters, instead of damming it up are reasonable. We refer to the subject now, to call the attention of any of our readers who may be well informed upon the methods in use in different countries in dealing with such freshets as those of the Mississippi, to the matter, intending at another time to discuss it more fully.

ADDRESS
OF PROF. A. C. McDONALD.

Delivered in Wesley Chapel at the Exhibition of the Thomson Biblical Institute.

The exercises you have just witnessed, in connection with the examnations of preceeding evenings, indicate to some extent the methods pursued in the Thomson Biblical Institute for the past seven months. These young men from whom you have heard to-night, and others who have been associated with them as students, have at least learned that study is no idle pastime; that to succeed they must be ready for hard work. When we take into consideration their previous limited advantages, and the short period they have been engaged in their studies, their progress we trust, may be considered encouraging.

The present is, and should be, to you an occasion of much interest. Among the privileges which, in this great era, have been conferred upon you none should be more highly prized, or more conscientiously improved than that of a christian education. In these days of bursting chains and liberated mind you have suddenly stepped out in the broad paths of human progress, with equal facilities as others to press forward in the race for improvement. You share to-night in the literary festivities of the first institution of its grade in the South, established on the basis of equal privileges to all. You are at the opening dawn of a higher life, through whose grand portals you, and your children, may pass from the darkness of ages to the brightness of a new and lustrious day. It is well to appreciate this hour and understand its duties.

I wish on this occasion to call attention to the advantages and necessity of a liberal education.

But what is education? Some seem to think its main purpose is to impart information; that the student is a sort of receptacle to be stuffed by his teacher with various knowledge. But that is not its leading object. The student while under training may, and if attentive will receive much valuable information, but the true aim of an education is to develop, lead out, the various powers of the mind. Were you preparing for some feat of extraordinary physical agility or strength, you would find the necessity of a training that would develop to their full capacity the muscles that would require to be exerted. The exercises in which you would engage under this preparatory training would be valuable only as they secured this development. So in preparing for great mental exertions, there must be much previous training of the mind. To give this training, is the chief object of the studies pursued in our institutions of learning.

In advancing a student, the first care of an intelligent instructor is to quicken the perceptive faculties, to brighten the mental eye, and give clearness and vigor to the intellect. Much depends on vividness and distinctness of mental vision. You go upon a steamer, pass into the pilot house and look out on the smooth expanse of lake or river. To your unpracticed eye every portion of it seems equally navigable. But the trained eye of the pilot looking on the same scene, discerns that beneath the glassy surface there are hidden sands, or treacherous rocks, or dangerous snags, and discovers also the deep channel in which his vessel may glide in safety. Two persons look upon the same book. To one it is little else than a combination of difficult words, to which he can attach only vague and confused ideas; the other sees the same letters, syllables, words, sentences—but, couched in those sentences, he perceives valuable truths, golden thoughts, bright-winged fancies, and, like the miner amid glittering sands, gathers priceless treasures. What training is to the pilot, what long experience is to him who prospects for gems or gold, so is education to the eye of the mind. It trains it to see clearly and to grasp firmly the truths presented before it.

The student must also be trained to think; and what is thinking? It is simply ability to pass from one idea to another and to return back to it at will. Some are greatly deficient in this ability. There are those of reasonably quick perceptions, who seem utterly incompetent to link two ideas together. Education trains to think and every advance step tends to increase this power. When you take two letters and with them form a syllable you are thinking; when you unite two or more syllables and form a word you are thinking; when you combine words into a sentence you are thinking; when you study the wonders of nature, investigate the sources of being, and discover the operation of mysterious laws you are thinking; when from nature the mind rises through various gradations until it takes in vast and grand conceptions of the great Creator, you are still thinking. Many of the studies pursued in obtaining a liberal education are valued chiefly as cultivating the attention and leading to close, connected thought.

As we advance in the domain of the intellect we encounter a still higher faculty; the power of discriminating as to the quality of ideas, the ability to compare our thoughts and judge of their agreement or disagreement with each other. This most exalted of the mental powers can be developed only in part by the schools. The Natural, Mental, Moral and Political Sciences furnish a fine field for the exercise of the judgment. Logic furnishes valuable rules for its training; but a sound understanding, a sober, reliable judgment, is rather the product of long experience in practical or professional life than of scholastic training.

A complete analysis of the powers to be trained by education, would require us to speak of the cultivation of taste, that nicer form of discrimination based upon the sense of propriety; of memory, that ability of the mind by which we treasure up ideas; of imagination, that grandest of the mental powers by which we combine ideas in new and charming associations. From this brief survey of the objects of education you can readily see that its great purpose is to bring the mind to its highest possible standard of excellence and power. Such an education requires time, labor and expenditure of means. Continued effort is essential to success. Let no one who sits down idly, waiting to be carried through his mental processes by the aid of his teacher, dream of success. There is no royal road to learning. The hill of science is steep and difficult and if from its lofty summit you would look out on the enchanting prospect, you must reach it by unremitting endeavors. Your greatest want is invincible determination, and with this you will succeed, with or without a teacher. He who understands the alphabet, has in possession the key to all human knowledge. There is no attainment possible for man to which he may not aspire; he may exact from nature her secrets, mount the chariot of the clouds, and walk amid the stars.

But if you would rise to heights of excellence, you must pay to the utmost her unyielding exactions. She refuses to be cheated, and crowns with unfading laurels only those who fulfill her stipulations. None may tread her airy halls or range her delightful gardens who fail to produce the proper requisites for admission. Do you ask, then, whether this treasure of a liberal education is worth the price? You, yourself, must be the judge; each one carves his own destiny; each one for himself must pay the price of his own advancement. If there be, however, among these students or in this assembly a young man or young lady who aspires to an elevated life, and is willing to make the effort to attain it, let me sketch briefly for your encouragement a few of its advantages.

A liberal education will render you efficient in the world of mind. A constant want of the world is efficient men and women. Whether it be to saw wood, or cultivate a field, or build a house—we demand efficient men; and skill even in these ordinary avocations comes only by years of application. How much higher the preparation necessary for you who expect to grapple the influences that control the world of mind. There is no work of man more difficult than this; there is no power like brain power; mind rules the world. If you look into the sources of mental power, you will find that all great kings of thought have been men of thoroughly developed minds. The road to that development may not always have lain through college halls, but it has ever been through paths of persistent application. The era on which we now enter calls for cultivated minds, and it will have them. For the pulpit, for the bar, for the medical profession, for the fine arts, for all the seats of power it will accept of none but efficient men. Such, my young friends, resolve that you will become, or leave at once the race to others.

The thorough education for which we plead will secure for you honorable position and influence. There has been much needless anxiety and maneuver to gain position. It is but natural that men should wish their merits to be recognized. Their self-respect, their happiness—more, their usefullness, depends on securing proper recognition. But the road to this is plain. It lies not amid the labyrinths of diplomatic art, but on the open ground of honest merit. True merit cannot be long obscured. Friends may prove treacherous, enemies may combine, but genuine merit, however modest, will in the end be clad in triumphal robes. Do with it as you may, the diamond will always sparkle, the gem ever shed its serene ray. Only be the pure gold, and it lies not in mortals to depreciate your worth. You determine your own position.

Every rightly educated man is a general blessing to society; a public benefactor to his race. As we multiply educated men, the standard of common school instruction will be raised, and thus the masses be elevated; enterprise and prosperity will be secured; liberty, that invaluable boon, will be perpetuated, and this glorious country of the stars and stripes, of magnificent lakes and rivers, of heroic men and women, will be assured to us as the home of one great, united people. Give us the same schools, the same text books, the same class of instructors, a common literature, and no future Jefferson Davis will dare attempt the ruin of his country. General education is the zone which shall bind all our populations into one.

It also furnishes a sure means for securing the growth and power of the Christian Church. It is amid the light, not in the darkness, that christianity flourishes best. The religious education of the youth is a work that lies in the proper province of the church, and that church which neglects its young men and women will die, and ought to die. The church of the future will need an enlightened membership, a strong ministry and able writers. The infidel is writing, the skeptic is writing, the wordly man is writing—the christian must write. The literature of our land must receive the stamp of christianity, or poisoned in all its fountains, it will send streams of death throughout the land.

Let me say then to these students of the Thomson Biblical Institute, whom I have endeavored to instruct, and to all the young men and women I see before me, who wish to be and to do something in this world, never falter in your determination to secure a liberal education. Only will it and you shall rise to an eminence tha neither you nor your friends had deemed possible. Parents, assist your children in their endeavors. No heartless trader can now tear them from your embrace. See that you educate them for God.

Dedication.—Providence permitting, our new session-house will be dedicated to the worship of Almighty God, to-morrow morning. The Sunday-school will meet at 9½ o'clock A. M. Each child will bring a new scholar. At 11 A. M. divine service will commence. Rev. Messrs. McDonald and Henry will participate in the introductory services; Rev. Mr. Brakeman will preach, and Dr. Newman the pastor, will dedicate the edifice to the worship of the Lord.

All are cordially invited.

We have received an interesting letter from Rev. James Lynch, who gives an encouraging statement of his work on the South Mississippi District.

In last week's Advocate, allusion was made to a communication signed "B." which was published July 15th and which referred to Macon, Miss. A distinction should be made between what "Mr. Jones" states, and what "B" writes; and that the latter made a truthful record of the statement of the former, is not to be questioned for a moment.

New Church Purchased.— The new society organized two weeks since by brother A. C. Mc Donald, on Jackson St. has completed the purchase of a church located on Sixth St. between Laurel and Annunciation Sts. for the sum of five thousand dollars. In this purchase they have secured two good lots and a neat commodious church building, 30 by 60 feet, with a gallery in front. The society worshipped in the new church, for the first time, on last Sabbath. There was a good congregation, filling the the church in the afternoon to overflowing; much interest was manifested and three additional members were added to the society. The Sunday School which meets in the morning, is also promising.

In a letter to brother Brakeman dated Baton Rouge, July 29th, Rev. James Hayward says:

"I have just returned from Stony Point, where brother Solomon Montgomery is doing a great work. I am happy to say they are in their new church. It is as good as this church in Baton Rouge and almost as large, and it has, so far, cost them but $600. Brother Montgomery has built it most ly at his own expense. I spent Sabbath there, and preached twice, baptized six, and received nine into the church."

Brother Hayward closes his letter in these exultant words: "The old mother church is taking the wings of the morning, and will fly through the earth in spite of men or devils!" And we say Amen! God speed her flight. Her course is onward in the N. O. District.

Bussey & Co.—We call the attention of our readers, both in the West and Southwest, to the business card in another column, of Bussey & Co., general commission merchants and cotton factors. We take pleasure in numbering Mr. Bussey among our personal friends. He is a gentleman of high business talents and of sterling integrity; and his house is the safest and among the most prosperous in this city. His office is 48 Carondelet st., New Orleans.

General News.

General Sheridan has appointed Stoddart Howell, Treasurer of the City of New Orleans, in place of Joseph Hernandez removed.

This is a good appointment and gives great satisfaction.

We understand that the first day after his appointment the city currency so much improved, that brokers only obtained three per cent difference between bills of small denomination and greenbacks.

We also understand that small change will be promptly furnished now for bills of large denomination.

Governor Flanders has appointed Dr. Henry C. Heilner, resident physician at quarantine, vice M. A. Southworth resigned. Another good appointment.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Washington, August 5, 1867.

The conflicting elements in the cabnet are of such a nature that the difference between the president and a portion of his advisers is likely to become utterly irrepressible. His persistent determination to thwart the will of Congress has led to what is believed to be an irreconcilable breach between President Johnson and Mr. Stanton, of the war department, and Mr. McCulloch, Secretary of the treasury.

It has transpired that Secretary Stanton rrfused to attend a cabinet meeting on Friday, because Johnson adhered to his determination to remove General Sheridan and General Pope.

The Secretary of the treasury, Mr. McCulloch, discovers the drifting of the popular current, and events have confirmed the statement previously made by me that he has abandoned the policy of the president, and has refused to support him in his unjust and unconstitutional schemes. He will not consent to the removal of faithful government officers connected with the treasury department as demanded by the president, nor will he leave the cabinet; but remain there and strenuously oppose the vagaries, plots, maneuvers, and Surrattisms of the accidental occupant of the White House.

To give some idea of the recklessness of the president. He stated yesterday in conversation that Secretary Stanton ought to be removed, and coupled him with General Sheridan.

It is believed that Secretary Stanton will resign very soon, for the reasons indicated. He will not submit to the sacrifice of General Sheridan without appealing to the country.

It is out of the power of the President to remove Secretary McCulloch.

The new evidence of this ruptuie in the Cabinet creates the impression that the breach will continue to widen until the President stands almost solitary and alone in the advocacy of his "policy."

Washington, August 6, 1867.

The excitement in political and social circles still continues. The great topic of conversation is the difference between the President and Secretary Stanton.

The secretary of war again refused to attend the cabinet meeting this morning, and it believed that he has fully determined not to be brought into personal communication again with the accidental president.

Up to one o'clock to-day, however, Secretary Stanton had not returned a reply to Johnson's request to resign.

His friends assert that he will remain in his present position, but this is doubtful.

Secretary Seward has returned from his home in Auburn, New York.

The order for the removal of General Sheridan is confidently expected soon.

The appeal of Governor Parsons, of Alabama, and other southern politicians, has had no effect on the president yet, so far as the public has ascertained.

No one seems to doubt that the president will persevere in his determination to remove General Sheridan and Pope.

Crowds of people surround the court-house, awaiting the result of the Surratt trial, which is now about closing. It is thought that the jury will not agree upon a verdict.

REV. JAMES LYNCH.

The readers of the Advocate have been notified that this brother has recently come to us from the African Methodist Episcopal Church. As he was a leading man of that Church we give a brief sketch of his history:

Rev. James Lynch was born in Baltimore, Md., January 9th, 1839. His father, a free man of color, was a local preacher in the Sharpe Street M. E. Church in that city. His mother a woman of rare intelligence, was a slave, owned by General Smith, but her husband bought her freedom. James, taught by his mother, when only five years old could read and repeat most of the multiplication table. When six years of age he began going to a school taught by Rev. Daniel A. Payne, now a bishop in the A. M. E. Church. At the age of thirteen he was sent to N. E. Academy to prepare for college. He made rapid progress, and acquired distinction in declamation and debate. Misfortune overtook his father, and James was compelled to leave the school at the close of the fifth term. In his sixteenth year he went to Boston hoping to be able to get into school again, but failing in this, shipped on board a steamer as a cabin-boy. Finding his associations uncongenial he determined to rise above them, and upon reaching New York he left the vessel and sought employment as a school teacher. After teaching eighteen months in Jamacia, New York, (where he was converted and joined the Presbyterian church) he went West, and opened a school in Indianopolis, Ind., where he joined the A. M. E. Church, where he became a local preacher, and in six months was received into conference and stationed at Galena Ill, thence he was transferred to the Baltimore Conference, and was stationed in the District of Columbia, served two years and was stationed in Baltimore when the war broke out; subsequently, upon the appeal of Rev. Mr. French, he was sent to labor among the freedmen in South Carolina and Georgia, spending three years in laying the foundation of the present work of the African Methodist Episcopal Church in those states. General Saxton made him "Superintendent of the freedmen," and Govenor Andrew appointed him Chaplain of the 54th. Massachusetts Regiment, but this last he did not accept. He was subsequently appointed to visit England in company with Bishop Payne, but the trip was unavoidably delayed.

At the last General Conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, brother Lynch was elected editor of their paper "The Christian Recorder," under his labors it became an efficient, and influential journal. This eminent position he resigned, joined the Erie Conference, and was transferred to the Mississippi Mission Conference by Bishop Simpson, and appointed Presiding Elder of South Mississippi District where he is now doing efficient service, both to the Church and to his race.

Brother Lynch believes that the mission of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, as a separate organization, is drawing to a close, and that its unfortunate alliance with the Southern Methodist Church and rebels generally has imperiled the interests of the colored people in the South, and has therefore, in the fear of God, and from a sense of duty, left it. It is no hasty step he has taken, he has had it in contemplation for three years, and both Bishop Payne (of his own Church,) and Simpson have long known his convictions, as have also many of his intimate friends. He is not alone in his conviction or the mission of the A. M. E. Church.

And we speak advisedly when we say it will not be long till other leading men in his denomination will follow his example. A church built upon caste or color, (and that church is) cannot stand. B.

The Baptists have 46 Universities, Colleges, and Theological Institutions in the United States. Six have been suspended during the war.

Boston has been praised in all quarters for her manner of receiving and entertaining the President.

The New City Council.

MESSAGE FROM THE MAYOR.

Alderman Graham called the board of aldermen to order at the meeting Tuesday evening, and read the military order under which the board is organized.

The members present last evening were Messrs. Burbank, Clay, Carriere, Dewees, Graham, Stapleton, and Woolfley. Absent, Messrs. Dumas—sick, and Grieff—on his way to the north.

The president pro tem., Mr. Graham, stated that the first business in order was the election of a permanent president.

On motion of Alderman Woolfley, Hon. James Graham was elected permanent president.

Mr. Graham said: I take occasion to express my acknowledgments for the honor conferred upon me. I shall endeavor to do my duty, and shall ask your forbearance in any shortcomiugs.

Alderman Carriere nominated Hugh J. Campbell for secretary of the board.

On motion of Alderman Woolfley, Mr. Campbell was unanimously elected.

On motion of Alderman Clay, Mr. C. Boudro was elected unanimously sergeant-at-arms.

Messrs. Woolfley and Burbank, on motion of the former, were appointed a committee to wait upon Messrs. Campbell and Boudro, and inform them of their nomination.

The committee retired and returned in a few minutes with Mr. Compbell, who was introduced to the President and members. The president announced the standing committees of finance and streets and landings:

Finance Committee—John R. Clay, chairman, Antoine Carriere, F. A. Woolfley, E. Stapleton.

Streets and Landings—Daniel S. Dewees, chairman, A. D. Grieff, T. E. Dumas, E. W. Burbank.

On motion of Alderman Woolfley a committee consisting of Messrs. Woolfley, Clay, and Dewees was appointed to wait on the Mayor, and inform him of the organization of the board, and of their readiness to receive any communication from him.

On motion of the same member a recess of fifteen minutes was taken.

The new secretary of the board immediately on his election was abandoned by the representatives of the old secretary, who retired from the chamber without proffering any information relative to the business before the Board.

Judge Alexander Walker, the old secretary of the board, started for Washington some time since, and his son, Garret Walker, who acted as secretary during the absence of his father, left this city for Virginia yesterday, as our reporter was informed. Their representatives either were ignorant of the duties to be performed or were disinclined to extend any courtesies whatever to the new secretary.

Colonel Campbell, the new secretary of the board, is a member of the law firm of Butler & Campbell, of this city. He was formerly attached to the army as the colonel of the 18th Iowa volunteer infantry, and distinguished himself by gallant services during the war. He was in General Steele's command in the Red river campaign.

Mr. Boudro, the new sergeant-at-arms, was in the military service and a member of one of the Louisiana native guards regiments. He was lately enfranchised by Congress.

Alderman Woolfley, from the committee to wait on the mayor, reported that they had waited on that officer, who informed them that a communication had been sent to the board, through the secretary's office, and that he had no further communication to make.

The reading of the minutes of the previous meeting was dispensed with, and the communication from the mayor was read by the Secretary.

STATE OF LOUISIANA,
Mayoralty of New Orleans,
City Hall, Aug 6, 1867.

To the Honorable
The Board of Aldermen:

GENTLEMEN—I deem it proper at this your first meeting to call your attention to various matters of public interest which demand your early consideration.

The deranged state of our city currency demands your earnest and careful attention.

No authority exists for the sale of city bonds, therefore other measures must be resorted to, to get a portion, at least of the city notes out of the the market.

After carefully considering this matter I would recommend that an ordinance be passed, legalizing all outstanding issues and requiring the redemption of the same within .... days. We shall then know just how much is out and who is responsible for its issue. To meet these notes as they are presented at the counter of the treasurer I would suggest the following plan:

That portion issued by the commissioners of the consolidated debt under resolution No. 6236 is already provided for by advertisement for exchange for city bonds, amounting to $696,000; the batture issue is separate and distinct, and can be countersigned or stamped and reissued, amounting to $500,000.

For all other issues a thorough retrenchment in all expenditures not absolutely necessary for the public good.

A vigorous and earnest collection of all taxes in arrears, and all notes past due; an immediate sale of all property not necessary for public use; and for the redemption of the batture issue, new notes of such denomination as convenience may require.

About July 21 the late finance committee asked me to suggest a plan for the relief of the city currency. I proposed the issuing of warrants, payable one year after date, bearing interest of six per cent. per annum, in sums of $50 and upwards, a like amount of city notes to be canceled, and destroyed. The plan was adopted and passed, but by some inadvertence the important clause requiring the cancellation of city notes was left out. Under the existing feeling in regard to the currency I did not feel at liberty to refuse to sign the ordinance in that shape. It was intended to take the place of bonds until future legislation should authorize the same. They will no doubt absorb a considerable amount of city notes, being in convenient sums to meet the means of all who may have a little surplus to put at interest for a short time.

I, therefore, recommend either the amendment of that ordinance or its repeal, as it is a bad one in its present shape.

WATER.

It is provided in the act of incorporation of the Commercial bank that at the expiration of thirty-five years, it shall be lawful for the city to purchase from the Commercial bank the wate-works constructed by said bank, and that said bank shall not refuse to sell the works aforesaid, with all the rights and privileges appertaining to the same, on certain terms as provided for in said charter.

The charter of the Commercial bank will expire on the first day of April next, but believing it will be for the best interest of the city to purchase the works and provide the proper measures for the furnishing a supply of pure, wholesome water, I consider it advisable that immediate steps be taken to carry out the provisions of the charter. To this end I respectfully suggest that a committee from the council be appointed for conference in reference to the purchase of the present works by the city at once.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The council at its last session passed an ordinance for the establishment of colored schools. I respectfully suggest that this ordinance in no way meets the exigencies of the case.

A portion of the present board of school directors are holding their positions by virtue of an act of the legislature, see session's act 1867, page 175, and I consider it desirable on your part to either enlarge the present board, or take such action as will guarantee to the newly enfranchised of our citizens a fair representation on the board.

Inasmuch as the number of children to be educated will be fully double that of the past year, and in view of urgent necessity for the careful education of the children of our city, a liberal appropriation will be necessary.

I cannot too earnestly urge upon you the desirability of an immediate attention to this important subject.

STATE NOTES.

I was informed by the city treasurer in March last that he had received over $700,000 in state notes for city taxes. A large amount of these must still remain on hand. By reference to the accompanying statement of the First National bank, dated June 3, 1867, it appears that they hold $362,646 88 of these notes. These, with the balance on hand in that currency, should be so disposed of, as to be drawing interest or turned into current funds to relieve the treasury.

Steps should also be taken to close the account with the First National bank at the earliest possible moment.

WHARVES.

I transmit a communication from Louis H. Pilie, Esq., city surveyor, in reference to the wharves of the city.

In view of the present condition of the city finances it will become necessary for the council to determine what measure of repairs are of absolute necessity to meet the probable business of the coming year, and to at once take such action in the matter as will insure the completion of the work.

CITY WORKHOUSE.

The condition of the city workhouse will demand your earliest attention.

In nearly all the large cities of the Union reformative institutions are made a source of profit to the corporation, and I an confident that by judicious management the workhouse can be made at least self-supporting. I shall endeavor in a short time to lay before the council a plan for the employment of the convicts, whereby this desirable end may be attained.

The recent sudden death of Henry B. Myatt, chief warden of this institution, has created a vacancy which it will be necessary for you to fill at once.

FIRST DISTRICT LOCK-UP.

I desire particlarly to call your attention to the immediate necessity of placing the first district lock-up in a safe and healthy condition.

The attention of the former council has been frequently called to this subject, but no definite action has been taken. Notwithstanding the fact that the grand jury and the board of health have both presented this place as a nuisance, it still remains in the most disgraceful condition. I earnestly recommend that prompt measures be taken to remedy the evil.

NUISANCE BOATS.

In accordance with an act of the legislature entitled an act to prevent offal and nuisances from being thrown within the limits of the cities of New Orleans and Jefferson, the council passed a resolution on the 3d of June authorizing the controller to receive sealed proposals for the building of three nuisance boats. On the 11th of June the controller sent the sealed proposals to the board of assistant alderman, where they were laid over subject to call, since when no action has been taken in the premises.

The matter is one of great importance, and should receive prompt attention. In view of the necessity for immediate action, and inasmuch as the offal and nuisances are now being thrown in the river directly above the water-works, I would urge upon the council the purchase of flat-boats for temporary use until such time as nuisance boats can be built.

CONTRACTS.

I have before me for signature the following contracts, viz:

J. J. O'Hara, for cleaning and repairing the streets of the first ward for $15,500.

J. J. O'Hara, for cleaning and repairing the streets of the second ward for $14,500.

G. Correjolles, for cleaning and repairing the streets of the fourth ward, for $13,400.

G. Correjolles, for cleaning and repairing the streets of the sixth ward, for $9900.

G. Correjolles, for cleaning and repairing the streets of the fifth ward, for $13,500.

Wm. Hervey, for cleaning and repairing the streets of the tenth ward, for $11,600.

Wm. Hervey, for cleaning and repairing the streets of the eleventh ward, $9200.

James T. Monroe for running the Bienville street draining machine for one year, for $9000.

John Long, for running the London avenue draining machine for one year, for $6800.

Francis J. Bradley, for running the Melpomene street draining machine for one year, for $5450.

The resolutions authorizing the mayor to enter into these contracts were passed by the council over the veto of the mayor. Since my veto messages of June 21 and July 6th, I have seen no reason to change my views as therein expressed; but am firmly convinced that the best interest of the city will be subserved by leaving the cleaning of the streets and the running of the draining machines to be performed by the city rather than by contract, and suggest that the council reconsider the resolutions authorizing the contracts.

RESOLUTIONS.

I return herewith without my signature the following resolutions, viz:

Authorizing the mayor to contract with—

David Moores, for repair to engine house No. 24, for $2400.

David Moores, for repairs to engine house No. 18, for $3393.

David Moores, for repairs to engine house No. 23, for $3736.

David Moores, for repairs to engine house No. 20, for $3145.

H. A. Edwards, for repairs to engine house No. 14, for $3785.

Gamewell, Kennard & Co., for fire alarm telegraph, for $28,000.

John F. Rust, for digging canals and drains to carry off water from the Bienville street draining machine at $1900 per acre; canals at $450 per running acre; $25 per acre for dams and piling, and 75c. per foot for underground sewers.

Inasmuch as the carrying out of these resolutions will involve the expenditure of a large amount, I beg you to give your careful attention to ascertain if a portion of this expense cannot be dispensed with.

I return also resolution authorizing the substitution of the name of John Petit for that of James Antigais in contract for cleaning and repairing the streets of the third ward.

This method of the substitution of security is one that does not commend itself to my favor and which I am of opinion is of doubtful legality. Also.

Resolutions authorizing the controller to advertise for sealed proposals for the construction of the necessary canal bridges in the section of the city, comprised between Canal street, the new canal, Galvez street, and Hagan avenue, etc.

On the 25th July, 1866, the city entered into contract with Daniel Muiligan for the construction of all the necessary bridges for a term of three years. There can, therefore, be no necessity for this resolution, and it would be clearly illegal; also.

Resolutions authorizing the mayor to contract with Messrs. T. Fitzwillam & Co., for supplying the city with stationery for one year and with Messrs. W. H. C. King & Co., for supplying printed blanks and binding for the city for one year.

An examination of the proposals for furnishing these supplies conclusively shows that it would be impossible for the contractors to fullfil the terms of their contracts without serious detriment to either their own or the city's interest. Many of the articles enumerated in the bids are offered at prices far below the cost by quantity from the manufacturer, while many others are offered at a figure lar above their market value. A close examination will, I think, prove that the articles more needed by the city are placed at exorbitant prices, while those least required are put at a merely nominal price.

I would suggest that it would be more advantageous to the city to purchase from time to time the articles required of such parties as will furnish them at the lowest rate, the bill to be subject to the approval of the finance committee.

Rumors are are rife throughout the city that one or more of the collectors of levee dues are greatly in arrears, An immediate examination of these accounts should be made, and the guilty parties dealt with according to law.

CITY TREASURER.

Mr. Stoddart Howell, the newly appointed city treasurer, appeared before me and was duly qualified this day.

I shall heartily co-operate with the council in any measures tending to promote the general welfare of our citizens. One great difficulty in the past has been the want of harmony between the executive and legislative branches of our city government. This no longer exists, and I look forward confidently to such action on your part as will subserve the true interests of our beloved city.

Very respectfully,
E. HEATH,
Mayor.

On motion of Aldermen Woolfley, the message and accompanying documents were referred to the finance committee and the streets and landings committee.

The communication from the city survey or referred to by the mayor stated that the wharves will require certain extensions and repairs, as follows:

In the first district the extension of five of the ships' wharves immediately above Thalia street to a sufficient depth of water.

In the second district the rebuilding of that part of the steamship wharf which has lately caved in, and the rebuilding of two ships wharves opposite Barracks and Esplanade streets which could not be built last year.

In the third district the building of five ships wharves and that part of the steamship wharf which have caved and are now caving in.

In the fourth district the building of a wharf opposite Ninth street, which could not be built last year. The revetments and bulkheads will also need repairs in many places.

He estimates the cost at $57,000.

The wharf contracted to be built by H. Ellerman to connect the steamship and steamboat wharves of the first district is nearly completed, and will cost about twenty-one thousand dollars, which will make the aggregate $78,000.

Alderman Woolfley presented several communications from applicants for office, which were laid on the table subject to call.

Alderman Clay presented the following resolutions which was referred to the finance committee:

Resolved, That the issue of the city money made by the common council in the latter part of the year 1861, and the early part of the year 1862, also the issue made by the military government, from July 1862, until March 16, 1866, and the issue made by the late municipal government, from the latter period until they were relieved by the commanding general, be and the same are hereby approved and legalized.

Resolved, That the members of the present common council hereby pledge themselves not to sanction any proceedings having a tendency to increase the present issue of city money, but on the contrary do all in their power to retire the circulation, as will be provided for in the coming budget.

There being no further business before the board, a motion prevailed to adjourn until Tuesday evening next at seven o'clock.

The first regular meeting of the new assistant board of aldermen was held August 6th, President Hepp in the chair.

The following members were present, viz: Messrs. Davies, Dunn, Flood, Gauche, Goldmann, Gumbell, Hepp, Joubert, Lapene, Perkins, Sampson, Sauvinet, Sterry, and Thezan—14.

The message from the mayor was read and ordered to be spread upon the minutes.

A number of resolution and other matters adopted by the old board were returned by the mayor without his signature. The veto of the mayor was unanimously sustained in a number of the cases, and in others the matters referred to appropriate committees for fuller consideration.

The city treasurer's report was read showing liabilities of $89,777 17. Currency on hand $308,893 47.

It was referred to the finance committee.

A number of resolutions and petitions were read and appropriately referred to committees for consideration.

A joint resolution was adopted inviting a junction of the two boards Tuesday evening next, to elect a chief warden of the city workhouse and all other city officers whose terms have ceased.

Another resolution was passed to its third reading, (the rules being dispensed with for the purpose,) declaring the board of school directors dissolved and dismissed, for violation of a city ordinanee in removing teachers without a good cause. The vote on its second reading shows ayes, Messrs. Davies. Dunn, Flood, Goldmann, Gumbell, Joubebt, Sauvinet, Sterry and Thezan—9; nays, Messrs. Gauche, Hepp, Lapene, Perkins, and Sampson—5.

These resolutions were directed to be transmitted to the upper board for concurrence, when an adjournment took place until Tuesday evening next at half past six o'clock.

News.

WASHINGTON, August 6, 1867.

President Johnson telegraphed in person to General Rousseau, ordering him to report here. The story about his being called here to meet the agents of the Russian government is false. Rumor now connects the order calling him here with the expected removal of Sheridan.

The following is the correspondence between President Johnson and Secretary Stanton, in relation to the question of the resignation of the latter.

President Johnson, on August 5, writes to the secretary of war as follows.

"Considerations of public interest will persuade me to accept your resignation, if tendered."

Under date of August 6, Secretary Stanton replies:

"Consideration of public interest have prevailed with me to hold this office for months past, and considertions of public interest will prevail with me to hold it till the assembling of Congress."

The weather for eight or ten days past has been dry and hot, which we hope will have an exterminating effect upon the cotton worm. With propitnous weather from this till picking time, and the absence of the worm, it is estimated that there will yet be half a crop of cotton made in Grimes county, notwithstanding some fields have been abandoned. Of corn though the yield per acre is not as large as it ought to be, more will be made than was last year, a much larger area having been planted.—Anderson Recorder, 27th.

DEATHS LAST WEEK

The number of death in this city during the week ending Sunday morning, as reported by Dr. Dirmeyer secretary of the board of health, was 139, of which 9 were from yellow fever, 8 from cholera, 1 died of wounds, 1 was accidently killed by a fall, 1 was drowned, 1 died of burns and scolds, 1 of delirum tremens, 1 of intemperance, 3 of heart disease, 6 of consumption, 15 were stillborn, and the balance died from various ordinary diseases. Forty-two were under 1 year, 20 between 20 and 30, 15 between 30 and 40, 9 between 40 and 50, 9 between 50 and 60, 2 between 60 and 70, 2 between 70 and 80, and 4 whose ages were not reported. Seventy-seven were whites, 28 blacks, 12 mulatoes, and 22 not classified. The whole number of deaths is eighteen less than during the preceeding week.

THE LAST DAYS

Of ex-President Martin Van Buren were made comfortable by the use of Jonas Whitcomb's Asthma Remedy. Letters in our possession from his physician, and from Mr Van Buren himself, express much gratification with the results of its use.

Extract from the "Life of Washington Irving," by his nephew, Pierre M. Irving, Vol. IV. page 272:

"The doctor prescribed, as an experiment—what had been suggested by Dr. (O. W.) Holmes on his late visit—'Jonas Whitcomb's Remedy for Asthma, a teaspoonful in a wineglass of water, to be taken every four hours. A good night was the result."

In no case of purely Asthmatic character has it failed to give prompt relief, and in many cases a permanent cure has been effected. No danger need be apprehended from its use. An infant may take it with perfect safety. (SEE CIRCULAR)

WHEDON'S Commentary On The Gospel.

VOLUME II.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

From the Episcopalian.

This volume completes the authors's exposition of the four Gospels. It is now designed to go through the whole New Testament in the same way, and possibly the Old. If even the New Testament is finished after the author's plan it will form an admirable work, and supersede the use of Barne's Notes except among his partisans. It combines all the latest researches in biblical criticism, including the studies of Lange and others of the same class, and is characterized throughout by careful, patient study, and by great clearness and vigor. The style is at the same time popular, and to no class will the volume prove a valley of dry bones, as is, however, often the case with many works on the same subject.

From the Biblical Repertory and Princeton Review.

It is a matter of gratulation that so many distinguished men of all denominations are turning their attention to the preparation of commentaries on the Holy Scriptures. This volume is written in a clear, terse, and forcible style. There is very little waste of words. The expositions are concise, to the point, and evangelical and edifying. It bids fair to be a very valuable work.

From the Boston Review.

We hail all such evangelical efforts to simplify, explain and diffuse the scriptures among the masses. Such unpretending, yet really very valuable volumes are our best defense against the skepticism and irreligion of the age, and that scholarly, insinuating, and undermining influence that we import from many of the German critics. This volume reminds us strikingly, in form, method, and style, of Barne's Notes, and will be emminently serviceable to the large communion that rejoices in the name of its distinguished author.

From the New Englander.

It seems to be prepared with much care, and exhibits the same result of scholarly investigation to a greater degree than its unpretending character would lead one to anticipate. Sabbath-school teachers and others who desire brief and concise annotations on the Gospels, to aid them in their studies and instructions, will find much in this work that will be useful to them.

From the Christian Inquirer.

It is a learned book, gathering up an immense mass of illustrative facts and incidents from all sources, and arranging them in admirable order.

From the Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Whedon's Commentary on the Gospels, which recently made its appearance, is an able and timely production. The author is at present the editor of the Methodist Quarterly Review, and, as an original thinker and vigorous writer has no superior. He possesses the qualifications of a commentator, and the public appreciate his volumes because they contain new ideas, fresh from the laboratory of a cultivated mind. For advanced Bible classes they are unsurpassed, and the Sabbath-schools, recognizing their importance, are introducing them into their course of study. No instructor of youth should be without them, as they shed new light upon many interesting incidents in the life of Jesus.

From the Canada Christian Advocate.

We regard this second volume as fully equal the first, and both together as being a most valuable and seasonable exposition. It will be a companion to the Bible in many houses, and will enable, we trust, many, many thousands to feed upon the blessed word with increasing profit and relish. It was not uncalled, and it will not be unwelcomed or unprized. Its "popular use" will be another important instrumentality in educating the Church, and raising the intelligence of religious professors to something like what the times require. It will be found a valuable assistant to teachers and members of Bible classes. We wish the author health and leisure to complete the commentary on the entire New Testament.

From the Independent.

Dr. Whedon has won a marked place in religious and theological literature by the strength and polish of his pen. His commentary on Matthew and Mark attracted no small attention from its style, no less than its treatment of the topics of the text. It is less discursive and less accumulative than Lange, whose work is a thesaurus as much as an originrl effort. Yet it is hardly less sagacious and profound. Though brief it is not shallow. Compact with thought often strikingly expressed, it gives the essence af the Gospel in its vitals. He has expounded Luke more ably than Oosterzee; though John is deemed by him the crucial test of the volume, as it really is of the Bible. Many passages merit quotation, whether of the thought or the expression, for which, however, we have no room. His argument, in chapter ix, against Hume'a famous doctrine on miracles, is one of the briefest and best we remember to have seen. Clergymen and Sunday-school teachers will find much nourishment in this series of volumes that is intended to include the whole of the New Testament.

PEMBERTON'S "Carbolic Acid Disinfectant."

This Powder is a compound of Carbolic Acid Copperas, etc., possessing the properties of destroying contagion, decomposing pestilential effluvia, noxious exhalations, and neutralizing strong and offensive odors; removing the effluvia of sick rooms, sewers, cesspools, sinks, privies, tc.

It far surpasses the Chlorinated Lime in its actions and effects, and is certainly the best Di-infectant now in use. Thoroughly disinfecting the atmosphere, electrifying the oxygen and rendering the respirable air both healthy and pure, being entirely free from all injurious effects on the throat and lungs, which so frequently attend the use of deodorizers.

MEDICAL.

DR. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,
127 CARONDELET STREET,

Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic, and Acute

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained. And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient, that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years, in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient, if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the Institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—often life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet Street, or address by letter, as there are several Dr. Whites in the city.

☞ Consultation free—stamps not "forgotten."

MASON & HAMLIN,

MANUFACTURERS OF

CABINET ORGANS,

ALSO

PORTABLE ORGANS,

ADAPTED TO SECULAR AND SACRED MUSIC, FOR DRAWING-ROOMS, CHURCHES, SUNDAY AND DAY SCHOOLS, LODGES, &C., &C.

Uniting to a considerable extent the capacity of the Piano-Forte with that of the Pipe-Organ, and costing much less than either.

They occupy little space; are elegant as furniture; not liable to get out of order, and are securely boxed, so that they can be sent anywhere by ordinary Freight routes, all ready for use.

Forty Styles, plain or elegant cases; one to twelve stops; Prices, $75, $90, $110, $125, $130, $1 0, $150, $160, $170, $200, $225, $250, $300, $435, $540, $550, $600, and upwards.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs were introduced four years since, and are a great imprement upon the Melodeon, Harmonium, and other reed organs, greatly excelling them especially in the excellent quality and variety of their tones; in power and quickness of action, and capacity for expression,

THEIR SUCCESS HAS BEEN ENTIRELY BEYOND PRECEDENT,

and proves how greatly such an instrument was needed. Again and again the manufacturers have been compelled to double their manufacturing facilities, until they have been increased six-fold. From the most eminent of the musical profession, the most distinguished pianists, organists, composers, and musical directors, the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs have received an amount and degree of commendation never before bestowed upon any similar musical instrument. More than two hundred and fifty of the most eminent musicians in the country have given written testimonials to the value of the improvements contained in them, and that they excel all other instruments of this class.

FIFTY-TWO GOLD OR SILVER MEDALS, or other highest Premiums have been awarded to Mason & Hamlin for the important improvements effected by them, and for the

SUPERIORITY OF THEIR INSTRUMENTS TO ALL OTHERS.

Constantly exhibiting their instruments in competition with others, they have been awarded the highest premium in every instance, but three or four.

For churches, sunday schools, etc., the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs are the instruments long wanted, of the very best quality, abundant power, not too expensive, nor liable to get out of order.

For private use, in drawing-rooms, &c., they are not less desirable, and are finding a place in the musical families of the principal cities.

They are adapted to a wider range of music than the piano, being fitted for all sacred music and for much secular music, while their quickness of action is such that the most lively, rapid music can be played on them. Then their cost is greatly less, as well as their liability to get out of order.

BRIEF EXTRACTS FROM OPINIONS OF DISTINGUISHED MUSICIANS.

I should think they would become very much sought after as parlor instruments as well as for public performance.—Sigismond Thalberg, the world-renowned Pianist. Sure to find its way into every household of taste and refinement which can possibly afford its moderate expenses. Far superior to everything of its class I have seen.—L. M. Gottschalk, the eminent Pianist. Such pure musical tones, promptness and smoothness of action and fine variety of effect, I have not found in any other instrument of the class.—S. B. Mills, the eminent Pianist. Really so excellent that there can hardly be much difference of opinion respecting them.—William Mason, the eminent Pianist. The best instrument of its class with which I am acquainted, and worthy a place in every drawing room. Harry Sanderson, the eminent Pianist. In every respect far superior to everything I have ever seen of the kind, whether in Europe or America.—Geo. Washbourne Morgan the eminent organist, N. Y. I can only reiterate what so many in the musical profession have said, that for equality, promptness and exquisite tone, they are unequalled.—John H. Wilcox, the eminent Organist, Boston. Surpasses everything in this line I have ever seen, whether French or American.—Jon Zundel, the eminent Organist, N. Y. The best reed instruments in the world are made in the United States, and your Cabinet Organs are greatly superior, and by far the best made here.—Max Maretzer, Musical Conductor, N. Y. Far surpasses all other similar instruments, which have come under my observation.—Carl Zerhau, Musical Conductor, Boston. Exceeds in my estimation every other instrument of this general class. Thos. Hastings. I can recommend them with confidence.—Lowell Mason. As soon as the people become acquainted with the superior merits of your instruments, your only trouble will be to supply the demand.—Wm. B. Bradbury. I have never seen anything of the kind which interested me so much.—Geo. F. Root. Exciting much interest in musical circles, and already becoming the fashion. N. Y. Home Journal. The highest accomplishment of industry in this department. This is not only our opinion, but the unanimous verdict of the organists.—Boston Advertiser. A glorious instrument for the temple service, so readily secured as to be available for any congregation, and effective and beautiful as to meet the desires of the most refined and fastidious.—N. Y. Observer.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs must not be confounded with other reed instruments, from which they vary essentially, their superiority veing largely derived from PATENTED IMPROVEMENTS, which cannot be employed by other makers. Among them are,

The AUTOMATIC BELLOWS SWELL, patented, a most important invention, and greatly the best swell ever devised being much more effective and easily used than any other. The variety and beauty of effect of which it is capable, can not be appreciated except from actual use. The many attempts to imitate or find a substitute for this swell, prove its value. None of them, however, approach it in excellence and simplicity.

IMPROVED SELF-ADJUSTING VALVES patented, secure much more perfect action, durability, and freedom from liability to get out of order.

WOOD'S OCTAVE COUPLET patented, in effect nearly doubles the power of the instrument in which it is used.

NOISELESS SAFETY VALVES patented, prevent the hissing sound often heard.

The IMPROVED COMBINATION REGISTER patented, gives great facility in drawing stops.

The Dying Christian Father.

My day is dippin' in the West, it's gloaming' wi' me noo,
I hear the sough o' Jordan's waves, that I maun travel through;
Yet 'tis na'Jordan's waves I fear, nor tremble at the strife:
But oh! this sunderin' o' hearts, this leaving weans and wife.

That though we ken o' better things—a fairer world abune,
Whaur lost frien's are a' waiting us, an a'maun travel sune.
This rendin' o' the siller strings that tether heart to heart,
It tries puir human nature, sair, an' makes us laith to part.

Gae rax me bye the Bible, wife, while yet I'm fit to see,
Ere death cauld rifeback and creeps o'er my flap my failin' e'e,
An' let us sing a partin' song, before we sundered be,
For ye canna hae me lang noo; I haena' lang to dree.

Here, pit the pillow to my back, an' ease me up awee,
An' bring them a' to my bedside to see their father dee:
Noo raise the Bible up a thocht, it's ower laigh on my knee,
An' shift the licht heanin back, it's ower strong for my e'e.

He waled, he sung the partin' sang, his voice was firm and clear,
And read the fourteenth o' St. John, nor did he shed a tear;
Sae is it wi' the man o' God when life's day's darg is dune,
Nae future fears disturb his mind, nae rueful looks behin'.

O! but it gies me great relief, the singin' o' that sang,
My clay is crumblin' fast awa', my spirit noo grows strang;
My wife, my weans, we a' maun part, sae dinna sab sae sair;
But dicht the tears frae off your face, and let us join in prayer.

And let us join in prayer to Him that's wantin' me awa',
That He may be a faithfu' Frien' and Father to ye a'—
He turned his glazin' e'e to Heaven, and raised his withered hand—
Noo safely through auld Jordan's wave he's reached the better land.

THE DEATH OF MOZART.

When a musician dies his song ceases, but his music lingers, an ever-abiding cadence in our hearts, influencing all our after lives. The wealth of mines seems poor when compared with the compositions which some of our eminent writers of music have left behind them, and bequeathed as legacies to all the lovers of song. Music is full of magic, has charms for the living and the dying, and furnishes study and enjoyment for the inhabitants of heaven. Sometimes the spirit while taking final leave of earth, seems caught away by the sweet strains of the skies, and, amid the tears and sighs of loved attendants who witness the closing scene, departs with an ectasy of joy and unspeakable delight. This has been the case with a number of eminent composers in the dying hour.

The death of Mozart, the great German musician, was most touchingly interesting. Few are favored so highly Wolfgang Mozart died at Vienna in the year 1791, and to me there is something strikingly beautiful and touching in the circumstances of his death. His sweetest song was the last he sang, and is entitled "The Requiem." He had been steadily employed upon this exquisite piece for several weeks, his soul all the time filled with inspiration, and already claiming kindred with immortality. After giving to it its last touches, and breathing into it that undying spirit of song which was to consecrate it through all time, as his "cygnean strain," he fell into a gentle, quiet slumber. At length the light foot-step of his beautiful daughter Emilie awoke him.

"Come here," said he, "my Emilie; my task is done—the Requiem—my Requiem—is finished." "Say not so, my dear father," said the gentle girl, interrupting him, as the great pearly tears stood in her eyes. "You must be better; you look better, for even now your cheek has a glow upon it I am sure, father, we will soon nurse you well again. Let me go and bring you something refreshing." "Do not deceive yourself, my precious child," said the dying father, "this wasted form can never be restored by human aid. From Heaven's mercy alone I look for aid in this my dying hour. You spoke of refreshments, my Emilie—here, my child, take these my last notes, sit down to the piano here, sing with them the hymn of your sainted mother Let me once more hear those tones which have been so long my solacement and delight."

Emilie obeyed, and with a voice enriched with tenderest emotion, sang to her father's heaven-born composition the following stanzas:"

Spirit! thy labor is o'er;
Thy term of probation is run;
Thy steps are now bound for the untrodden shore,
And the race of immortals begun.

Spirit! look not on the strife,
Or the pleasures of earth with regret;
Pause not on the threshold of limitless life
To mourn for the thing that is set.

Spirit! no fetters can bind;
No wicked have power to molest,
There the weary, like thee—the wretched—shall find
A haven, a mansion of rest.

Spirit! how bright is the road
For which thou art now on the wing;
Thy home it will be, with thy Saviour and God,
Their glad hallelujah to sing.

As Emilie concluded, she dwelt for a moment upon the low, melancholy notes of the piece, and then turning from the instrument looked in silence for the approving smile of her father. It was the still passionless smile which the rapt and joyous spirit left, with the seal of death, upon those features. Let me die such a death.—Correspondent of Morning Star.

The Protestant and Catholic Poor.

The poor are found everywhere, for the consequences of vice and misfortune are felt in all communities. But as Doctor Williams shows very clearly in the following extract, most of the Prostestant poor are such from their neglect of religion, while many of the Catholics are so by reason of their religion. He says:

Catholicism taunts Protestantism with the pauperism of England, as if it were chargeable on the rejection of the Roman faith. But in answer to this it is sufficient to say that the pauperism of British countries is found mainly in the class who are not church goers. The artisan and plough-man, who have become imbruted and skeptical, who keep no Sabbath and read no Bible, and never enter the sanctuary, are in Protestant England the chief burden on the poor fund. Those who visit the Sabbath-school and the chapel, or the church, both in the mining and the manufacturing districts, are less greviously and less often the children of want.

But in Catholic countries it is the church-goers, those who haunt the porch, and the alter, and the confessional, and keep the church-holidays, that are the most shameless and importunate in their mendicancy. The poor of the Protestant countries are by their religion kept mainly from the worst woes and vices of the pauperism around them, which preys mainly on the rejectors or neglectors of their religion. But the poor of Catholic countries are made and kept such by their faith; by its festivals, fostering idleness; by the mendicancy of many of its religious orders of friars, and by the mortmain engrossment of large portions of the nation's soil, and the nation's resources in the support of monastic establishments, which consume but do not produce.

The African's Closet.

A missionary friend recently mentioned the manner in which the week of prayer was observed by his dusky church on the coast of South Africa. When our favored churches show the same zeal we may look for wonderful showers of grace to descend on this parched and perishing earth.

They number some fifty or sixty members, and their hearts were warmly enlisted when the object of this week of prayer was explained to them. Their houses were small, usually with but one room, so each one had his closet out of doors. One would be in a clump of bushes; another in the deep recesses of the tall grasses; another in some rocky dell; but each knew his place. There were well worn paths to these closets.

A man came to the missionary about daylight, having walked about half-a-mile, and he said he was not out of the sound of the voice of prayer through all that distance. These dark-browed Christians were at their posts pleading with God for the conversion of the world. Who can say that blessings have not been wafted back to us on the wings of those prayers?

A little African boy employed in the missionary's home, as soon as his fire was lighted, used to go down to a little ravine and offer his morning prayer. At five o'clock in the afternoon he would leave his play and go bounding down the same rocky foot-path to meet his stated engagement there, not for a few days or weeks, but for the whole two years while he was in the missionary's family.

We want the same spirit in our churches. 'Kindle the dry sticks and the green ones will catch,' is a motto of Franklin's. It applies well to revivals of religion. They must begin among God's children, but they will not end there.—'Wherever thou canst send a thought, thou canst send a blessing.' 'The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much.'

LOUISIANA.

We have referred to the natural business alliance between New Orleans and St. Louis, and have shown how important it is to this city that the old commerce with even more than the old enterprise of New Orleans should be revived as soon as possible, the lines of transportation established by which the valley of the Mississippi may become in some degree independent of New York alike in its imports and exports. With these considerations in mind, and knowing how immediately the revival of commercial prosperity in New Orleans depends upon the settlement of industrial and political questions, our readers will look with interest upon the political situation in Louisiana.

In 1856 the whole number of votes cast in that State was 42,873, of which 22,164 were cast for Buchanan. In 1860 the whole number of votes was 50,510, devided as follows: Douglas, 7625; Breckenridge, 22,681; Bell,20,-204. The returns of registration already received at New Orleans show that 119,396 voters have been registered. The increase is greater than the whole number of votes polled before the war. There were then about 50,000 white voters, there are now 41,163. The white population of the State has probably increased but very little during the war, and the figures indicate that a very small part of the whites have been disfranchised. On the other hand, there have been registered 78,230 negro voters, a majority of 37,063 of the whole number registered.

Louisiana, then, is to be controlled by its colored population. To the rebels the fact is very unpleasant; to some tender Conservatives at the North it may seem shocking; but it is the fact. If President Johnson could cause every white male adult in the State to be registered, there would still be a large colored majority. The disfranchisement of rebels does not at all affect the main fact that the blacks, if they vote together, can control the State. That they are loyal to a man is known. That very many of them are educated, and that there are among them, especially in New Orleans, men of property, culture, and decided ability, only render it the more certain that they will not be so misled as to vote a rebel or conservative ticket. Thousands of them enlisted in the service, and wore the blue uniform with credit, and they are not the sort of men to disgrace it, now that the war is over, by voting for the very cause against which they volunteered to fight. They are Republicans, because there is no other loyal party. They are Radicals, because they have sense enough to see that a thorough or radical regeneration is precisely the thing the South must have. It seems, even now, like a tale of the Arabian Nights—this marvelons transposition of power in Louisiana. Yesterday slaves; today masters. Yesterday sold at the auction block, today members of the New Orleans City Council, or candidates for the Legislature, for State offices, and for Congress. The old regime in Louisiana is buried forever: like the bones of the fossil man found under ten layers of cypress growth near New Orleans, the relics of the old order of things are buried under new voters, new ideas, new purposes, a new political creation, and the geologist has to go far beneath the surface to find even a trace of the Louisiana that has passed forever away. The rebels have as much political power in that State as the bones of the revolutionary tories have in New York, and no more. The Conservatives, of whom some are rebels, some Unionists, and all fossils, waste time in longing for the return of the old order of things, and might as well vote in Patagonia as in Louisiana, for all practical purposes. They are laid on the shelf, forever.

The new citizens, then, are masters in Louisiana. They mistake most egregiously who imagine that these men will vote as they are told to vote, whether by their old masters or any body else They have ideas of their own, and a will of their own. Mr. Charles E. Moss says that they will vote the Conservative ticket unless some colored man should be nominated for Vice President in 1868. He insults the men of whom he affirms such a thing. They have sense enough to know, if he has not, that their own political future and that of their race throughout the country depends upon the defeat of the Conservatism, Democracy, rebelism, or whatever else the opposition may call itself. A Conservative victory in the contest of 1868 would not only prevent negro suffrage in Northern States where it has not yet been established, but would overturn negro suffrage in Louisiana and every Southern State. The colored people know that the prejudice against them cannot be destroyed in a day, and that it will yield only before the stubborn fact that they use their newly acquired power wisely and well. They know, if some of their pretended friends do not, that all they have gained still depends upon their own moderation and wisdom in those States in which they have their power.

Whether Mr. Langston or Mr. Douglas or any other man should be nominated for Vice President, is a question to be settled not by his color or race, but by his qualifications. If he is the most suitable man for that post, he ought to be nominated and elected if not, not. The same is true of any other office. If the ablest, truest and best qualified man in Louisiana for the position of Governor is a colored man, he ought to be elected, and the same if he is a white man. So long as the man of the most worth and the best qualifications is chosen, the fact that he happens to be of the colored race will hurt no one. But if men are chosen to office, merely because they are black, merely because they are not black, then the old caste distinctions are revived, and if the men chosen are not the best qualified the result will be a disgrace and an injury to those who elect them.

There are some who urge the new citizens in Louisiana to insist upon the nomination of a ticket half black and half white—upon an equal division of the offices. We presume they have the good sense to see that every such proposal revives the very caste distinction which it should be their aim to obliterate. The moment the new citizens at the South demand anything as black men, that moment they rouse the prejudice of color which every good citizen should seek to allay. Whatever they demand as citizens, they will obtain. Whatever they demand as men of a certain color or race, they ought not to obtain—for to obtain it would do more harm than good to their own interests. Let us suppose, for example, that the new citizens of Louisiana should be so unwise as to select their officers not for ability. integrity and fitness, but for their color—half white and half black. Would the result be the election of men the best qualified to frame and administer the government in a manner creditable to those who elected them? Clearly not, for the man who is best qualified ought to be chosen, no matter whether he makes one more or one less than half of either color. Moreover, the election of officers upon any such principles would go far to strengthen that prejudice at the North which insists that the colored people are not fit to use the elective franchise wisely. It would turn thousands of votes insome Northern States, now closely enough divided, and, when 1868 comes, might turn the scale against those who advocate and sustain manhood suffrage. The election of a colored man, on the ground that he is the most competent and trustworthy person for the office, would do no harm. But the election of colored men, on the ground that hey are not white, would give prejudice so powerful a lever in some Northern States as to endanger the success of the loyal party in 1868. And its defeat would soon be followed by a new reconstruction in Louisiana and every other Southern State.

Thus far, the colored people have displayed a most creditable moderation and good sense in the exercise of rights newly acquired. We do not beleive that they will injure their friends at the North and peril their own cause by any hasty and injudicious action in Louisiana. They have suffered long enough under the heel of the spirit of caste, and will be in no haste to revive that spirit by their own act. They know the need of selecting men well qualified as well as true, to frame the government upon which their future political condition is to depend, and to set the machine in motion. They will take care in choosing candidates to select men because of their qualifications and not because of their color. And so doing, they will give proof that those who have declared them unfit to vote were as much mistaken as when they pretended that the colored people were not fit to be free.—Missouri Democrat.

General Sheridan.

The President has determined to remove General Sheridan, it is said. Disposed to do his duty, whether the President likes it or not, General Sheridan has removed one Throckmorton, who, for his eminent services as a rebel general was elected "Governor" of Texas

Sheridan is winning the hearts of the people by his pluck, his sturdy good sense, and his resolute adherence to principles dear to loyal men. Sheridan the fighter may yet be eclipsed in public favor by Sheridan the administrator and statesman. For it can no longer be denied that the General has manifested a breadth and statesmanship of opinion, a clearness of understanding of political subjects, and an appreciation of the practical effect of measures, which the country hardly expected from him. When the war closed, men thought of him as a brave dashing, headlong fighter, whose impetuosity carried him over obstacles that other men would have thought it madness to attempt, but the majority attributed his marvellous success rather to good luck than to good judgment. Few realized that behind his volcanic impetuosity there was a cool calculation, sound judgment, and steady purpose, equally remarkable though less manifest to the ordinary observer. Few appreciated the fact that such deeds as his and such constant success in spite of the chances of war were due more to the correctness of his reasoning and the comprehensiveness of his plans than to the vigor of his execution. Placed in command at New Orleans, General Sheridan began to grapple with questions that the mere soldier has so often failed to master. The situation was more trying than that allotted to any other commander. In no other district have the former loyal men gone over in such numbers to the support of Mr. Johnson; in no other has Mr. Johnson interfered so persistently and with such determination to secure a Conservative triumph. Utterly demorolized by the trimming policy of Banks, the Union men of Louisiana had been broken into wrangling factions, disgusted by prevailing corruption, and delivered over by the treachery of Wells and others into the hands of their enemies. When Sheridan rode on the field at Winchester, and transformed by the magic of his personal presence a routed and flying mob into a victorious army, the scene of demoralization and disaster that met his view was not more complete than the political rout of Union men of Louisiana under the operation of the President's policy. But his triumph at Winchester has not been nore signal than has been his success in the difficult task of reconstruction. To-day Louisiana is so thoroughly and certainly loyal, that even his removal could not bring about a rebel victory. In all his dealings, with open rebels like Monroe, with pinchbeck loyalists like King and Wells, with scheming Unionists like those who assailed him through the New Orleans Republican, with ultra Radicals whose zeal sometimes outruns their discretion, and with the negroes, strong in numbers and exultant in the prospect of mastery where they have endured servitude General Sheridan has managed with such impartiality and justice, with such wisdom and far seeing appreciation of results, that he has won the respect and confidence even of the rebels themselves, and is sustained in his course by the substantial citizens of all parties, while his boldnes and fidelity have made made his name dear throughout the North.

In Texas his success has not been so great, for in that vast State there is a sparceness of population and lack of means of communication which made political regeneration exceedingly slow and difficult. In some parts of Texas, it is said, the rebels have never yet learned that the Confederacy has collapsed. The dominance of the rebel sentiment is complete; rebels from all other States, flying to Texas to retrieve fortunes shattered by the war, have given to the few Union men of that State a task altogether disproportioned to their strength. The influence of the State officials, so-called, has been used to defeat reconstruction. We have supposed it hardly possible to overcome these obstacles, so as to secure a loyal goverment. But General Sheridan's removal of Throckmorton indicates that he has reason to hope for success. He would hardly take such a step, if there were not practical results of importance to be gained, with some chance of success for loyal men if sustained by official influence. We may hope, therefore, that, if Sheridan is not removed, he will eventually accomplish in Texas as complete a reconstruction as has been secured for Louisiana.

Whether the President will remove him is still an open question. No doubt he has repeatedly determined to do so. No other commander has done so much to defeat Mr. Johnson's policy, or to expose the baseness of its purpose to the country, as has Sheridan. The glorious victory of last fall is due to no one man, but more than any other single individual General Sheridan contributed to secure it. But though personal feeling move the President to order his removal, he connot be so blind as not to realize that it will be a most unwise and impolitic act. Mr. Johnson has done almost everything that a man can do to make himself despised and hated, but he will find "in the lowest depths a deeper still" if he removes General Sheridan. The people would regard his action as directly intended to defeat the work of reconstruction, and to turn over the loyal men of Louisiana to the tender mercies of those who exult in the murder of Dostie. But, behind the practical consequence of the act, there would be the feeling that it was a deliberate insult to the General whose conduct has made him the favorit of the nation. When Mr. Johnson removes the victor of the Lhenandoah and Five Forks, to please the friends of Early and Lee, when ee insults Sheridan to please Monroe, Wells and Throckmorton, he may get ready to leave the White House. His impeachment will then be no longer stopped by the political calculations of Republican candidates for the Presidency. Popular feeling will soon accomplish what justice and reason ought to have effected long ago.—Missouri Democrat.

OUR NEW SESSION-HOUSE.

On last Sabbath morning at 11 o'clock, our new Session-house was solemnly dedicated to the service and worship of Almighty God, according to the ritualistic form laid down in our Book of Discipline. The day was beautiful and the occasion proved to be one of deep interest. The structure adjoins the church on the rear; is two-storied; measures thirty-four by forty-five feet; and will accommodate comfortably two hundred and fifty persons. In its construction, special attention was paid to light and ventilation. On the street side are two large windows of ground-glass, and a double-door; on the opposite side, a window, and two doors leading into the yard; in the South-west corner there is a gothic doorway which opens into the church. There are thirty substantial seats, which, together with all the woodwork are grained in imitation of oak. To facilitate the cleaning of the room the central seats are fastened to the floor by a strong hinge, so that they can be inclined backwards, and to accommodate the Sunday-school, the back of every other seat is reversible, so that the teacher can sit facing his class. Two small iron columns support the ceiling. The floor is covered in part with cocoa-matting and in part with carpet. Fifty cane-bottomed chairs have been purchased, and are placed in the spaces not occupied by permanent seats. The stand is unique. It consists of a low platform, neatly carpetted, and of a solid cross, which supports the Bible. The book-board on the top of the cross is covered with a green damask cushion, the work of womanly hands. On the platform is an ancient looking gothic chair, and in front of the cross a marble top communion table. To the left of the platform stands an excellent melodeon. Two of the gas brackets are double and four are single. The walls are white. In the rear of the room is a large book-case, well filled with Sunday-school books, and near it is an ice-water fountain. To avoid the annoyance from the children leaving their seats to get a drink, there is a tumbler-tray containing six glasses, which the sexton, at intervals, carries around. A sufficiently broad and well carpetted stair-way leads to the upper story. Here are three large and well ventilated rooms, separated by a narrow hall The largest of the three, is thirty-one by twenty-three, the next in size is twenty-three by thirteen, and the third is fourteen by eighteen. The largest is for an infant class and the galleries will accommodate at least two hundred children. The other rooms are for Bible-classes. The walls are white; the wood-work grained, and the furniture is to be similar to that in the lower room. The furnishing of the Session-house is the work of the ladies of our church. They gave most of the money and collected the balance; and with their own hands toiled to beautify the house of the Lord. God bless them!

At nine A. M. the children of the Sunday-school began to gather. Precious children, how firmly attached to us have they remained, through all the inconveniences of the past two years. What an experience they have had. Driven from place to place; compelled to walk a great distance to their Sunday-school, and often taunted by those children brought up in dis loyal families; but now they have a place which they can call their own. No wonder they were happy last Sunday, and to express their joy, they brought beautiful flowers and placed them on the cross. They had cherished the hope of this happy day in their young hearts for many a month; and now their faith is realized. The promise of their pastor and teachers is fulfilled. Some new scholars were present.

At 11 A. M. divine service commenced. The edifice was comfortably filled. Old familiar faces were there; those who had loved the truth and hated sin, and treason, and slavery; who had been true to their own convictions of duty; who had denied themselves, and borne the cross before a "wicked and perverse generation;" who had wandered from hall to hall, that they might worship the Lord who commands "obedience to the powers that be;" they were there, with countenances serene with contentment, and eyes moistened with grateful emotions. They had prayed long and often for that day; they had "hoped against hope;" they had walked by faith, but now they had the reward of their faith and patience.

The pastor of the church, commenced the exercises by reading from our ritual those beautiful words: "Dearly beloved, The Scriptures teach us that God is well pleased with those who build Temples to His name," etc., etc.

After the hymn, Rev. A. C. McDonald lead in extempore prayer. The Scripture lessons were read by Rev. Dr. Daily and Rev. W. M. Henry. Another hymn and then followed the sermon by Rev. N. L. Brakeman. His text was from the 20 Psalm 5, and 6 verses. After an exposition of the Psalm, he considered, the Character, Privileges, Security and Joy of the church. The character of the church is militant; to prove this position, passages were quoted from Moses, Job, David, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Michah, Naum, Habakkuk, Zacheriah, Matthew, Paul and John; and allusions were made to the garden and the cross. Militant but not vindictive, the church is against all wrong.

Privileges: Among the privileges, prayer was mentioned as the stronghold of the church. After noticing the objections to prayer, reference was had to Jacob, Moses and other Bible characters distinguished for their prayers.

Security: The point was argued from the following facts: God has created the church, and whatsoever he creates is forever; for the security of the church, stand pledged, his love, honor, oath; his people are one with him; and the history of the church is proof on this point. The greatest enemies of the church are those within its pale, such as Achan, Judas, Ananias and Sapphira, whose end was terrible.

Joy: The joy of the church is its salvation, which is great, as illustrated by its Author, its means and end, its appropriateness to man's condition, and its provisions for all. It is precious because it purifies, ennobles, cheers. In the recapitulation of the four points of the sermon, they were severally applied to our church.

The pastor then called for subscriptions, which in a few minutes amounted to nine hundred dollars. This was remarkable as it is now mid-summer, when many of our congregation are absent. But those present were in deep sympathy with the enterprise and had a mind to give and did give nobly. God bless them! To this $900, there is to be added the amount recently raised for Sunday-school library and for furnishing the Session-house, which in total makes nearly $1,500.

The collection having been completed, the trustees—Messrs. Whitmore, Jay, Baxter and Emley—presented the edifice to the Pastor, for dedication, who solemnly consecrated the house to God; and the impressive occasion was terminated with the doxology and benidiction.

Address of the Bishops of the M. E. Church South.

This document, addressed to the members of the Church South, consists mainly of a survey of the past year, a declaration of the vote on change of name, and on lay representation, an account of efforts among the freedmen, a defence of their own church policy and an attack on that of the Methodist Episcopal Church. They claim for their church great success the past year, that it has been reorganized in all its departments, and that they "now cover more territory, number more Conferences, station more ministers, and have a wider jurisdiction than at any former time." From the testimony before us, we infer that the newly elected bishops have been untiring in their labors, and representing as they do the first order of talent and efficiency in their church, we may readily believe that whatever could be done in the work of reorganization has been accomplished. They have doubtless been aided by the labors of a portion of their preachers, who, amid great privations, have done what they could to restore the prosperity of their church. This expenditure of labor, however, does not appear to have been attended with a corresponding increase, either of numbers or of piety. The proposition to change the name of the church is officially declared to have failed, thus leaving to the church the sectional designation which is likely to become a great hindrance to future success. Lay delegation has however carried, and we shall now have a practical illustration of the value of this feature.

Their work among the freedmen is not regarded as specially promising. The rule adopted by the General Conference for them, is spoken of as "the best for doing whatever we can do for this people." But they feel that they are laboring at a disadvantage. "We have no pecuniary inducements to offer them, no delusive social theories," nothing but "sympathy," and the "gospel." These last would probably be more efficient among the freedmen were it not for the recollection that the "pecuniary" means of the Church South, have been exhausted in an effort to make slavery perpetual, and that their "social theory" of the negro has ever been, that he was but "a squirrell's jump from another baboon." But although holding such "social theories," they still "recommend the establishment of day schools under proper regulations and "trustworthy teachers, for the children" of freedmen. And they recommend that this class of teachers be not ostracised while "honestly engaged in this work." But here all their sympathy ends. "For moral incendiaries and political propagandists who abuse school teaching to other purposes," they breathe only threatenings and "ostracism."

The address is encumbered with the usual unnecessary references to the political status of their church. This is purely a work of supererogation. It will not be necessary during the present generation at least, to spend time in defining the political bearings of the M. E. Church South. Her anti-loyal record is as clear as the sun in the heavens. While there was hope she prayed, preached, fought, and bled for the rebellion, and now that it is dead her heart lies buried in its grave. It is with remarkable disingenuousness that these bishops refer to the anti-loyal position of their church as giving them a non-political character. The only true claim they can make to that character is that their church is not in sympathy with the dominant party in the nation. While there was a political party with whose sympathies they could affiliate they stood foremost among political churches. If the Methodist Episcopal Church has been, and still is, active for loyalty, her efforts have been fully paralled by that of the Church South on the other side. Of course the bishops know this, they know it of themselves and of their entire church know that unceasing prayers went up day and night, from the whole church for the success of the rebellion. They know, as well as we, that their church was founded under the direction and advice of Calhoun. That it has been maintained purely in the interests of slavery, that it staked its all upon the Confederacy, and that it is now non politcal only in the sense that the party of its affinities is dead. Their church sits clothed in the garments of mourning, and though in her great grief she naturally vows never to form another alliance yet we doubt not could the party of a past age experience a resurrection, we should see a speedy return to her first love. Those present at the late General Conference will not soon forget the exultation of that body in having found "a strong friend in a high place." If that church is not to-day an ardent supporter of Johnson's party it is because that like herself it is already far gone into consumption.

NEGRO.

Several times we have been informed that many of our colored friends disliked to be called "Negroes," and did not like to see the word in print. They seem to think that the term "Negro" is applied to them as a nickname like "nigger." But such is not the case.

The term "nigger," is a term of derision or contempt, and we do not wonder that they dislike the epithet. But the word Negro simply means a black man, or a descendant of a black man.

Some have said in our presence, that if another name were applied to them besides "colored people," they thought as they were originally from Africa, they should be called "Africans," instead of "Negroes." But that term would be too indefinite, as it would not tell with certainty to what race they belonged, as some Africans are white and some are black. And, moreover, this name would be altogether improper with them, as neither they nor their parents were born in Africa. They are, therefore not Africans but Americans.

But as we remarked, the term would be too indefinite as all Africans are not of the black race. There are portions of Northern Africa, where many of the people are white, and their ancestors have resided there for scores and even hundreds of years. They, though of the white race are therefore Africans. Now were it said that a company of Africans had arrived by a certain ship, it would give us no certain idea of their color, or the race to which they belonged. If we wished to know this, we would have to ask if they were white Africans or black Africans; that is, whether they were white people or black people.

The human family is composed of five races: the Caucassian or white race; the Mongolian or yellow race; the Malay or brown, the Indian or red, and the Negro or black race.

Properly speaking, there is no such race as the African race, no more than there is the European race.

It will also be seen that the term Caucassian Mongolian, Negro, etc., indicates a race of a certain color, white, yellow, black, etc. Now why object to the term Negro, which simply means black, or, of the black race. Is not the name just as good as Caucassian or Mongolian? Suppose that years ago, had it been possible, the names of the races had been changed and the colored people received the name of Caucassian, and one of the other races been called Negro? What then? Why the same who now object to the term Negro, would in that case object to the term Caucassian. To illustrate this point: Is not the name Irishman, meaning a man from Ireland, just as good as Englishman, meaning a man from England? Yet there are some of the former country so sensitive on this matter, that you can not insult them quicker than by calling them Irishmen, while the Englisman seems rather to take pride in his name. Why is this difference? Simply because of the difference between the two countries and the condition of the people. The sensitiveness is not occasioned by there being any reproach in the particular word Ireland, or Irishman. Were the name of their land changed to Paradise, they would soon feel just as sensitive over their new appellation, as they now do over their present one.

But should Ireland be greatly exalted in wealth and prosperity, and in the education of the masses, and England be reduced to the present condition of Ireland, no man would then be ashamed of being called an Irishman, bu he would be ashamed to be called an Englishman.

The reproach, therefore, does not arise from the particular name applied but from the condition of the race, or people.

We once listened to a speech from Frederick Douglass, the great colored orator of the North, when he referred to the term Negro. He said: "Some colored people object to the name Negro, but I do not, the name suits me well enough. I do not see why 'Negro' is not just as good a name as Anglo," (referring to the Anglo Saxons.) "The only difference is in the attainments of the two. But I hope to see the day when the attainments of the colored people will be such, that the name Negro will be no reproach."

We trust that we have made this matter so plain, that all the colored people who read or hear this article, will understand that this word which they regard as rather offensive is really the proper word to distinguish their race; that it is not a word of derision or reproach; but that it is just as respectful to call them "Negroes," as to call the whites Caucassians. And we trust that henceforth they will take no offence, nor make any objection when it is applied either by friend or foe.

DR. GOLDMAN.

All honor to Dr. Goldman. For more than a year this true friend of education, has been laboring to change the board of school directors for the city. At the first meeting of the new Council, the Doctor moved to dissolve the old board, and on last Tuesday night, his resolution reached the Board of Aldermen and was adopted. The thanks of the public are due Dr. Goldman, and we are quite sure that he will suggest a new board which will be an honor to our city.

Let the best men in our city be chosen—men of years, experience, of broad and philantrophic views, and if possible, of means, who can afford to give their time to this great work. We deem this the most important work that can engage the attention of the council. Our system of education, both for the city and the State, is inadequate, and essentially defective. In the county parishers, it is more than a failure. In our city, the accommodations are not sufficient for all the children, and especially in view of the newly enfranchised. We need new school-houses; new teachers, and a new superintendent, and particularly a Normal School. Let the work be thorough. Let all the children be educated, and Louisiana shall be a new State.

Julius A. Noble.—This staunch old patriot has been worthily remembered by the new Common Council, by which he has been elected Chief Warden of the Workhouse. Mr. Noble will find it a workhouse for himself for the next six months; great reforms are needed there; some immoralities to be corrected; some speculations to be discontinued. The Times of the 14th has the following:

It appears to be the intention of the Council to make the Workhouse self-sustaining. Last night Mr. Julius A. Noble was elected Chief Warden, and is to carry out this intention. Mr. Noble is one of the few men in this city who during the four long years of the war, and since, has been a Union man. This fact cannot be gainsayed. Whatever may be his views on political questions, his honesty and integrity of dealing is beyond reproach. As a politician he is somewhat of an extremist, but we believe that he will make an efficient officer.

☞Rev. Dr. Newman, will preach in the Session-house of his Church, to morrow morning at 11 o'clock, to young men, on the recent death of Mr. Pierce. The sermon is by requcest.

From Vicksburg.—In a letter received from Rev. Lev Baker, stationed at Vicksburg, Miss., he writes. "Three hundred and fifty souls have been added to the church since I came here, and they are coming every time I open the doors of the Church."

Is This Brotherly.—At the late session of the Missouri Conference of the A. M. E. Church, Bishop Campbell, recommended the expulsion of a preacher, (who was from Murfreesboro, Tenn.,) because said preacher had withdrawn in the interval, joined the M. E. Church, and was laboring by appointment from Bishop Clark Is the African M. E. Church friendly to our Church?

New Churches.—Rev. James Lynch writes that he has raised funds for two lots of an acre each, for two new churches—one at Brandon and the other at Canton, Mississippi.

Our readers will not fail to read with care the articles on "Sheridan" and "Louisiana,", from the Missouri Democrat, and published in the Advocate, by request. They are ably written and very suggestive.

Something New in New Orleans.—We are pleased to learn that an Electrotype and Stereotype Foundry, has been established at Nos. 8, 10, and 12 Natchez street, up-stairs. Such an establishment has long been needed in this city, as heretofore those wishing anything in this line have been obliged to undergo the trouble and inconvenience of sending North.

We bespeak for the enterprising proprietors, Messrs. Westrup & Hummel, the patronage of the public, and we hope that while they are accommodating and benefiting the public, they may be richly benefitted themselves as a reward for their enterprise and industry.

Scripture Baptism Defended and Anabaptist notions proved to be Anti-Scriptural Novelties.—Such is the title of a work which we have received from the author, Rev. John Levington, of Michigan, a member of the Detrot, Conference. The work is published by Poe & Hitchcock, Cincinnati, O.

We have not yet found time to examine the work, but have seen it spoken of in very favorable terms. After an examination of the work, we shall be able to give a more satisfactory notice of the same.

Advertising Agency.—Of these agencies there are several throughout the country, but none do we hear more highly recommended than that of T. C. Evans, formerly Evans and Lincoln, 129 Washington street, Boston, Mass. Not only the Boston Press, but papers throughout the whole country who have had business transactions with Mr. Evans recommend him to the public as every way worthy of their confidence and patronage. Persons who wish to advertise their business will find it greatly to their advantage to consult Mr. Evans, as to the best mediums, and the best time to advertise.

He publishes in neat pamphlet form a list of the best papers in the United States and British Provinces, together with valuable information in respect to advertising.

It should be understood by business men, that the agent knows the circulation of all these papers, as near as it can be obtained from the publishers; that he secures the publication of advertisements at the lowest cash rates, and all this without any extra expense to the person advertising, he receiving pay from the publisher of the paper.

SLANDERING THE DEAD.—George Menard is Dead.—George was one of the old time negroes, who had earned his freedom and paid for it before the war. He was a hard working man and an earnest preacher and was respected and aided previous to the war, by the whole community. At one time the city authorities gave him the preference over white competitors and sent him to Alabama to procure information about Artesian wells and to obtain the necessary tools to make one in this city. He failed to succeed, but was not allowed to lose anything. After the war George turned up as the Rev. George Gordon, and forgot poor fellow, in a great measure his old friends. But freedom to the rest of his race crowded his profession, and his life since, has been a continued struggle against poverty. During the prevalence of the "curse of slavery" he was the owner of wagons, mules, horses and some few slaves, but when the "blight" was removed he had nothing left to re-commence life with. His funeral will be largely attended, as he was personally known to all within the scope of many miles around.

MR. EDITOR:—I send the above extract from the Baton Rouge Advocate. Because brother Gordon did not bear the name of his old owners, and turn against his friends from the North, they slander the old man by saying that he owned slaves. It is not so. The slaves that he bought, by working hard and saving his money, were himself, his wife and his brother, and now at his death, they say that he owned slaves. But thanks be to the God of heaven, the old man died in the faith, and all their slander can't reach him.

Yellow Fever in New Orleans.

The New Orleans Crescent of the 13th. contained the following sensible article on this subject:

A letter from the mayor of Indianola, concerning yellow fever in that city, states that from the 20th. of June to the latter part of July, "there were at no time in private practice less than one hundred cases, and in hospital not less than fifteen." On the 8th inst., there were but two cases, in private practice, and two in hospital. The fever it is said, came from Vera Cruz to Indianola, and while in the latter place it has carried off a very large number, including some prominent and best citizens. From Indianola the epidemic has traveled along the Gulf shore, and has very seriously attacked Corpus Christi and Galveston. The country has not wholly escaped, but the places last named seem to have been especially marked out for the ravages of the fever. The sickness at Corpus Christi was increasing a week ago among the whites, and had extended to the Mexicans and negroes. The Corpus Christi people appeal to New Orleans for aid, and we trust that the call will not be unheeded. They want money to pay for medicines and nurses. In Galveston twenty-three persons were interred on the 10th, all of whom were victims of this terrible scourge. The number of deaths during the week ending August 10th, was eighty-one The telegraph reports that the fever has reached Houston.

The abatement of the fever at Indianola and its appearance at different points along the Texas coast have prepared our people, in some degree, for its advent here. Thus far the cases reported in New Orleans have been called sporadic, and there is no reason for supposing that the yellow fever has assumed an epidemic form among us. Still the gradual increase in the number of sporadic cases convince us that there is need of caution, of careful attention to everything tending to preserve health and the health of the city. A due regard to diet, an avoidance of needless exposure to the extreme heat of the sun, or to the night air, and above all, the preservation of an equable frame of mind, will be worth much as preventives. Meanwhile, there is room for great improvement in ridding streets, gutters of filth, and the atmosphes of noisome stenches. These latter are within the control of the city authorities. If our new brooms make the city clean, General Sheridan's removals and appointments will make him the most popular man in Louisiana.

But right near to us the yellow fever is doing its work. At New Iberia it is raging. Yesterday morning there were five new cases; the day before there were five cases and three deaths. The disease is declared by New Orleans physicians to be yellow fever. Dr. Bruns and Mr. E. F. Schmidt, president of the Howard Association, call for more nurses. They are both upon the ground. Supplies suitable for the emergency are also required. Supplies left at 26 Carondelet street, will be immediately sent forward. Nurses may apply at Mr. Schmidt's office, 175 Common street, or at the headquarters of the Attakapas Navigation Company, 26 Carondelet.

Any contributions in money for the benefit of the sufferers at Corpus Christi or New Iberia, left at the counting room of the Crescent will be duly forwarded to those places; those intended for New Iberia will be placed by us in the hands of Mr. Schmidt, president of the Howard Association, and those for Corpus Christi will be sent to Mr. Headen, of the Howard Association, at that point, and all such contributions will be regularly announced in our columns. In times like these we are all brothers. We ask the people of New Orleans to give us something in a spirit of fraternal affection, for the relief of the sick and needy.

YELLOW FEVER NO LONGER EPIDEMIC IN INDIANOLA.—In answer to an inquiry of Captain Lockwood, of the steamship, W. G. Huges, Dr. Huges, mayor of Indianola, writing on the 8th, says that in his opinion the yellow fever as an epidemic no longer exists in that place. He adds:

From the commencement of the sickness here, say 20th June, up to within ten days ago, there was at no time in private practice less than one hundred cases, and in hospital not less than fifteen. Within the ten past days there has been a steady and rapid abatement of the disease, and to-day there are but two cases in prive practice and two in hospital. But one death during the last week.

Johnson, Stanton, Grant.

WASHINGTON, August 12, 1867.

The following is a verbatim copy of the correspondence between President Johnson, Mr. Stanton, secretary of war, and General Grant to-day:

THE PRESIDENT TO SECRETARY STANTON.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON, August 12, 1867.

SIR—By virtue of the power and authority vested in me, as President, by the constitution and laws of the United States, you are hereby suspended from office as secretary of war, and will cease to exercise any and all functions pertaining to the same. You will at once transfer to General Ulysses S. Grant, who has this day been authorized and empowered to act as secretary of war ad interim, all records, books, papers, and other public property now in your custody and charge.

Very respectfully, yours,
ANDREW JOHNSON.

To the Hon. Edwin M. Stanton, Secretary of War.

SECRETARY STANTON TO THE PRESIDENT.

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON CITY, August 12, 1867.

SIR—Your note of this date has been received informing me that, by virtue of the power and authority vested in you as President by the constitution of the United States, I am suspended from office as secretary of war and will cease to exercise any and all functions pertaining to the same; and also, directing me at once to transfer to General Ulysses S. Grant, who has this day been duly authorized and empowered to act as secretary of war ad interim, all records, books, papers, and other public property, now in my custody and charge. Under a sense of public duty, I am compelled to deny your right, under the constitution and laws of the United States, without the advice and consent of the Senate, and without legal cause to suspend me from office as secretary of war, or the exercise of any or all functions pertaining to the same, or without such advice and consent to compel me to transfer to any person the records, books, papers, and public property in my custody as secretary. But inasmuch as the general commanding the armies of the United States has been appointed ad interim, and has notified me that he has accepted that appointment, I have no alternative but to submit, under protest, to superior force.

Very respectfully yours,
EDWIN M. STANTON.
Secretary of War.

GENERAL GRANT TO SECRETARY STANTON.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES, WASHINGTON, D. C. August 12, 1867.

Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War:

SIR—Inclosed herewith I have to transmit to you a copy of a letter just received from the President of the United States, notifying me of my assignment as acting secretary of war, and directing me to assume those duties at once. In notifying you of my acceptance, I cannot let the opportunity pass without expressing to you my appreciation of the zeal, patriotism, firmness, and ability with which you have discharged the duty secretary of war.

With great respect,
your obedient servant,
U. S. GRANT, General.

THE PRESIDENT TO GENERAL GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON CITY, August 12, 1867.

SIR—The Hon. Edwin M. Stanton, having been this day suspended as secretary of war, you are hereby authorized and empowered to act as secretary of war ad interim, and will at once enter upon the discharge of the duties of the office. The secretary of war has been instructed to transfer to you all records, books, papers, and other public property now in his custody and charge.

Very respectfully yours,
ANDREW JOHNSON.

To General U. S. Grant, Washington, D. C.

SECRETALY STANTON TO GENERAL GRANT.

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON CITY, August 12, 1867.

GENERAL—Your note of this date accompanied by a copy of a letter addressed to you, August 12, by the president, appointing you secretary of war ad interim, and informing me of your acceptance of the appointment, has been received. Under a sense of public duty I am compelled to deny the president's right under the laws of the United States to suspend me from office as secretary of war, or to authorize any person to enter upon the discharge of the duties of that office, or to require me to transfer to you, or any other person, the records, books, papers, and other public property in my official custody as secretary of war But inasmuch as the president has assumed to suspend me from office as secretary of war, and you have notified me of your acceptance of the appointment of secretary of war, ad interim, I have no alternative but to submit, under protest, to the superior force of the president. You will please accept my acknowledgement of the kind terms in which you have notified me of your acceptance of the president's appointment, and my cordial reciprocation of the sentiments expressed.

I am, with sincere regard,
Truly yours,
EDWARD M. STANTON,
Secretary of War.

To General U. S. Grant.

General Grant is accordingly acting.

WASHINGTON, August, 12.—The president, at ten o'clock this morning, sent a communication to Stanton suspending him from office as secretary of war, and directing him to transfer the records, books, etc., to General Grant, and informing Stanton that Grant had been empowered to act as secretary of war ad interim. At the same hour authority was sent to Grant authorizing him to act as secretary of war ad interim, and directing him to at once enter upon duty.

At noon the president received a note from Stanton, denying the right under the constitution and laws to suspend him without the consent of the Senate, or legal cause; but inasmuch as the general commanding the armies of the United States had notified him that he had accepted the appointment as secretary of war ad intermin, he had no alternative but to submit, under protest, to superior forces.

Grant has assumed charge of the war department, and appeared at a cabinet meeting to-day for the purpose of considering certain questions connected with the territory recently acquired from Russia.

The first communication from the executive department to General Grant as secretary of war ad interim was issued to-day at 2 o'clock and referred to Louisiana matters.

From Columbus we went to Aberdeen. Of that place we have spoken before. It remains much the same. We had hoped the road from Prairie station would be better than in the spring. While drying and becoming hard, it seemed to have retained all its unevenness. It has been our lot to go over a number of "hard roads to travel," but if we were ever jolted to the same extent in that distance before, memory has failed us. We respectfully recommend dyspeptics to try it. The result will be a kill or a cure. For this delightful bit of travel, eight miles, we only had to pay three dollars, about forty cents a mile. There may be some towns among the Andes as inaccessible, as Aberdeen, but we have never been there, and we hope Providence will never require us to go. While there, we fared better than on our previous visit. The food question did not so press itself upon our consideration. Our landlord provided for our wants in a very satisfactory manner. The weather was intensely hot, but the water was good, the cooking was fair, the food palatable, the buttermilk cool, having been hung in the well. There were no mosquitoes, and the people were not disagreeable.

We held quarterly meeting on Wednesday and Thursday, preaching nights only. Congregations were good and we had a pleasant time. The church seems to be prospering. Several brethren were in from the country to see us, and wanted the old church extended to their neighborhoods. If we had a few more laborious, enterprising, self-denying preachers to travel and work in this part of the State, we might accomplish a great work among this people. We are trying to work all we have, exhorters included, but they are unable to meet the demands.

The school in Aberdeen is prosperour, pupils too numerous for the teachers. The Church South has established a mission and opened a free school for the colored people at Aberdeen. This has excited some jealousy among our people. So far as our Southern brethren will labor in good faith, for the moral and intellectual good of the freedmen, we wish them success. They have not made very encouraging progress so far.

The people were very much interested in the matter of registration, and much in want of information. At their request we addressed a large audience of colored and some white people on Friday afternoon, endeavoring to explain to them their rights under the law as it now is, and the issues that will be before them at the coming elections.

In this country as in most others, greatefforts have been made to deceive and mislead the freedmen. They have been told that registration would get them into trouble, cause them to pay extra taxes, go to fight Indians, or be taken to Cuba, or any other falsehood that they thought would deter them from registering.

We heard of one old man, who after he had registered, had his fears so wrought upon by his employer, who told him he would now have to go into the army, that he gave his employer forty dollars of the wages due him to get him released. The white rascal told him that by telling the officers that the old man was old and near sighted, and paying them the forty dollars, he had with much difficulty got his name stricken from the books. We heard of another case, where some freedmen had been robbed of their certificates on the highway. These things we have only on hearsay, but we saw two women while in Aberdeen who had been badly whipped, by their employer, they said: The back of one and the breast of the other, were badly marked and scarred, some of the wounds not yet well.

The precious privelege of whipping women is one that some of the chivalry give up with great reluctance. Friday we went to the cars again and to Corinth that night. Here we found the church in a less satisfactory condition than at any other point on the district. Some of the official members had been guilty of the grossest sins. We expelled some, others withdrew under charges, reduced some official members to the rank of private ones, and reprimanded some in a public manner. After this we gave them some preaching which was intended to be plain and pointed.

On the whole we think the moral effect was good. We continued the services by preaching on Monday and Tuesday evenings. Congregations were good, and there was considerable interest. We hope to be able to give a better account of this place next time.

Brother Hamilton has a school of over one hundred, and his pupils are progressing well. The Sunday-school numbers seventy scholars, taught by brother Hamilton, and some of the officers stationed here, and their wives

Tishamingo county differs both in its natural characteristics and its population from most of the State. The country, though considered a poor one, is adapted to grain, grass and fruits. There is an abundance of good timber and lumber is very cheap. There are immense beds of marl, and coal is not far away. There is a preponderence of white people, many of whom never owned slaves. Of the two papers here one is Republican the other Conservative Reconstructionist. The country is well adapted to a diversified agriculture and horticulture, and the situation favorable for manufactering and commercial enterprise. With greater liberality of sentiment, more intelligence and industry, and an infusion of good people, this might become a pleasant and prosperous country.

ALEXANDRIA IMPROVING—UNFAITHFUL GRAND JURY—DOOM OF TRAITORS—WHITE SLAVES.

At Alexandria my home was with friends whose hospitality I enjoyed at my last visit. Here were precious letters from home awaiting me, with good tidings and words of cheer. Much building has been done here of late, several fine stores have been erected; but business is dull and there are gloomy apprehensions of short crops, in consequence of the continued rains. The rowdy spirit yet prevails in the Parish, the grand jury having adjourned without paying any attention to the numerous outrages of the past few months; even declaring "their gratification that so few crimes of any magnitude had been committed since the last session." Some one is terribly blamable for this lawlessness. The Bureau agent tells me he has done all he is permitted to do; much dissatisfaction with him has existed; and neglect of duty charged, but he is taking pains to right himself. In no other place is a change of civil officers so greatly needed. The military commander also is spoken of as unfit for his responsible position, by reason of his habits. The last issue of the "Democrat" of Alexandria has some vile abuse of the Republican Club and warns the people away from our church as "a nest of infamies." Brother Small is styled "an ignorant old hypocrite" surely it is true "that whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad." These rebel organs and politicians are rushing to their doom. There is a good Republican Club here, which meets in our school house; able men have been chosen to attend the New Orleans convention for organizing the Executive Committee. So far colored men mostly are members of the club; though many whites would gladly join, were they sure of protection in the exercise of their political rights. The shackles are struck from the dark slaves of the South, but the whites are still bound. It is in General Sheridan's power to free them, will he not come speedily to their help?

CHURCH PROPERTY—SECOND QUARTERLY CONFERENCE—STATISTICS—THE POST-OFFICE.

Our religious interests are prosperous. The beautiful church is now filled every Sabbath with worshippers. The Sunday-school is large and very interesting, the old preacher has had entire charge of it, but from this time on, he will have able help. The estimated value of our church property, land, school-house, parsonage and church is about $3500. The Missionary Society of our church has paid the greater part of the expense of building the church; giving us $2000; the rest has been given by the people of color. The whites have given nothing; about $200 is yet to be raised, and some friendly citizens of Caucassian descent are generously assisting us. It was intended to have a dedication service, but the brethren preferred to delay it until next Quarterly Conference, when the weather and roads will probably allow of a better attendance from other parts of the circuit. The Quarterly Conference was held Saturday, June 1st, at 3 P. M. in a terrible storm of rain, as at last meeting; roads were impassable, rain falling, and worse, my letters, giving notice, had failed to reach Brother Small. [Why will not our dear Uncle Sam help us in our mail arrangements? who is to blame? The Alexandria Postmaster has a multitude of offices, is seldom here, and the business is in charge of boys, under a deputy said to be in known antagonism to the Government.] Five members of conference were present, 10 applications for licenses to preach or exhort, were presented and left in the pastor's hand, for report at next meeting. One license to preach was granted, no complaints, except of one member. The brethren in general have done well, an excellent board of trustees was selected, six appointments, 465 members and probations, 9 conversions, 18 baptisms, 5 deaths, 2 marriages, 40 sermons and 50 meetings by pastor, 6 Sunday-schools, 355 scholars; a gain of one school and 110 scholars. Day schools are in operation at nearly all the appointments, it was resolved to cut off the Bayou Bœuf classes, for a separate circuit soon as the necessary arragements can be made.

SUNDAY MEETINGS—WHIPPED FOR PRAYING—FREEDMEN'S SCHOOLS.

The religious services were held Thursday and Friday nights, Saturday morning and Sabbath. They were well attended and interesting, especially on the Lord's day. It was the first quarterly meeting in our new church and the day was fine. At the Sunday school meeting, 9 o'clock, we had 104 children and 70 adults. The scholars rehearsed their pieces preparatory to an exhibition on Monday, week. Hymns were sung, Bible lessons and catechisms had been well learned; the Sunday-school collection amounted to $3 35. Love feast followed; one sister said, "I set out at a time when it was take you down and give you a hundred lashes for sing or pray." Another told how the overseer stopped the preaching and praying on a place where many had before enjoyed these privileges, by giving fifty lashes as punishment. "Woe unto him by whom the offence cometh—better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he drowned in the depth of the sea." At its close eight persons joined class. The 3 o'clock service consisted of preaching and the Lord's supper; it was crowded but orderly and solemn. The night meeting the same; and with gratitude to the Giver for a lovely day and so much prosperity, we went to our homes. The work of the Lord prospers here; church and schools are doing well. Freedmen's Schools in Rapides Parish are increasing and are in good condition. Major Willoner shows an interest in the work, and he paid a high compliment to his assistant, Mr. Farr, for his faithfulness. 58 day and night schools are in operation, with 1663 pupils and 33 teachers, of whom 19 are colored. In connection with them are 23 Sunday-schools with 1200 pupils and 30 teachers. A supply of books and papers for them is greatly needed. This is an excellent report. The school on our premises has not been prosperous since last conference; but a change of teachers promises improvement. I visited the new teacher, a young colored lady from Michigan, whose parents reside in Canada. She has been teaching on a plantation near Alexandria, and the planter made her situation so disagreeable as to cause her removal; at one time riding his horse into the school-house, and otherwise insulting her.

COLORED ORPHANS—ROMISH PRIEST—MILITARY ACADEMY—PELICANS.

I learned that about a hundred colored orphan children had been bound out in the Parish; some persons have from three to six. In many cases they are ragged, badly treated and not schooled. Most of them were indentured by Lieut. Butler, the former agent, and some by the court. Brother Small, as instructed, has endeavored to send some of the youngest and most destitute to the Asylum, but no arrangements could be made for transportation. The Bureau has a great responsibility in the matter of these little ones. There is yet no public school in Alexandria, and private schools are not numerous; one is kept by the Romish Priest at a charge of five dollars per month for each scholar. Besides this employ, and his priestly duties in the church, and marriages, funerals, masses, etc., he is a professor in the State Seminary, with a fine salary; and to all these he adds a market stand, where every morning, Sabbath too, one may chaffer with the worthy Friar Tuck for a bunch of carrots or a fine cabbage from the church garden. He is said to be quite popular, taking his smoke or drink with any one, and at the coffee-house. This alien priest did all in his power to aid the late rebellion; such are the shepherds that prey upon the flock. By the courtesy of Maj. Willouer, I was afforded an opportunity to visit the Military Academy, piloted by my young friend Mr. Farr. It is opposite Alexandria, and about three miles from Pineville. We rode through the camp, now occupied by a detachment of U. S. Regulars; from the staff hung as if ashamed of itself or company, a most woefully ragged flag. Our way was through the pine woods, varied with briar patch. As we approached the place, the young pelicans were seen blackberrying. Emerging from the woods the beautiful building comes abruptly in view. It is three stories high, of brick, and whitewashed, with a campus of 300 acres. On either side and in rear were the professors' dwellings and shops, but all had an unfinished look. We were courteously ciceroned through the building by one of the professors.

FACULTY AND EXPENSES—RAPHAEL SEMMES—RUDE STUDENTS—DISLOYALTY.

The Seminary rooms and halls were capacious, with high ceilings, everything neat and clean. Recitation rooms conveniently furnished. Library well supplied. Dining room large, clean, but rather rough. Dormitories large, healthy apartments, with beds after the navy style—rolled up in the morning at 5 o'clock, and at night opened on the floor. There are eleven professors and 130 students. The expense for 1866 was $89,000, of which $13,000 was for teachers salaries, and $20,000 for building and repairs. Of this amount $36,000 was realized from pay cadets. The range of studies is large, and the improvement of the students said to be good. Disloyalty unhappily seems to be a condition of employ, as the late report says: "Admiral Raphael Semmes reported for duty on the first instant. The institution congratulates itself on securing the services of this gentleman of varied abilities, for the important chair assigned him." All was pleasant until we bade farewell to the gentlemanly professor, our guide, mounted our horses and rode away, when we were saluted with hooting, hisses, and yells by a crowd of the scholars, who had learned somehow that we were not "chivalry." No further demonstration was made, but enough occurred to suggest that it might be necessar too send as students a few polite colored men to give these young rebels an example of gentlemanly behavior and loyalty to our country. No flag of the Union, or any picture of any loyal general or statesman was seen; the nearest approach was an engraving of President Johnson in the library, in company with Davis, Beauregard, and other rebel heroes.

WHEDON'S Commentary On The Gospel.

VOLUME II.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

From the Episcopalian.

This volume completes the authors's exposition of the four Gospels. It is now designed to go through the whole New Testament in the same way, and possibly the Old. If even the New Testament is finished after the author's plan it will form an admirable work, and supersede the use of Barne's Notes except among his partisans. It combines all the latest researches in biblical criticism, including the studies of Lange and others of the same class, and is characterized throughout by careful, patient study, and by great clearness and vigor. The style is at the same time popular, and to no class will the volume prove a valley of dry bones, as is, however, often the case with many works on the same subject.

From the Biblical Repertory and Princeton Review.

It is a matter of gratulation that so many distinguished men of all denominations are turning their attention to the preparation of commentaries on the Holy Scriptures. This volume is written in a clear, terse, and forcible style. There is very little waste of words. The expositions are concise, to the point, and evangelical and edifying. It bids fair to be a very valuable work.

From the Boston Review.

We hail all such evangelical efforts to simplify, explain and diffuse the scriptures among the masses. Such unpretending, yet really very valuable volumes are our best defense against the skepticism and irreligion of the age, and that scholarly, insinuating, and undermining influence that we import from many of the German critics. This volume reminds us strikingly, in form, method, and style, of Barne's Notes, and will be emminently serviceable to the large communion that rejoices in the name of its distinguished author.

From the New Englander.

It seems to be prepared with much care, and exhibits the same result of scholarly investigation to a greater degree than its unpretending character would lead one to anticipate. Sabbath school teachers and others who desire brief and concise annotations on the Gospels, to aid them in their studies and instructions, will find much in this work that will be useful to them.

From the Christian Inquirer.

It is a learned book, gathering up an immense mass of illustrative facts and incidents from all sources, and arranging them in admirable order.

From the Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Whedon's Commentary on the Gospels, which recently made its appearance, is an able and timely production. The author is at present the editor of the Methodist Quarterly Review, and, as an original thinker and vigorous writer has no superior. He possesses the qualifications of a commentator, and the public appreciate his volumes because they contain new ideas, fresh from the laboratory of a cultivated mind. For advanced Bible classes they are unsurpassed, and the Sabbath-schools, recognizing their importance, are introducing them into their course of study. No instructor of youth should be without them, as they shed new light upon many interesting incidents in the life of Jesus.

From the Canada Christian Advocate.

We regard this second volume as fully equal the first, and both together as being a most valuable and seasonable exposition. It will be a companion to the Bible in many houses, and will enable, we trust, many, many thousands to feed upon the blessed word with increasing profit and relish. It was not uncalled, and it will not be unwelcomed or unprized. Its "popular use" will be another important instrumentality in educating the Church, and raising the intelligence of religious professors to something like what the times require. It will be found a valuable assistant to teachers and members of Bible classes We wish the author health and leisure to complete the commentary on the entire New Testament.

From the Independent.

Dr. Whedon has won a marked place in religious and theological literature by the strength and polish of his pen. His commentary on Matthew and Mark attracted no small attention from its style, no less than its treatment of the topics of the text. It is less discursive and less accumulative than Lange, whose work is a thesaurus as much as an originrl effort. Yet it is hardly less sagacious and profound. Though brief it is not shallow. Compact with thought often strikingly expressed, it gives the essence af the Gospel in its vitals. He has expounded Luke more ably than Oosterzee; though John is deemed by him the crucial test of the volume, as it really is of the Bible. Many passages merit quotation, whether of the thought or the expression, for which, however, we have no room. His argument, in ch pter ix, against Hume'n famous doctrine on miracles, is one of the briefest and best we remember to have seen. Clergymen and Sunday-school teachers will find much nourishment in this series of volumes that is intended to include the whole of the New Testament.

MEDICAL.

DR. J. WHITE'S INSTITUTE,
127 CARONDELET STREET,

Directly in rear of the City Hall.

The first aim of human beings is happiness, and happiness implies health of body and mind.

This Institute is established for the cure of all forms of disease, Chronic, and Acute

Dr. White does not allow any disease afflicting his patients, however virulent to escape his vigilant care, as his patients universally testify.

It can easily be perceived how important it is that a full and correct diagnosis—detecting all the diseases that afflict the patient—should be attained And it is no less important to the afflicted that the remedies should be equally clear to the physician; proving to his patient, that when the local disease is eradicated, the whole system is completely renovated and restored to its normal condition. "A sound mind is a sound body."

Dr. White's experience and success for thirty years, in an extensive practice in large cities, have brought to him for treatment a vast amount of every form of disease, justifying him in promising the cure of the patient, if the vitals and vitality are not irreparably wasted.

His remedies cure the worst eruptions of the skin; all forms of ulcers, of whatever nature, to the incipient cancer, which so grievously afflict humanity. The remedies restore the stomach, liver and blood, and all the secretions and excretions of the entire system, in unhealthy to a healthy condition. Instead of injuring the system or constitution, they renovate and repair the injuries and wastes of the entire organism.

One or two hours spent at the institute with Dr. White frequently saves weeks of fever or other suffering—ofte life.

N. B. Persons desiring Dr. White's advice and remedies, will be careful to call at 127 Carondelet Street, or address by letter, as there are several Drs. Whites in the city

MASON & HAMLIN,

MANUFACTURERS OF

CABINET ORGANS,

ALSO

PORTABLE ORGANS,

ADAPTED TO SECULAR AND SACRED MUSIC, FOR DRAWING-ROOMS, CHURCHES, SUNDAY AND DAY SCHOOLS, LODGES, &C., &C.

Uniting to a considerable extent the capacity of the Piano-Forte with that of the Pipe-Organ, and costing much less than either.

They occupy little space; are elegant as furniture; not liable to get out of order, and are securely boxed, so that they can be sent anywhere by ordinary freight routes, all ready for use.

Forty Styles, plain or elegant cases; one to twelve stops; Prices, $75, $90, $110, $125, $130, $1 0, $150, $160, $170, $200, $225, $250, $300, $435, $540, $550, $600, and upwards.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs were introduced four years since, and are a great improvement upon the Melodeon, Harmonium, and other reed organs, greatly excelling them especially in the excellent quality and variety of their tones; in power and quickness of action, and capacity for expression,

THEIR SUCCESS HAS BEEN ENTIRELY BEYOND PRECEDENT,

and proves how greatly such an instrument was needed. Again and again the manufacturers have been compelled to double their manufacturing facilities, until they have been increased six-fold. From the most eminent of the musical profession, the most distinguished pianists, organists, composers, and musical directors, the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs have received an amount and degree of commendation never before bestowed upon any similar musical instrument. More than two hundred and fifty of the most eminent musicians in the country have given written testimonials to the value of the improvements contained in them, and that they excel all other instruments of this class.

FIFTY-TWO GOLD OR SILVER MEDALS, or other highest Premiums have been awarded to Mason & Hamlin for the important improvements effected by them, and for the

SUPERIORITY OF THEIR INSTRUMENTS TO ALL OTHERS.

Constantly exhibiting their instruments in competition with others, they have been awarded the highest premium in every instance, but three or four.

For churches, sunday schools, etc., the Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs are the instruments long wanted, of the very best quality, abundant power, not too expensive, nor liable to get out of order.

For private use, in drawing-rooms, &c., they are not less desirable, and are finding a place in the musical families of the principal cities.

They are adapted to a wider range of music than the piano, being fitted for all sacred music and for much secular music, while their quickness of action is such that the most lively, rapid music can be played on them. Then their cost is greatly less, as well as their liability to get out of order.

BRIEF EXTRACTS FROM OPINIONS OF DISTINGUISHED MUSICIANS.

I should think they would become very much sought after as parlor instruments as well as for public performance.—Sigismond Thalberg, the world-renowned Pianist. Sure to find its way into every household of taste and refinement which can possibly afford its moderate expenses. Far superior to everything of its class I have seen.—L. M. Gottschalk, the eminent Pianist. Such pure musical tones, promptness and smoothness of action and fine variety of effect, I have not found in any other instrument of the class.—S. B. Mills, the eminent Pianist. Really so excellent that there can hardly be much difference of opinion respecting them.—William Mason, the eminent Pianist. The best instrument of its class with which I am acquainted, and worthy a place in every drawing room Harry Sanderson, the eminent Pianist. In every respect far superior to everything I have ever seen of the kind, whether in Europe or America.—Geo. Washbourne Morgan the eminent organist, N. Y. I can only reiterate what so many in the musical profession have said, that for equality, promptness and exquisite tone, they are unequalled.—John H. Wilcox, the eminent Organist, Boston. Surpasses everything in this line I have ever seen, whether French or American.—Jon Zundel, the eminent Organist, N. Y. The best reed instruments in the world are made in the United States, and your Cabinet Organs are greatly superior, and by far the best made here.—Max Maretzer, Musical Conductor, N. Y. Far surpasses all other similar instruments, which have come under my observation.—Carl Zerhau, Musical Conductor, Boston. Exceeds in my estimation every other instrument of this general class. Thos. Hastings. I can recommend them with confidence.—Lowell Mason. As soon as the people become acquainted with the superior merits of your instruments, your only trouble will be to supply the demand.—Wm. B. Bradbury. I have never seen anything of the kind which interested me so much.—Geo. F. Root. Exciting much interest in musical circles, and already becoming the fashion. N. Y. Home Journal. The highest accomplishment of industry in this department. This is not only our opinion, but the unanimous verdict of the organists.—Boston Advertiser. A glorious instrument for the temple service, so readily secured as to be available for any congregation, and effective and beautiful as to meet the desires of the most refined and fastidious.—N. Y. Observer.

The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs must not be confounded with other reed instruments, from which they vary essentially, their superiority being largely derived from PATENTED IMPROVEMENTS, which cannot be employed by other makers. Among them are,

The AUTOMATIC BELLOWS SWELL, patented, a most important invention, and greatly the best swell ever devised being much more effective and easily used than any other. The variety and beauty of effect of which it is capable, can not be appreciated except from actual use. The many attempts to imitate or find a substitute for this swell, prove its value. None of them, however, approach it in excellence and simplicity.

IMPROVED SELF-ADJUSTING VALVES patented, secure much more perfect action, durability, and freedom from liability to get out of order.

WOOD'S OCTAVE COUPLET patented, in effect nearly doubles the power of the instrument in which it is used.

NOISELESS SAFETY VALVES patented, prevent the hissing sound often heard.

The IMPROVED COMBINATION REGISTER patented, gives great facility in drawing stops.

The Ruined One.

I saw her dressed in rich array,
Hope in her bosom shone,
Nor grief nor tear bedimmed the day,
She left her youthful home.

She stood before the altar fair,
Mild as a meek eyed dove,
And bound her future fortune there,
By vows of sacred love.

In all the innocence of youth,
She stood as fair a flower,
As ever grew on the green earth,
Or bloomed in Eden's bower.

A score of years, had come and flown,
Into the distanct, past,
Before I met this injured one,
Pressed by misfortune's blast.

No more the joylit smile I see,
Upon that grief worn face,
Its furrowed lines now show to me,
Dark sorrow's bitter trace.

Hope, Fortune, Home and Health had fled
And all her visions fair,
Before Intemperance iron tread,
Sank into empty air.

Oh! God my very soul was moved,
To see this fragile flower,
Sink down with grief, oppressed and bowed,
Beneath affliction's power.

Intemperance! dark wrathful fiend,
Had drank up all her bliss,
And left her without home or friend,
To cheer her loneliness.

Her broken heart, and orphaned ones,
Alone were left to her,
No roof to turn the angry storm,
From the poor sufferer.

No hand to cheer her day of care,
Or smooth life's toilsome road,
Poor wanderer; turn thine eye aoove,
And put thy trust in God.

The Camp Meeting Song.

October's day had reached its height,
And shining forth with radiance bright,
Sweet Phoebus threw his golden light,
Upon the woodland scenery.

I saw fair lines of tents arrayed,
Beneath the forests lonely shade,
And knew that here all undismayed,
Encamped Messiah's chivalry.

No armor gleamed before the eye,
No banner shone against the sky,
With wide effulgene folds on high,
Sure sign of war's red empery.

My ear drank in no trumpet note,
Nor heard the dying echoes float,
Nor stiring drum, nor bugle spoke,
Attesting wars's proximity.

But sweeter sounds than ever came,
Than those which follow martial fame,
A thousand voices swelled the strain,
In rich delightful melody.

Brave men stood there in manhood's prime,
And age lent too its faltering chime,
While woman's silvery voice kept time,
Amid the glorious minstrelry.

They sang of no grim warrior brave,
Who'd sent his millions to the grave,
But of that Lamb who died to save,
The son of lost humanity.

I listened to that glorious song,
And as its notes swept full and strong,
Ne'er heard mortal strains prolong,
Such soul inspiring melody.

It seemed as if the harpers fair,
That dwell above the upper air,
Had come below the scene to share
Beneath the azure canopy.

Where now are those, who swelled that strain?
Gone upwards from this land of pain,
To join on high the loud acclaim,
Of Heaven's unceasing minstresy.

Yet still that song doth linger yet,
In calm and joyful retrospect,
And will till life's last sun shall set,
Upon my earthly memory.

Then may I hear that song again,
Swell sweetly o'er the Heavenly plain,
And join on high the loud amen!
Amid that blissful company.

WAS IT CHANCE?

Dr. Guthrie has an unshaken faith in God's constant care over his creatures, and in his power to move on human hearts, or to control natural law, so as to accomplish His purposes. He gives an incident from his parochial life:

I was in the habit of visiting a decent widow, as paralysis made it impossible for her to attend church. She was tended by a very dutiful daughter, who, working at a flax-mill in the neighborhood, toiled hard, and contented herself with plain dress and simple fare, that she might help to maintain her mother. Before leaving the cottage for her work she was in the habit of heaping up the refuse of the mill in the grate and kindling it. She placed her helpless mother in a chair right before the fire, and as this fuel burned slowly away the old woman was kept comfortable till her return.

It happened one day that I left my manse, and skirting the wall of the old churchyard, and passsing the cornmill, with its busy sound and flashing wheel. I took my way down the winding dell to the cottage of the old woman, which stood in the garden embowered among trees. But having met a parishoner, with whom I had some subject of interest to talk about I called a halt; and sitting down on a bank of thyme, we entered into conversation. Ere the subject was half exhausted, the widow rose to my recollection. I felt somehow that I must cut it short, and hasten away on my visit. But the idea was dismissed, and the conversation went on. However, it occurred again and again, till, with a feeling that I was neglecting a call of duty, as by an uncontrollable impulse, I rose to my feet, and made haste to the cottage. Opening the door, a sight met my eye that for the moment nailed me to the spot.

The erection of mill-refuse which had been built from the hearth some feet up the open, wide chimney, having its foundation eaten away, had fallen, and precipitating itself forward, surrounded the helpless paralytic within a circle of fire. The accident took place some minutes before I entered. She had cried out, but no ear was there to hear, nor hand to help. Catching the loose about her, on and on, nearer and nearer, the flames crept. It was a terrible sight for the two Wigtown women—martyrs, staked far in the sand of Solway Frith, to mark the sea-foam, crawl nearer and nearer them; it was more terrible still for this lone woman in her lone cottage, without any great cause to die for, to sit there and see the fire creeping closer, drawing nearer and nearer to her feet. By the time I had entered, it had almost reached her, where she sat motionless, speechless, pale as death, looking down on the fire as it was about to seize her clothes and burn her to a cinder. Ere it caught I had time, and no more, to make one bound from the door to the hearthsone; and seizing her, chair and all in my arms, to pluck her from the jaws of a cruel, fiery death.

By what law of nature, when I lingered on the road, was I moved, without the remotest idea of her danger, to cut short againt all my inclinations, an interesting conversation, and hurry on to the house, which I reached just in the nick of time one or two minutes later, the flames had caught her clothes, and I found her in blaze of fire. Be it mine to live and die in the belief of a present and presiding, as well as a personal God; in the faith which inspired my aged friend to thank Him for her wonderfui deliverance, and the boy to explain his calm courage on the roaring deep, in these simple but grand words: 'My father is at the helm.'

MEXICO.

THE REASONS FOR THE EXECUTION OF MAXIMILIAN.

Department of War and Navy.

Section 1. The city of Queretaro having been occupied by force of arms you have informed the government that eight thousand men and more than four hundred chiefs and officers of the enemy have been captured, among them Ferdinand Maximilian of Hapsburg, who hitherto has styled himself the emperor of Mexico.

Before dictating any resolution relative to the prisoners, the government has desired to deliberate with that calmness and forbearance which are befitting to the seriousness of the circumstances.

It has set aside the resentments which a prolonged war inspire, desiring only to listen to the voice of its high duties towards the Mexican people.

It has considered, not only on the justice with which the laws might be applied, but on the necessity there may be of carrying them out.

It has considered to what extent mercy and magnanimity may be exercised, and what limits justice and the imperative necessity of securing the peace, protecting the legitimate interests, and securing the rights and all the future of the public will not permit to trespass.

After Mexico has suffered all the evils of a civil war of fifty years duration; when the people had succeeded finally in causing the laws and the constitution of the country to be respected; when they had repressed and conquered certain classes which, to satisfy their private interests, sacrificed all interests and all social rights; when peace and tranquility once more dawned upon the country; in view of the general will of the people and the impotency of those who had desired to subjugate them, the most reckless of the remnant of the foreigner, hoping, with his assistance, to gratify their cupidity and revenge.

They went abroad to arouse the ambition and turpitude of a foreign monarch, and they came back to the republic, having for their only associates foreign intervention and treason.

The archduke, Ferdinand Maximilian of Harpsburg, consented to become the principal instrument to carry out this work of iniquity, which has weighed upon the republic for five years, attended by every kind of calamity.

He came to oppress a people; attempted to destroy their constitution and their laws without any other authority than that of a few votes destitute of all weight, and forcibly obtained through the presence and force of foreign boyonets. He came voluntarily to assume the most serious responsibilities which are condemned by the laws of all nations, and which were provided for in several pre-existing laws of the republic, the last of them being that of January 25, 1862, sanctioned in order to define the offenses against the independence and security of the nation; against the law of nations, against the individual guarantees, and against the public peace and order.

The flagrant acts in the conduct of Maximilian embrace the greater number of responsibilities specified in that law.

He not only lent himself to serve as the instrument of a foreign intervention, but also to carry on himself a war of filibusters; he brought other foreigners, Austrians and Belgians—the subjects of nations nor at war with the republic.

He endeavored to subvert forever political institutions and the government which the nation had freely given to itself, by assuming to arrogate to himself the supreme power without other authority than that of the votes of a few persons appointed and delegated by the foreign invaders, or who were compelled thereto by the presence and threats of the foreign force.

He disposed of the lives, the rights and the interests of Mexicans only through the violence of force, and without any lawful authority therefor.

He promulgated a decree containing barbarous proscriptions, in order to murder the Mexicans who defended, or whoever did not betray those who defended the independence and institutions of their country.

He caused a very large number of bloody executions to be perpetuated under that barbarous decree and its application to be visited upon distinguished Mexican patriots, even before it could be presumed that they had heard of its promulgation.

He ordered that his own soldiers, or consented, under the false title of chief of the nation, that the soldiers of the foreign invader should set fire to or destroy many and entire towns throughout the whole extent of the Mexican territory, and particularly in the States of Michoachan, Sinoloaf, Chihuahua, Coahuila and Nuevo Leon.

He ordered his own agents, or consented that the agents of the foreigner should murder many thousands of Mexicans who were charged with the crime of defending their country.

And when the armies of the foreign power withdrew, and he saw that the whole republic had risen against him, he still sought to surround himself with some of the most guilty men of the civil war, availing himself of every violence and depredation, of death and desolation, to uphold to the last moment his false title, of which he has not attempted to divest himself until he found himself obliged to abandon it, not of his own free will, but through force.

Among the men who have desired to sustain him to the last moment, thus consummating all the consequences of treason to their country, appear as some of the principal leaders, the so-called Generals Don Miguel Miramon and Don Thomas Mejia, who have figured prominently in Queretaro as generals-in-chief to the corps d'arme of Maximilian.

Against both of these, a grave responsibility was already pending for their having sustained the civil war for many years without stopping at the most guilty acts, and being always an obstacle and a constant threat against the peace and consolidation of the institutions of the republic.

Article 28 of the law referred to provides that the pains imposed in it be applied to the criminals caught in the very act of committing the crime (in flagrante delicto), or during any action of war, the identification alone of the person being required.

Both of these circumstances being embraced in the present case, the public knowledge of the facts would suffice to authorize you to proceed agreeably to that article of the law.

Nevertheless, the government, desiring to make use of its ample faculties, with the view that there may be the fullest justification for the proceeding in this case, has resolved that with reference to it, the trial be proceeded with, which the same law provides for in other cases, so that in this manner, the defence which the accused may wish to make may be heard in this one, and that the judgement be pronounced called for in justice.

In virtue whereof the citizen president of the republic has determined that you adopt the measures for proceeding to the trial of Ferdinand Maximilian, of Hapsburg, and of his so-called generals, Don Miguel Miramon and Don Tomas Mejia, proceeding in the trial with entire accordance to the articles, from the sixth to the eleventh inclusive, of the law of the 26th January, 1862, which are those relating to the form of the judicial proceeding.

Respecting the other chiefs and officers or functionaries apprehended in Queretaro, you will be pleased to send lists of them to the government, specifying the classes or occupation which they held among the enemy, in order to be enabled to determine what is proper to be agreeably to the circumstances of the cases.

RECONSTRUCTION!

IMPORTANT ORDER OF GENERAL SHERIDAN.

AN ELECTION ORDERED.

Apportionment of the State.

THE RATIO OF REPRESENTATION.

The Election to be for or Against a Convention.

APPOINTMENT OF OFFICERS OF ELECTION.

THEIR DUTIES DEFINED

Headquarters Fifth Military District,
New Orleans, La., August 17, 1867.

Special Orders No. 119.

1. In compliance with section two of the act of congress published in general orders No. 33, war department, adjutant general's office, current series, notice is hereby given that an election will be held in the state of Louisiana on the 27th and 28th days of September next, to determine whether a convention shall be held, and for delegates thereto, "for the purpose of establishing a constitution and civil government for the state loyal to the Union."

1. The convention will be composed of ninety-eight members, that being the number of the most numerous branch of the state legislature in the year 1860. The total number of registered voters in the state is 127,639 which being divided by the number of delegates gives 1302 as the number of votes entitled to one delegate.

11. Commencing fourteen days before the election, boards of registers will, after having given reasonable public notice of the time and place thereof, revise for a period of five days the registration lists, and upon being satisfied that any person not fully entitled thereto has been registered, will strike the name of such person from the list, and such person shall not be allowed to vote. The boards will also, during the same period, add to the registry the names of all persons who at that time possess the qualifications required by law, who have not been already registered. No person shall be entitled to be registered or to vote by reason of any executive pardon or amnesty, for any act or thing which, without such pardon or amnesty, would disqualify him for registration or voting.

111. To secure nearly as practicable anequitable representation in the convention, the delegates are apportioned among the several parishes and districts as follows:

The parish of Ascension shall elect two.

The parish of Assumption shall elect two.

The parish of Avoyelles shall elect two.

The parish of East Baton Rouge shall elect three.

The parishes of West Baton Rouge and Pointe Coupee shall elect three.

The parish of Bienville shall elect one.

The parish of Bossier shall elect two.

The parish of Caddo seall elect three.

The parishes of Calcasieu and Vermillion shall elect one.

The parishes of Caldwell and Ouachita shall elect two.

The parishes of Carrol and Morehouse shall elect three.

The Parish of Catahoula shall elect one.

The parish of Claiborne shall elect two.

The parish of Concordia shall elect two.

The parishes of DeSoto and Sabine shall elect two.

The parishes of East and West Feliciana shall elect three.

The parishes of Franklin and Madson shall elect two.

The parish of Iberville shall elect two.

The parishes of Jackson and Winn shall elect two.

The parish of Jefferson shall elect four.

The parish of Lafayette shall elect one.

The parish of Lafourche shall elect two.

The parishes of Livingston, Washington, St. Helena and St. Tammany shall elect three.

The parish of Natchitoches shall elect two.

The parish of Orleans, first district shall elect nine.

The parish of Orleans, second district, shall elect five.

The parish of Orleans, third district, shall elect five.

The parish of Orleans, fourth district, shall elect three.

The parish of Orleans, right bank, shall elect one.

The parishes of Plaquemines and St. Bernard shall elect two.

The parish of Rapides shall elect three.

The parishes of St. Charles and St. John the Baptist shall elect three.

The parish of St. James shall elect two.

The parish of St. Landry shall elect four.

The parish of St. Martin shall elect two.

The parish of St. Mary shall elect two.

The parish of Tensas shall elect two.

The parish of Terrebonne shall elect two.

The parish of Union shall elect one.

IV. The election will be by ballot, and will be conducted in the manner and according to the rules governing ordinary elections of a similar character. Each ballot bearing the name of the delegate voted for, will have written or printed upon it the words: "For a Convention," or, "Against a Convention." Two days shall be given for voting.

V. The board of registers within their respective parishes will see that all the necessary preparations are made for properly conducting the election—that the commissioners of elections in all the voting precincts are properly qualified and instructed in the performance of their duties—that due and sufficient notice is given of the time and object of the election, proper ballot boxes prepared, etc.

Each board will designate some point within its parish, convenient of access, preferably the courthouse, to which the ballot boxes of all the precincts of the parish shall be brought immediately after the election. The board will then carefully count and make duplicate returns of the votes cast, and will see whether the returns of each precinct correspond with the record of the commissioners. Each member of the board will make affidavit to the correctness of the returns one copy of which will then be brought by some member of the board to these headquarters, the other copy being retained by the board until further orders.

VI. Commissioners of elections will be responsible for the preservation of order at the polls during the election; they will see that a full and fair opportunity is given for depositing his ballot to every man entitled to vote, and will generally do everything that is requisite to secure a full and impartial expression of the opinions and wishes of the people through the ballot-box.

To this end they are hereby authorised and empowered to make arrests, and are clothed, during the days of election, with all the functions of civil executive officers. All civil officers will promptly and fully obey every demand made upon their official services by the commissioners of election in the furtherance of these objects during the days of election, under penalty of dismissal from their offices, and such other punishment as may be inflicted by military commission.

At the close of the election, the commissioners will carefully count the votes and record the result in duplicate; the ballots will then be replaced in the ballot-boxes, which will be sealed and carried, together with one copy of the record made by the commissioners, to the place designated and there turned over to the board of registers.

VII. Should violence or fraud be perpetuated at any of the voting precincts on the the days of election, the offenders will be punished in the severest manner, and the election within the precincts will be held over again under the protection of the United States troops.

When all the retuns reach these headquarters, the result of the election will be published, and if a majority of the votes, according to the law of Congress, have been in favor of a convention, the names of the delegates elected will be officially announced and the convention called together.

LIFE'S LAST BATTLE.

Sure 'tis a serious thing to die my Soul!
What a strange moment must that be,
When near thy journey's end,
Thou hast the gulf in view;
That awful gulf, no mortal e'er repassed,
To tell what's doing on the other side!
Nature runs back and shudders at the sight,
And every heart string bleeds at parting.

BLAIR.

Life is but the journal of death The sentence has gone forth, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Death's quiver is not yet empty of its fatal arrows. There is room enough in the silent dormitories of the dead. In the midst of life we are in death. All die. For six thousand years, death hath held a carnival over an expiring humanity, Of all the countless millions of earth, all have bowed in death, save Enoch and Elijah. On every hand we behold. mother earth with her dead children in her arms. We are drifting to the eternal sea. Mariners on life's ocean, all are destined to be stranded on eternity's shore. No land, no age, no condition is exempt. In all zones, in every season, on land and sea, the living die. Beautiful youth, fair as the rose that drinks its cup of crystal dew, is, like the flower,

Nipp'd by the wind's untimely blast,
Parch'd by the sun's directer ray,
The momentary glories waste,
The short-lived beauties die away.

S. WESLEY JR.

Vigorous, healthful, glorious manhood, sinks in death, like a proud vessel that yields to the fury of the storm, while old age, like a tree decayed at its roots, topples to its fall, "Vanity of vanities, saith the preacher, vanity of vanities, all is vanity." Dost thou boast of thy wealth? Remember, death shalt summons thee from thy palace to thy grave; the spider shall weave his web around thy cenotaph, and the neglected beggar-boy, idly sit upon the bosom of thy tomb. Be not vain of thy beauty, O woman, decked with jewels and intoxicated with the merriment of the waltz and quadrille, for like faded flowers in autumn-time, death shalt blast thy beauty. And son of fame and fortune, wreathed with the garlands of genius, remember, the sighing winds of winter shall chant the dirge of thy departed glory.

To one "without God and hope in the world," how indescribably gloomy is death. To him, the tomb is as a starless night. The darkness of death can be felt. Beyond, all is forbidding. No heavenly voices heard singing:

"Sister spirit, come way;"

no arms of love are open to receive the soul; no Savior standing in the tomb, dispelling its gloom. Sin makes the grave repulsive; but Jesus can pardon that sin.

Jesus can make a dying bed
Feel soft as downy pillows are,
While on his breast I lean my head,
And breath my life out sweetly there.

WATTS.

At such a time as this; when the sickly season is upon us; when that terrible scourge, yellow fever, is in our midst and the young and strong are falling victims to the disease, we should solemnly turn our thoughts to "Life's last battle." Shall sin or salvation triumph in that supreme moment. Calmly but earnestly all should turn their attention to this solemn moment, when the mind can comprehend the nature of sin, and the heart feel the sorrow of guilt and the joy of pardon, and be prepared to meet their summons to the tomb. In health, not in sickness; in, life, not in death, should men seek the Savior;

Hasten sinner, to return!
Stay not for the morrow's sun,
Lest thy lamp should fail to burn,
Ere salvation's work is done.

SCOTT.

MAJ. GENERAL SHERIDAN.

Every loyal citizen of Louisiana, sincerely regrets the removal of General Sheridan from the command of this Military District. Since Butler, no commanding general in this department has done more for true loyalty, than General Sheridan. Accepting the Congressional policy, ex animo, he has aimed to carry out that policy with prudence and impartiality. With a grander courage than he ever displayed on battle-fields, he boldly threw the gauntlet at the President's feet, and ever since the July riots of 1866, he has had to contend against the whole power of the Administration. This is well known, and this is the cause of his removal. Himself a true Republican, he has fearlessly told the friends of the Administration in this State, that if they desired to be readmitted into the Federal Union, they must "pass through the Republican crucible," and that until they did, "he would do all that was in his power to keep them out." As an evidence of his sincerity, he has given us a Republican Governor, a Mayor, State Attorney, Judge of the parish criminal court, a city treasurer, a working majority in the city council, a chief of police and boards of registration, and of commissioners of election, a majority of whom are in full sympathy with the policy of Congress. We with many others desired him to do more, and in the very beginning we did not fail to urge upon him the imperative necessity of removing the chief of police and of appointing colored men on the several boards of registration. Had he done this, he would have given greater satisfaction to the whole country; yet at the eleventh hour, he has met these earnest wishes of our loyal men. To the gratification of all, he has recognized the manhood and citizenship of the colored man, by appointing not less than seven as members of the common council of New Orleans. And we are satisfied that his hesitancy is this regard arose from Washington influences which he felt bound to respect; and we do not hesitate to say, that through his own representations those influences were modified and he allowed the exercise of greater freedom in his appointments.

When a public servant has done so well, and when others have done so ill, we prefer to commend rather than to censure. Time will bring to light the wisdom, discretion, and glory of Sheridan's administration in Louisiana. When the temporary and local causes of dissatisfaction are removed; when political aspirants have been satisfied at the public crib; when the federal appointees, in this City, from the judicial Bacchus down to lesser and soberer incumbents, have found it convenient to change views, to hold office under the administration of a white President and a colored Vice President; and when the great, and wise, and honest plans of Sheridan have been matured, then Sheridan will be remembered here only with gratitude and admiration, and Louisiana will go solid for Philip H. Sheridan as the successor of Andrew Johnson.

It must be exceedingly gratifying to the General to know that his removal is regretted by our colored people; under him they felt secure, and should opportunity be given, they will manifest their admiration for him with unbounded enthusiasm.

And in view of the official corruption practiced in this city by others, it is with conscious pride that Sheridan may ask, in the language of the old prophet: "Behold, here I am; witness against me before the Lord and before his anointed: Whose ox have I taken? or whose ass have I taken? or whom have I defrauded? whom have I oppressed? or of whose hand have I received any bribe to blind my eyes therewith? and I will restore it. And the people said, Thou hast not defrauded us, nor oppressed us, neither hast thou taken aught of any men's hand."

IMPORTANT ELECTION.

The General commanding the Fifth Military District, has appointed an election to be held on the twenty-seventh and twenty-eighth days of September proximo, for the registered citizens of Louisiana, to determine whether they will or will not hold a convention, "for the purpose of establishing a constitution and civil government for the state loyal to the Union." In many respects this will be the most important election ever held in the state of Louisiana. At the time designated, not less than 80,000 newly enfranchised citizens will cast their FIRST ballot. Suddenly raised to the rank and rights of citizens, they should rejoice in their elevation, but tremble in view of the responsibilities which are now imposed upon them. Out-numbering their white fellow-citizens 83,000, to 45,000, they constitute the controlling power in the State. As goes the blackman, so goes the State. If the franchise is wisely used by them, their freedom will be their glory, and their citizenship will be a benefaction to the State. It is therefore of the utmost importance that they should rightly understand the issue of the appointed election, and how they are to carry themselves through the campaign.

At the coming election the people of Louisiana will be called upon to vote for, or against a convention. This is a privilege granted in the Reconstruction Bill; it is left optional with the people whether or not they will hold such a convention. No doubt, many will vote against a convention; and this is a point which our new citizens should well understand. But who are those who will thus vote, and why will they thus vote? As a rule they are your old masters, and those who directly or indirectly supported the rebellion against the Union. They are opposed to a convention for the reorganization of the State for the following reasons:

I. They still believe in slavery, and, therefore, refuse to reorganize the State under a law which recognizes your freedom and which makes you citizens.

2. They still believe in state sovereignty, and, therefore, decline to acknowledge the authority of a law which interferes with the elective franchise in the State; that is, they deny the right in Congress to give you the right to vote.

III. They still hold to the right of secession, and, therefore, deny the right in Congress to disfranchise any white man in the South, who saw fit to fight against the Union; that is, they do not consider themselves guilty of treason and rebellion, and, therefore refuse to confess their guilt by voting for a convention. under a law which condemns them as traitors and rebels.

IV. By refusing to participate in the election, other than to vote against a convention, they intend thereby to express their disple asur and utmost disgust with the Military Bill, and by so doing excite the tender sympathies of the North, and induce the repeal of the law. These causes and effects they earnestly believe will the more certainly transpire if quickened by a Negro Government, in Louisiana. Having no faith in the blackman's capacity to govern, they hope for the worst results from his elevation to power; and that these results will change public sentiment and effectuate the repeal of the law.

V. And the fifth and last reason which we now give is—the opposers of the convention, hope by the delay of reconstruction to brighten their chances for their own restoration to political power. At present, they have no hope. The majority is against them; but time may change all things to their favor.

Yet these are the reasons which should induce every loyal citizen in Louisiana to vote for the convention. You believe in the Divine right of freedom; you hold that Congress has the right and is bound to secure to each state a republican form of government, under which all can vote; you regard secession, rebellion, and rebellion, treason, and, therefore, traitors and rebels should be disfranchised; you have faith in the capacity of the loyal men of Louisiana to rule the State, and that the best of results will follow the extension of the franchise to our people; and it is your solemn intention that those who sought the ruin of the State shall not rule the State. Therefore, every loyal man and true friend to his country, should vote for the convention. Congress having prescribed this mode of reconstruction, our simple duty is to act accordingly.

And it should be the earnest purpose of all, to complete the work of reconstruction at the earliest practicable moment. If Major General Thomas displays the same energy of his illustrious predecessor, the convention may be held early in November. Not more than a month should be occupied by that body. Thirty days thereafter the people should be called to vote on the ratification of the new constitution, and in January 1868, said constitution should be submitted to Congress for its approval. Unnecessary haste and unnecessary delay should alike be avoided, both are evils; yet there is no good reason why Louisiana should not be readmitted into the Federal Union by next February.

Last Saturday and Sunday was Quarterly meeting at Carrollton and Jefferson city. At 3 o'clock P. M. Sunday, Rev. A. Ross preached an excellent sermon and administered the sacraments, at Carrollton. At night brother Brakeman preached at Jefferson city, administered the sacraments, exhorted and opened the doors of the church, when eighteen persons joined. It was an excellent Quarterly meeting. Increase for the quarter, seventy-four. Brother Williams is doing a good work.

The revival continue at the Poet Street Church, Rev. E. Green, pastor. There were nine conversions and fifteen accessions last week.

The students of the Biblical Institute are doing an excellent work at the Sixth Street Church. A blessing is resting upon all the churches. "Praise God from whom all blessings flow!"

Julius A. Noble, the Chief Warden of our City Workhouse, has entered upon his new duties with affectionate regard. The other evening we met him on his way home, weary and alone, and to our inquiry as to where he had been, he tenderly replied. "I have been to put my pet-lambs to bed."

Seven doctors and one dentist were to hear Dr. Newman preach last Sunday morning. All well!

Mr. Simon has favored us with a copy of St. Landry Progress, edited by Mr. Vidal, and which is gladly put on our exchange list. The Progress is a fine looking sheet, and we trust its name is the earnest of its success.

University of New York.—Medical Department.—Annual Announcement of Lectures.

The session for 1867—68 will begin on Monday, October 14th, 1687, and continue until the 1st of March.

The lectures will be given in the building adjoining the New York Hospital, as they were last year.

The graduates of the University will perceive at once the important advantages arising from a connection with this, the largest Surgical Hospital in America. There were treated in it last year nearly 3000 cases, more than half were surgical. Owing to being located in the midst of a dense population, the College Clinics are carried forward on a scale elsewhere unattained.

The Hospital is opened to students every day throughout the year. They will attend the Clinical instruction of the Physicians and Surgeons, and witness the Surgical operations, which are almost of daily occurrence. It has a large library and Anatomical and Surgical Museum accessible to students, as are likewise the post-mortem examinations in the dead-house. Professor Post is one of the consulting surgeons. All the University lectures and instructions being in the Hospital, the student avoids the serious loss of time encountered in those cases where colleges are at a distance. He also has the advantage of seeing the treatment of accidents and operations suddenly called for.

The Faculty will feel especially obliged to their graduates if they aid in making known these great inducements which the University now presents.

The number of graduates of the Medical Department is nearly 2700, and the number of students has been more than 8000.

MORTUARY REPORT.

Twenty-three deaths were officially reported in the city during the twenty-four hours ending at six o'clock Wednesday morning. Twenty are white and three colored. Ten died from yellow fever, four from other fevers, and the balance of various ordinay complaints.

FROM THE CHURCHES.

Brother AMBROSE EAGLE, writes from Shreveport, La., "our church has had a steady growth since its organization, every Sabbath, we have received on trial, and by letter several members. The Sunday-school is flourishing. We now get regularly one hundred copies of the "Freedman." They are carefully circulated, and are a great help to us. I still carry on the day school, but have an earnest desire to attend the Biblical Institute, and would like to make arrangements for it. We have opportunity of purchasing excellent church lots for $300, but can take no step until we know what help the Missionary Society will give; all the people are asking about it, and waiting to hear from you, what help we can get in building, please publish that Rev. Samuel Armstrong; deacon in the African M. E. Zion Church, at Shreveport, has joined us. He has been examined in official meeting and recommended.

REV. S. M. SMALL, writes from Alexandria, La. We have had to close our day school, and suspend services in the church, the high water is upon us and will do much damage. The school-house will need much repairs, and our fences also; we are going about in boats. The people are suffering. The Bibles and hymn-books are received.

REV. J. M. BRYAN, writes from St. Martinsville, La. We have had glorious meetings, crowded houses, on the 14th. I baptised seven in the Bayou, and one in the church, six members joined on Thursday night. We had mourners meeting, ten were forward, and in good earnest, with tears, one was powerfully converted, on the way home she was praying, with her eyes fixed on heaven, when a star she was looking at, started and then burst, she fell by the roadside, and, soon went on her way shouting Gods praises, she is one of our creoles. They are coming to Jesus.

The package of books and tracts received; can you tell us what the Missionary Society is doing about our application. Oh, how much we need a church, it is probable we will soon be turned out of our shanty. At Lafayette and New Iberia we are doing well.

REV. E. HAYARD, writes from Natchitoches, La. We have had a sad time since we lost our friend Mr. Stauffer, every body seems to be disturbed, he was much beloved and was one of our best friends. The church is going on very well, but money comes in very slow. We have paid $250 to the builder, he is trying to make us trouble and shut up the church, for the amount due. We are all very poor now, for the high water is on us, crops are about distroyed, and great many laborers are turned off to suffer, no money to pay them; still the church and Sunday-school increase in numbers, everybody white and black is crying out hard times.

REV. I. R. FENNER, writes from Monroe La. Since Quarterly Conference, I have been up the Ouachita several miles and organized a church with 40 members, baptised 45 adults and 29 children, we hope soon to erect a meeting-house. At another place I organized a church with 32 members. At Bastrop I baptised 2 adults and 25 children. In Monroe we have received 6 members, and I baptised 2 persons, our trustees say they will hurry on the work of building fast as possible; they have collected very little money yet. They ask what success you have had with the missionary board, we are struggling hard to get along, but are all very poor. We have only a little cabin to preach in, and a family also occupies it. Brother Sines is trying hard to get the lot and building in Bastrop for our Morehouse people. I have been sick with fever since my return home, but now am getting better.

"HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY
"Adjutant General's Office,
"Washington, Aug. 19, 1867.

"General Order, No. 77.

"I. The following orders have been received from the President:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, WASHINGTON,
August 19, 1867.

"Major General George H. Thomas is hereby assigned to the command of the Fifth Military District, created by the act of Congress passed on the 2d day of March, 1867. Major General P. H. Sheridan, is hereby assigned to the department of the Missouri. The secretary of war ad interim will give the necessary instructions to carry this order into effect.

(Signed) ANDREW JOHNSON.

2. In pursuance of the foregoing order of the President of the United States, Major General G. H. Thomas will, on receipt of this order, turn over his present command to the officer next in rank to himself, and proceed to New Orleans, La., to relieve Major General P. H. Sheridan of the command of the Fifth Military District.

3. Major General P. H. Sheridan, on being relieved from the command of the Fifth Military District by Maj. General G. H. Thomas, will proceed to Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, and will relieve Major General W. S. Hancock in the department of the Missouri.

4. Major General W. S. Hancock, on being relieved from the command of the Department of the Missouri by Major General P. H. Sheridan, will proceed to Louisville, Ky., and assume command of the Department of the Cumberland.

5. Major General G. H. Thomas will continue to execute all orders he may find in force in the Fifth Military District at the time of his asssuming command of it, unless authorized by the general of the army to annul, alter, or modify them.

6. Major General Sheridan, before relieving Major General Hancock, will report in person at these headquarters.

By order of General Grant.

E. D. TOWNSEND, A. A. G.

WASHINGTON, August 21, 1867.

When Secretary Stanton was suspended, General Grant filed a protest with the President against the act. And when he received the order to relieve General Sheridan he urged Mr. Johnson to reconsider it. But the latter proving inexorable, Grant sent him a written remonstrance, couched in most emphatic language. The President declines to allow these papers to made public.

It is understood that Secretary Seward and Postmaster General Randall disapproved the removal of General Sheridan, but yielded without recording their dissent.

Commissioners of Election.

We are rejoiced to find that General Forsyth in apportioning the commissioners of election has ordered that at least one of the commissioners on each board shall be a citizen of African descent.

What wonderful progress has been made within the last six years; and, in reflecting upon it, we are more than half inclined to subscribe to the Darwinian theory of development, if by analogy Darwin will allow us to carry his reasoning into the realm of politics.

Years before the war we were taught in our Sabbath-schools and churches that the negro was created by God to be a slave, and that slavery was a divine institution. By physiologists and ethnologists we were also taught that the negro was not a human being but an animal, as oxen and horses are animals. To-day, however, through the action of General Forsyth, we are given to understand that he has risen to the full stature of manhood, and is competent to discharge judicial functions, and in doing so exercise the highest reasoning faculties. By clergymen and ethnologists we have been told that the negro was first a monkey, then an ape, then a gorilla, then a chimpanzee, then an otrang-outang, then a black heathen, then a gentile, then a prisoner of war to be righteously dealt with according to the will of the conqueror, then a slave, then a contraband, then a soldier, then a freedman, then a citizen, and then a judge. We believe in the development theory, for we find that theories themselves develop and grow as rapidly as the subjects of them, and clergymen and men of science can always be found to create theories as fast as they can find worldly, sensual, and avaricious men to pay for them.—N. O. Republican.

Opelousas District.

BAD ROADS — GRASSY CROPS — PIETY AND HOSPITALITY — WON'T VOTE FOR MASSA — SHOOTING VOTERS.

The roads from Alexandria to Opelousas, shows the effects of long continued rains; bogs, broken bridges, deep mud, crosing fields, taking down and putting up fences, with much loss of time, these try the travelers patience and task fearfully the powers of his good horse. This is the only route from Red river to Attakapas, and yet it is nearly impossible most of the year. There is no public conveyance, and twenty or thirty miles to a post office, nice place to live! The crops of corn and cotton on Bayou Bœuf were almost hidden by grass and weeds; much of the corn is stunted and scalded, very little cane is planted; cotton looks well considering the treatment it has had, much rain and little work. Farmers have lively times fighting weeds, but a few fair days will assure a good crop; and unless the avenger in the shape of worms, visits us again, we will have a profitable season. At General Fullers place some cotton is near blooming, (June 5th). I enjoyed again the hospitality of this kind family; it was an oasis in the desert; an opportunity was afforded me to preach in the quarters, quite a congregation of white and colored gathered, here too the family altar was reared, always welcome and precious to the Itinerant. In this neighborhood all who are eligible have been registered, and the colored men are of one mind, they can be relied on to vote republican. They say "we like you massa, you kind and pay up, but we cant vote for you, it want be safe. "A large republican meeting was recently held on the Bayou, it was very orderly, but while going to their homes, a white man fired into a party of freedmen; they arrested and then released him, but fearing for his life, he sought protection for the night with a colored man who is school teacher and one of our local preachers; sleeping in his bed and being accompanied by him, in the morning to his home.

VALUABLE PREACHERS — GREAT MEETING. WHITES TERRIFIED — THE BARBAROUS PAST — CHURCH BUILDING.

Our preachers are getting to be valued as conservators of the peace; recently a republican meeting was called in St. Laudry parish, crowds of colored men from the prairies gathered in Opelousas, on horses, in carts and buggies. It was said to be the largest meeting ever held there, two or three thousand present, and very generally armed. The citizens were pallid with fear, many closed their dwellings and left the town, "for the wicked flee when no man pursueth." Brother Jackson addressed the vast crowd of freedmen in the square, urging that they were not come to war, to secure their rights or avenge their wrongs, but as freedmen to consult upon their welfare, and arrange for the coming election. He persuaded them to deposit their arms in a secure place, and the day passed without a disturbance, scarcely an oath; they were orderly, sober, gentlemanly, this is the testomony of all classes. The evil practice of going armed, with other barbarisms and abominations practiced by the politicians and people of the dead past, might well have taught these men to be lawless even brutal, but the new South has buried these customs in the tomb of the rebellion. Our church lot here is well located with room for church, schoolhouse, parsonage and play-grounds, costing us only $100. The people are now out of doors, it is difficult to get a place to preach from Sabbath to Sabbath, but we are now ready to build, the contract is made, lumber ordered and thanks to our good friends in the North, a house to worship God in and save souls, will soon be ready. Our Alexandria builder has the contract for this and the Washington church.

CASTE OPPOSITION — DID GOD MAKE WHITE PEOPLE? — JUDGE MOORE'S DEATH — HILL OF ZION.

At Washington an African opposition had arisen, in sympathy with the New Orleans caste party, and had given Brother Jackson trouble. The parties of whom our rooms were hired sided with them and to be rid of us, uncle Ben raised the rent from $6 to $15 per month. This put us again out of doors. The delay in building alarmed some of our people, and they left us. An African preacher came up from New Orleans and organized a church, everything seemed to be against us; but uncle Morris offered us a room in his little house, rent free, may God bless him for it. Here our services will be hereafter held and the Sunday-school gathered. The little school has suffered some by an effort made to turn it over bodily to the Africans, it is now safe, and the dear children cared for. This wicked movement in the interest of caste is making some progress among the more ignorant colored people in the country. The African church, some colored politicians and bad white men are working hard at it. Where their objects can best be gained by union with whites, as in New Orleans, that policy is used. In the country the colored people are told they are the most numerous and must take all power into their own hands. I had some difficulty in explaining to an otherwise inteligent colored men here, his error in thinking his race was about 100 to 1 in the United States, and could control everything. The new African preacher said to his congregation, one day, "we want nothing to do with white men; God never made them, he made man colored. and sin or something turned them white; we will have nothing to do with anything God has not made."

Our Washington lot is nearly an acre on a hill, in a beautiful grove of timber. We have been somewhat embarrassed by the death of old Judge Moore before our papers could be made out by his agent. We have been to much trouble, have cleared the building spot, and feel anxious to go on, our friend Mr. Prescott and the administrator promise to arrange matters soon as the law will allow, and ere long, please God, we hope to sing "This hill of zion yields a thoussnd sacred sweets; Before me * * * or walk the golden streets."

OPELOUSAS QUARTERLY CONFERENCE — OUR INSTITUTE STUDENT — STATISTICS — SABBATH IN THE GROVE.

The 2d Quarterly Conference was held Saturday, June 8th, in Washington, five members were present, faithful among the faithless, eleven absentees, of whom five had a good report, and good excuse, one is attending the Biblical Institute, Brother Hilton is doing us honor by his progress in study, one member was suspended from duty, five had charges preferred and will be tried. Three of them for refusing to marry women they lived with; three new members appointed. Two day schools and two Sunday-schools reported, Opelousas lot paid for, and Washington ready when the deed can be made, 144 Sunday scholars, 5 appointment, 3 being new, with 125 members, total members and probationers 397. 3 Conversions 35 Baptisms. 20 Marriages. 2 Deaths. 68 Meetings. 56 Sermons. Here again the mail failed to convey the notice of Conference which considerably affected their attendance.

On Sunday our services were held on the church lot; a lovely place; grass, trees, sky all beautiful, my stand under a great oak, around were arrayed the benches for our little scholars. At 11 o'clock preaching an, African preacher and some of our runaways were present, perhaps they learned something. At 3 P. M. the love feast was held, though fewer than usual were present, it was a happy time; four persons joined class. The day was full of interest to us, and spite of our enemies and our sadness because of the deceivers. The church was greatly revived and encouraged. We now have our appropriations from the Missionary Society, our work is begun and with God's blessing, we shall soon have a shelter.
